Three days ago, Thuy had told newsmen that North Vietnam demanded a simultaneous halt in the bombing of the North and attendance by the United States at regular weekly semipublic sessions of the peace talks. Then, Thuy said, there would be a possibility for new secret talks and Politburo member Le Duc Tho would return to Paris. Thuy also told reporters he wouldn't go to a new session if the bombing continued.

Thuy varied the scenario for fresh talks. He told reporters: "The United States must participate in the Paris conference April 27. If the bombing continues we will continue to protest."

Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. Edmund Muskie of Maine reads a resolution calling for an end of the Vietnam war during his appearance on ABC's "Issues and Answers" from Washington. Muskie will introduce the resolution to the Senate. (AP)

McGovern Seeks Industrial State Breakthrough

(AP) - Predicting victory next Tuesday in Massachusetts and a strong showing the same day in Pennsylvania, Sen. George McGovern says he'll seek an industrial state breakthrough for his presidential candidacy by making an all-out bid in the May 2 Ohio Democratic primary.

The South Dakota senator, seeking to demonstrate appeal to blue collar workers in the big industrial states, made his announcement Wednesday at a news conference in Columbus. He also said he thinks the Vietnam war has replaced the economy as the top campaign issue, at least temporarily.

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama said while campaigning in Fort Wayne, Ind., for that State's May 2 balloting that he'll back the Democratic nominee "unless they treat me bad at the convention." If they don't treat him right, he indicated he might sit out the campaign, rather than repeat his 1968 third party presidential candidacy.

Both McGovern, who spoke earlier Wednesday in Pittsburgh and Erie, Pa., and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, barnstorming central Pennsylvania, criticized Gov. Milton J. Shapp for his all-out fight in behalf of the presidential candidacy of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

In an airport interview in Erie, McGovern said Shapp's job is "to be governor of this state, not to pick the next President."

Muskie took a day off from his Pennsylvania efforts to shore up his campaign in Ohio and Massachusetts. He visited Cleveland, Youngstown and Toledo, then flew to Boston. He is in a head-to-head test with McGovern for the 102 Massachusetts delegates in that state's primary on Tuesday.

Speaking at a fund-raising dinner in Boston Wednesday night, Muskie said this was a "difficult period" in a campaign hit by a fourth-place showing in Wisconsin's primary, but he said he was in the fight to stay.

Parochial School Aid Urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — A presidential panel today urged that the government help rescue troubled parochial schools by granting tax credits to parents for tuition payments and straight tuition grants to welfare families using nonpublic schools.

In a 58-page report presented to President Nixon, the four-member group set forth these and other recommendations certain to stir controversy if only because of the longstanding church-state issue.

Nixon is on record as favoring aid to parochial and other nonpublic schools but has cautioned that programs must meet constitutional tests. The report is expected to form the basis for administration consideration of the question.

The group, the President's Panel on Nonpublic Education, told Nixon it had looked carefully into the constitutional issue and was convinced "that although direct aid to nonpublic schools is prohibited, aid to parents and to children will pass judicial muster."

Nixon received the report from panel chairman Clarence C. Walton, president of Catholic University.

In a letter to Nixon, Walton said nonpublic schools, particularly those operated by the Roman Catholic Church, face a crisis situation with enrollments falling and costs rising.

If nothing is done, he said, the system will fall apart "and public schools will have to absorb millions of American students" with the burden falling most heavily on debt-heavy states with large populations and major urban centers.

Enrollments in nonpublic schools currently exceed 5.2 million pupils.

Walton contended the social and economic costs to the nation--should the nonpublic school sytem fail--would be "too high to bear when compared to the lesser costs for effective public intervention."

V.C. Leader Expects Victory

(AP) - If the man behind North Vietnam's current offensive is following his own credo, it would indicate he is confident of victory.

"Strike to win, strike only when success is certain. If it is not, then don't strike."

Gen. Vo Nguyen Giap claimed that as the "fundamental principle" that brought him victory in the 1947-54 was against French colonial power. But he violated his dictum at times, just as from time to time he guessed wrong.

Giap long has been the little giant of Vietnamese communism. He has a reputation as a brilliant strategist. After three decades as the military brains of the late Ho Chi Minh's Communists, his fame is established. But while Ho was a charismatic leader, Giap is reported far from popular in his homeland.

In physical stature, Giap is hardly more than 5 feet. When Giap was young, Ho once called him "beautiful, like a girl." He's far from that now. In his early 60s, he is too stout for a soldier, probably because of good living.

What Giap lacks in stature he makes up in toughness. The hallmark of his career has been ruthlessness. An outstanding feature of his military philosophy has been "damn the cost."

Giap impresses outsiders as a hard-as-granite martinet who has become a sort of bourgeois Communist in love with glitter.

Jean Sainteny, a French diplomat who knew him, pictured Giap as the most bellicose of North Vietnamese leaders and always impatient with compromise. He appears to care little about the cost in blood of any given objective.

Three years ago a Western interviewer asked Giap to comment on a U.S. report that North Vietnam already had lost 500,000 dead in the war in the South. Giap didn't bat an eyelash. The figure, he snapped, was exact.

Giap's 1961 book, "People's War, People's Army," a collection of his articles and speeches, is a modern handbook for guerrilla war. Evidently Giap adapted Mao Tse-tung's theories of "protracted war" to Indochina.

Protracted war or not, Giap often shows his streak of impatience. As defense minister-he is also a vice premier and member of the all-powerful Communist Politburo-Giap has been responsible for committing regular troops to conventional and enormously costly offensives against superior power.

Break Fails In N. Ireland

ARMAGH, Northern Ireland (AP)-Nine armed prisoners held three men hostage in Armagh Jail on Thursday in a bid to bargain safe passage south to Ireland, but they were overpowered by British troops.

The soldiers quelled the four-hour revolt after lobbing nausea gas grenades into the jail's barricaded reception block. The hostages-a policeman and two guards-were released unharmed.

Twenty soldiers charged inside the jail after prison officials refused the inmate's demand for safe conduct to the Irish border, eight miles away, in exchange for the hostages.

The army threw a cordon of troops and armored cars around the jail in the ecclesiastical capital of all Ireland.

The prisoners overpowered their hostages in a truck that was returning them to prison from a nearby court where they had appeared on arms and explosives charges.

They wrested the policeman's pistol from his holster and hustled their captives into the reception block.

News of the revolt spread quickly through Armagh. Relatives of the prisoners, including women, gathered under the jail walls and chanted, "Come on out-we are waiting for you."

There was a report a guard was killed but prison officials insisted there were no casualties.

Elsewhere in the province, guerrilla snipers shot two British soldiers, seriously wounding one. Two Roman Catholic girls engaged to British soldiers were daubed with paint and feathered.

SWIP Conference Events

SWIP the Southwest Internal Planning Conference, represents a major effort by the Southwest Assembly and the Area Dean's staff to challenge the problems of that urban-like area.

Included in the conference will be workshops on racism, academic affairs, sexism, media and communications, counseling, human sexuality, first year students, the environment, services, governance, and student union.

SWIP will be more than a rap session, according to Larry St. president of the SW Assembly. St. Cyr, vice-president of the SW Assembly. St. Cyr said that the workshops are expected to produce concrete recommendations with timetables. The results will be compiled into a "Future of Southwest Report"--a document that will provide the guidelines and rationales for future change in what students often call "the concrete city".

Hospital Drive Monday

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A two-day fund raising drive for a children's hospital in Saigon will be started on Monday in the concourse level of the Campus Center.

Frank Kennedy, leading organizer of the drive, said the Center for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery in Saigon is dedicated to treating thousands of injured and maimed children, who have suffered directly or indirectly from the Vietnam war. He said that all patients in the center are children with an average age of eight.

The drive comes on the wake of the two-day strike since it will provide students with the necessary means of doing something constructive for the innocent victims of Vietnam, he added.

"While we are fighting a system that has caused an unjustifiable war, we should be prepared to aid the victims who have suffered directly from this war-crazed system," said Kennedy in an interview.

Asked what a contribution to the center will do, Kennedy replied:

- $5 will enable five children to be transported from a hamlet to the hospital and back again.
- $10 will pay for blood transfusions for five badly burned children.
- $100 will pay for surgery and physical therapy to enable a child to walk again.
- $500 will rebuild a child's face.
- $1000 will save the life of a critically burned child.

"We can at least repair some of the physical damage they have suffered, even though the mental scars, the horrors they have seen and lived through, will last a lifetime," he said.

Quoting Dr. Arthur J. Barsky and Thomas R. Miller, cofounders of the children's center, Kennedy said, "If the war ended today, ther would still be 30 years of surgery to correct the damage done."

Kennedy added that the center treats children regardless of which side caused the injury. "It is the system that we are involved in, and not the politics that make the system," stated Kennedy.

Position Paper Of Women's Caucus

The U.S. presence in Vietnam is a reflection of imperialistic expansion into underdeveloped areas in order to maintain profits for U.S. corporations. This system relys on pacifying U.S. citizens at home by controlling them through a capitalistic hierarchy. This ideology divides and subordinates women to men and minorities to whites.

We as women, to break the habitual acquiescance to this system, support oppressed peoples and their struggles.

The Indochinese peoples suffer attack and bombing and will bear scars from this war for generations. They suffer two oppressions: the brutality of the war and the racism that goes along with it.

However, we as women realize that the Indochinese women suffer a third oppression: that of their sex. Not only is their country being raped but their bodies, the bodies of their sisters and their daughters are being raped. Their children are deformed from the anti-personal bombs. Families are split, broken and uprooted constantly. What is left of these families are herded into concentration camps. There is only garbage left in the rubble to eat; there is no way to provide for their children and themselves except through prostitution.

We as women applaud the active participation of the Indochinese women in the liberation struggle of their home areas.

Thus, since the University of Massachusetts is a microcosm of the larger society that is structured and controlled and since ROTC is an established military training center on campus, the women's caucus found it appropriate to send a women's liberation force, in partnership with the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, to liberate the ROTC building and to begin a transformaton to a relevant action and educational center.

Thus, we seek support from the members of this community to support and defend what the Women's Caucus and V.V.A.W. have started. We peed all the support, unity and solidarity that people can give.

UMass Must Lead

In other strike news, a representative from Amherst College informed the Collegian yesterday that the students of Amherst had decided in a meeting yesterday on a few courses of action, all of which would be contingent on what UMass students decide.

"You people have the numbers (student population)" was the explanation given for why Amherst, as well as the rest of the Five College area, is waiting for a UMass decision.

Some courses of action decided on at Amherst include a demonstration at Westover Air Force Base Friday at 4 o'clock. The Amherst representative called for the participation of "as many groups as possible" in the demonstration. According to the source acts of civil disobedience will be used at the demonstration, and he called on all students to "lend their bodies" to the demonstration. He also added that there were some commitments from students at Amherst to commit acts of civil disobedience, and that there were also forty such commitments from Hampshire College.

Nobody Lies In Justice

WASHINGTON--A 10-year-old boy named Virgil has just written me a letter.

He says, "Dear Sir, I notice in the newspapers that several Justice Department attorneys have testified in the ITT case. Sometimes one Justice attorney says one thing and then another Justice attorney says another. Suppose they're lying? Who prosecutes the prosecutors?"

Dear Virgil,

Yours is a very impertinent question which really doesn't deserve an answer. To assume that someone in the Justice Department would tell an untruth makes you no better than a Berrigan brother.

A Justice Department attorney takes an oath that he will never tell a lie--on a Bible. This Bible belongs to the attorney general, who has taken an oath on a Bible that belongs to the chief justice of the Supreme Court, who has taken an oath on a Bible that belongs to the President of the United States. You can readily see the trouble a Justice Department attorney would be in if he perjured himself on that many Bibles.

What you are confusing is perjury and loss of memory. Several of the Justice Department attorneys have suffered from an inability to remember facts pertinent to the ITT investigation. This is understandable when you realize that most Justice Department attorneys are trained to ask questions, but are very rarely called upon to answer them.

If you spent all your life asking, "Where were you on the night of Feb. 12, 1961?" you would be in a heck of a jam if someone suddenly asked you that question.

It is for this reason that under our system Justice Department attorneys in congressional hearings are permitted to "correct" their testimony and "refresh" their memories.

The fact that a Justice Department attorney says one thing in the morning does not preclude him from saying the opposite in the afternoon. And just because one Justice Department attorney says one thing and another Justice Department attorney says another thing does not mean either one of them is lying. It just means they're getting at the truth from opposite directions.

Let me give you an example. Justice Department attorney Wishbone tells a Senate committee that he's never talked to anyone in the Zigzag Monopoly Company. He goes home that night and his wife reminds him that his brother-in-law is president of the Zigzag Monopoly Company. So he goes back to the committee and says he's just remembered that his brother-in-law is president of the company, but he hasn't seen him in 10 years.

Then he takes a recess break and his secretary tells him he's had 20 meetings with his brother-in-law in the past three months.

So he goes back to the committee and says he would like to correct the record; he did see his brother-in-law, but they never really talked business. That night his brother-in-law calls him and says he's in trouble with the IRS because he's put Wishbone down for 20 business lunches.

So Wishbone goes back to the committee the next day and says he talked business with his brother-in-law, but he did nothing to affect Zigzag Monopoly Company's case.

I can assure you that your question about who prosecutes the prosecutors has no validity in Washington. There is no reason to prosecute anyone in the ITT case because everyone is telling the truth; and if you keep writing troublemaking letters like this, I won't be surprised if, when you grow a little older, someone down here doesn't start tapping your phone.

"I Resign"

By BILL STATON

After a year and a half as an active member of the Student Senate, Student Union Governing Board, various Senate, SUG Board, and Ad-Hoc Committees, a counselor of different capacities, and, in general, an active member of the University Community, I've gained a disruptive and saddening awareness of this Campus, Student Government, representation and community are a mockery.

The average UMie reads this and blames all Senators and Student leaders of being non-representative and elitist.

Typically, the problem appears to be one of communications. The average Senator talks a lot on the Senate floor but becomes somewhat quieter in his/her dorm. It's a wonder they don't seem to find it difficult to represent people they've never met. But then, what do those people really care? I saw the returns of more than one election in which a Senator was elected by a vote of 30 in a dorm of 250 or more. But all those students bitch like hell that it's absurd to call the Senator representative. Funny, though, what's keeping all those people concerned with "true" representation from coming to a Senate meeting themselves.

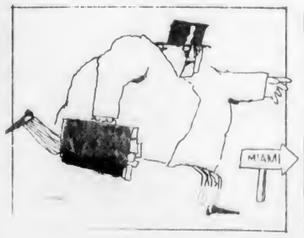
Where do we stop passing the buck?

I thought the place was the Senate so I did my best to represent and move others to do the same. Two problems became quickly evident. First, students do not find student representation viable: parents, teachers, & society have caused youth to feel rather inferior. I saw this to be a problem for each Senator to deal with individually. Here we run into the second obstacle: The older Senators have been saying "I; me; mine." for so long that it would be mind-boggling to try and introduce a vocabulary of "we; us; ours." I found that rather sad, but all too true. Because there is little active community concern for issues, Senators find themselves going to so many meetings that they don't have time to represent.

It's really too bad that the Senate can't dissolve about 2/3 of its committees, and maybe its egos, and start to interest the campus with the issues instead of just themselves.

I really can't understand it. The Senate gets involved in more and more things, but the community doesn't. It's spreading itself out to the point of becoming abstract. Maybe that's necessary to protect certain individuals, but I can't see that it's very helpful to the students it represents.

When I joined the Senate it was to work on resolving problems that students were having: not to work with problems that Senators thought students were having. As one of maybe a dozen representative Senators I've found this year of battling with parliamentary games and plastic egos to be more than frustrating. Would that it were only frustrating--that would at least be a challenge. Unfortunately, it's really futile. I found things to be so absurdly futile that I half expect to hear some Senator object to consideration right about now. The fact that he/she would not know what the objection was actually too would make little difference. Many seem to feel that there is no need to understand each other's point of view when representing only themselves.



It would be difficult to say what the necessary course of action is at this point to find a means of bringing this community together. The only thing that I've found is that in trying to represent an uncaring populace in a non-representative body, I think I'm becoming neurotic.

Therefore,

To those of you reading this today and those of you hearing it tonight, I resign from the Student Government Association.

Eric Comes Home!

BY FRANK BAGLIONE

Eric Walgren, known to many as Eric the "Rat," made a dramatic re-entry into the children's world of UMass politics Tuesday night at the first meeting of the Student Strike Committee. Carrying the yellow and white banner of the Universal Life Church and armed with the platform of Amherst's radical/yippie third party, the Tea Party, with only a five minute speech Eric did one of his famous routines, a performance that laced the faces of this assembly, burdoned with the hope of mankind, with brilliant smiles. Eric Walgren, articulate and selfpossessed, spoke on a number of subjects that concerned the wise, old radical heads in his company, but did so with such earnest joy and quiet humor that he mocked his more solemn and gloomily serious comrades.

It was not that some of the other speakers did not attempt to be as humorous as was Eric. A lady from the women's caucus tried in her best Nikita Khruschev style to pound home the demands of the striking students. Using her hand rather than a shoe she smashed the podium from time to time alerting the audience that she was most serious in her demand that the war, and racism, and sexism must be stopped, and stopped now! She was an enormous person, tall and solidly built, whose hoarse and harsh voice carried such determination that she frightened the crowd into a nervous and embarrassed silence. Less kind reporters might say she spoke hysterically, especially when she rose later in the meeting to rebut a motion for a particular action by saying, "you don't strike for something, you strike against something." Her wisdom, at least, is not in dispute.

The crowd was comprised of various mutual admiration societies, so it seemed unnecessary when a member of the Third World Caucus phrased her speech in a manner that suggested the Third Worldites would not support the strike unless they received support in their private war with the School of Education's Marathon Week. Recounting the sins of that "Neo-colonialist" Dean Allen, the Third Worldites cemented the notion (which we all suspected anyway) that the problems of racism and oppression could not be separated from the issue of the Vietnam War. There may have been some who thought it was strange indeed for that silly Dean of the Education School who has so often groveled before different interest groups, no matter how unreasonable their demands or how ludicrous their programs, to now be the subject of blistering attacks for "commercializing" the school's lofty attempt at "combatting institutional racism." But then, the humiliation of some is necessary for the uplifting of others, isn't it? And there are few besides Dean Allen, with his carnival-like concept of school Centers for Humanistic Studies, Innovation and so on, who have set themselves up for such intense ridicule and condemnation.

There was one man, Gary Tarr, who as a veteran of the 1970 Student Strike must have touched despair several times as he tried, in the role of moderator, to give some order to the anti-war assembly. Vacillating between incendiary and fireman as he tried to let everyone have their say and yet stifle raging anarchists (by having their microphones turned off much in the same way Mayor Daley controls hostile speakers at City Council meetings) Gary succeeded only in having his efforts characterized as "steamrolling." Yet he had simply wanted the group to address themselves to the subject of approving the three strike demands: (1) end the bombing, (2) stop the war, (3) amensty for war resisters and deserters. As at all radical meetings, someone had a better idea.

It was, of course, the Women's Caucus that first saw through the inequities of these demands. Demand number three, supposedly invested with the traditional virtues of being non-negotiable and morally correct, was, to the ladies, tinged a bit with sexism and (dare we say it) racism. After all, turn over almost any resister or deserter and what do you find?--A white male, usually middle class; a highly suspect breed indeed. "No," said the ladies, the demand for amnesty must be amended to read, "Free All Political Prisoners!" (We should have guessed it.) Chairman Tarr, no, "chairperson" Tarr agreed and pronounced the vote unanimous without counting dissenting votes.

In order to make the demands just sparkle with goodness the ladies further demanded the placing of an additional non-negotiable demand, (4) that racism, sexism and oppression be attacked right here at ole UMass and that all university policies (e.g. admissions) be carried out without favoring certain sexual groups. This demand was also surprisingly approved "unanimously" by the assembly of seven hundred. We are now struck with the image of a militant male minority "demanding" 48% of the admissions here at UMass. But that is in the future.

For the present the radicals were once again displaying their ability to engage in petty squabbles and inane processes of thought. A member of the Workers' League (probably made up of students) rose to introduce another very important demand. The Workers' League is a break-away faction of our own powerful Young Socialists Alliance (YSA) that is so enamoured of Trotskyite droppings. After a long speech, interrupted several times by "chairperson" Tarr's wizardry with the microphone, a representative from WL asked that demand number five be "a denunciation of Stalinism." Unfortunately, this worthwhile demand was not accepted.

Then, into the chaos strode Eric Walgren. Members of other radical organizations who knew Eric and his type of "song-and-dance" tried to shout our hero away. Mercifully, Eric persisted and with his charming delivery soon had the crowd laughing joyously and applauding wildly. During his speech the crowd was more spirited than at any other time in the long, dreary proceedings. Eric wanted the committee to accept as demands two of his Tea Party's planks: (1) the dimantling of the (American) empire; and (2) register 18-year olds to vote so as to take control of the system and their lives. It was at this second point that our husky women's liberationist voiced her frantic plea to strike against, not for, something. Her logic prevailed, and the demand that 18-year-olds register, along with dismantling the empire, went down to inglorious, "unanimous" defeat.

Still more egos were to be heard from. Gil Salk, our friendly draft counselor and "Culturnatives" advocate waltzed in the aisles with the microphone and solemnly alerted the students to the fact that the best action was a non-violent one. He suggested blocking access roads to Westover Air Force Base, or even lying on the base's airfield. This, however, he cautioned the audience, was not a "light" action. Then there was proposed a new demand--that the members of the administration, (Chancellor Bromery and President Wood) issue a written public statement condemning the bombing and the war, and that they use the occasion of any public meeting or address to state their anti-war feelings. This demand, too, was defeated.

It was unfortunate, you will agree, that so many fine demands were so crudely thrust aside by the assembly. For it would have been stirring, indeed, to have heard Ralph Bromery address the Trustees, or the Governor, or the Chamber of Commerce on some subject like the medical school, and then close his remarks with the "non-negotiable" demands that the University and the United States "denounce Stalinism, dismantle the empire, and register 18-year-olds to vote." He might even include the demand made by the Women's Caucus some weeks ago that the 26 story, 6 million dollar library designed by the "dean of American architects" be named the "Mother Jones Library" in commemoration of a woman communist agitator who walked around West Virginia

Saga Of Quickbucks

Theda viewed their tryst as little more than a business transaction. He would glare at Louella, sizing up the merchandise, then would strike a pose as to strengthen his bartering position. Their eyes would meet and a small smile would pass Theda's lips. He knew exactly that when he smiled, his priced peaked, but was willing to utilize his prize strategy to secure Louella's attentions. His judgement may have seemed a bit vain, but Louella didn't think him too far from the truth. She paused, amazed at her luck as in the dark a shoft, silent sign came across the room. Burnsie bellowed as Millie, telling her what a slut she thought she was, and this small sermon flavored Louella's triumph. She slowly and with relish, turned a slight little smile and waited. It was like a movie, not some crummie Fifties B-Picture or some silly Annette Funicello flick, but an incredibly small personal indulgence.

A moment passed, the capped lad sighed as a bosomy young lady wearing an armband and an April 22nd pin squeezed by him enroute to the cullinary delights of the "Bucks" almost hidden from sight. She smiled not out of kinship but rather out of her human concern for the plight of oppressed people which now manifest itself in a common bond called a Student Strike. The big university down the road was in chaos, the only prima direction was towards some moral culmination. The capped lad sensed this Apocalypse, but sighed remorsefully. He knew it would never come from such mundane beginnings as the actions of his peers, no matter how loudly amplified by bullhorns and advocated in the local press. The days were not singed with tumultuous events, but rather with the hollow rhetoric of the chosen and the capped lad slunk back, complacent in the second even first world.

Our heroine, Louella Devine

The events of the past two days had little effect on either Theda or Louella. Theda rather liked the high drama, the crowds, the numbers which had a definite cause on the increase of tired souls in the bar that evening. Louella didn't even allow herself this much of a selfish conceit; rather she was annoyed by the loud, somewhat drunk, obviously flighty, strikers sitting in the adjacent booth singing a parody of an old labor union song between swills of their beer.

"Give us our liberty and give us our mirth
Nixon and piggies hear our alert
Your doom will come this very spring
With marches and boycotts and other neat things
We'll sit on the runways and sing in the streets
Picking our noses and picking our feet
Till all of you racists have been done away
And all of you sexists can't find a lay."

They laughed in obvious self-amusement. Louella only smirked and pushed her flat beer away. The unbridled freedom inherent in such exercises of self-determination repelled her more aesthetic virtuous nature. She had visions of the Revolution as seen in one of her favorite films Potemkin. One of real oppression, real emotion, real commitment, real tragedy. She thought of the silliness of the Strike, of Millie's wanton ways, of Quickbucks itself and wanted to ask Burnsie to leave; but she saw Theda's little grin, more enticing than ever, and had to stay.

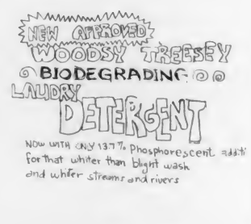
To Strike Or Not



Want a reason to strike? This week in the centerfold, Tom Moriarty takes an earnest and in depth look at the Southeast Asian situation. He expounds on the vile political hoaxes and excuses that Nixon and his aimless cohorts have continually attempted to pawn off on the American public in the form of innocent gestures of protective foreign policy. From here he moves to an analysis of the past anti-war demonstrations, and the established reasons for their effectivenss and purpose. The article is rounded out with an honest attempt to call all people to action this weekend in protest of this atrocious continuation of American aggression in Southeast Asia.

Winston's Taste Good?

When ecology became a major issue in the latter part of the 1960s, many people became concerned with whether the products which they were buying might be having a detrimental effect on the environment. Now American companies are capitalizing on this concern for their own economic benefit by claiming, through mass advertising, that their products are environmentally sound and that by purchasing them, one will support the cause of ecology. Unfortunately, most of these claims are either untrue or highly misleading. For a critique of these deceptive ads and a look at what the individual can do to aid the environment, turn to page 15.

Albums Strike Two!

As for the albums page, in addition to the usual reviews, you may now try your luck at a new weekly contest. If perchance you can correctly name our five pictured musicians, the brand new Stephen Stills album, Manassas, will be coming your way. The records reviewed this week offer a wide range of musical information, for example, the latest Canned Heat production receives a completely unbiased account by Mike Kostek; Steve Feld has taken a new look at an old recording by Cream; and lastly, the Mother's are delved into a bit more deeply due to the rash criticism it underwent last time around, the review by Jeff Clayton. All this may be found on the album pages, 18 and 19.

Lost To The Times

Profoundly moved by the sacrifice and concern of the striking students, Carlson Schwaller cruised through Poor Richard's with disgust and disdain. After all, who is this Frank Baglione and why is he saying such things about the Strike? She was soothed a bit by some Turning Points on page twelve, humoured by a review of Woody Allen's new book on thirteen, a bit perplexed by an interpretation of Southwest as a human zoo on page fourteen. Then after being enlightened by Tom Moriarty and the centertold on why she should strike, she dived straight through the reviews. She knew what albums to buy, and read all about the two major concerts in the area this past week. Then read a review of X, Y, and Zee, the latest Elizabeth Taylor film. Then she learned some Audio talk from Frank Johnson and finished off learning what to do on the Weekend. About now she felt relief, until she read the latest adventure on his left and was angered, angered, angered.

We can, if we like, have a student strike this year. It cannot hope to rival that of 1970, but if classes were cancelled by the administration, we would still feel that warm surge of love that every professor can remember from the last time he announced he would not be making one of his lectures. Although Tuesday night's meeting was poor in attendance and spirit, the small momentum built by Wednesday's meetings might carry us into an early, grade-safe vacation. Yet for many students there is a feeling that they do not want "in" on this type of strike. First there is the question of what purpose it will serve. Some feel none.

More important, there are some serious reservations about following this year's leaders and zealots in the ranks. Howard Gadlin, the psychology professor who galvanized and lent sanity to Strike '70, was noticeably absent from both Tuesday's and Wednesday's meetings. None of the present leaders can reach his stature. We are left with a committee (religiously balanced with the correct number of women, blacks, etc. and representing a dozen different ideologies) that is unexperienced, inarticulate and absolutely unable or unwilling to attempt to assume leadership roles. What is more, the mood of these people is ugly. When Larry Ladd, newly elected student senate president and "co-chairperson" of Wendesday's meeting, made an "unverified" announcement that North Vietnamese planes and ships had attacked a number of American naval vessels, nearly half of the audience went wild with joy, cheering madly. The half that didn't cheer were later heard from when they applauded a Vietnam veteran's words of outrage that an assembly obstensibly concerned with bringing American troops home from war, were equally favorable to their being killed in that war at the enemy's hands.

Yet others did not cheer the veteran's words. Members of some of the groups mentioned in this article sat glumly while a spark of decency flamed momentarily. For them the enemy was not "war", it was their own country, which in the malignancy of their hatred they can see only as some kind of "Capitalist-Imperialist Conspiracy." They do not care how many Americans or Vietnamese are killed and by whom. They only care that America, shaped into grotesque images resembling their fathers, is beaten and humbled and made to plea to them for forgiveness. It is these people who cannot hope to mobilize the mass of students who want an end to war and hatred, not an intensification of that spirit which causes them.

Gary Tarr: "vacillating between incendiary and fireman as he tried to let everyone have their say..."

Correspondences To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

Many others seem discouraged at the failure of their efforts to end the war. Perhaps they do not appreciate the immense significance of their achievement in imposing at least some constraints on the violence of the state. We can be quite sure that as the dilemma of the U.S. government assumes new forms in the coming phase of the war, the domestic response will remain a factor of critical importance in determining the fate of the people of Indochina.

Noam Chomsky
RAMPARTS magazine
May, 1972

With the escalation of American bombing and naval attacks on S.E. Asia, along with the reintroduction of U.S. ground forces, there is an urgent demand for massive public opposition to the widened Indochina War.

The U.S. government is in a tight spot; Nixon's "Vietnamization" plan was to remove U.S. ground forces and placate the American public's antiwar sentiment while increasing the level of bombing and air assaults to prop up the army of South Vietnam. But the recent drive of the North Vietnamese has routed the South Vietnamese army, showing full well that Thieu's government has no real support besides the American air forces. As Thieu's army is set back on each battlefront, the American military has no choice but to bring down the heaviest bombing assaults in history.

It is imperative that the American people reject wholeheartedly this massive devastation in Indochina. We must take to the streets again and protest our government's callous disregard for the lives of the Southeast Asians.

In 1965 the puppet government of South Vietnam was nearly toppled by the resistance forces. The American military brought in 50,000 troops to prevent its fall. Now the South Vietnamese government is threatened again and the American military response is the same. Destroy the land and people before accepting the defeat of Thieu's army.

We, the American people, must demand an end to the slaughter. We demand the immediate, total, and unconditional withdrawal of all U.S. bombers, destroyers, and troops from Southeast Asia. Join us in New York on April 22.

To the Editor:

I would just like to note a few corrections to your poorly researched and unsigned article entitled "Lanky Lee v. the Athletic Council (April 20th Poor Richard's). As one involved I am deeply distressed by some of your reporting.

1. Controversy did not begin with anyone's decision to raise the athletic fee as stated in your opening paragraph. The fee has remained constant for a number of years.

2. Paragraph three ends with an entirely false statement. "At this point summer intervened and Bussell was unable to get in touch with Sandwen. The matter was laid to rest until school recommenced." I must insist that Bussell bears the full responsibility of this inaction. Not only did I work in Dean Field's office 9-5 all summer, but I met Dr. Bussell on campus and wrote to him asking what was to happen with our proposals. During the summer I also sat on the search committee for an Athletic Director, with many of the other participants in the story. If he had wanted to "get in touch", it would have required next to no effort on his part.

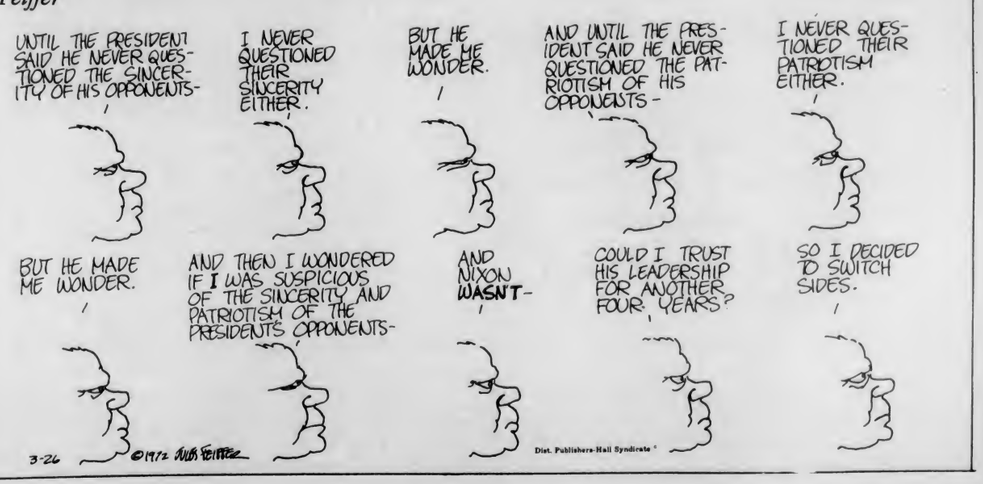
3. George Richason's conduct, as Chairman of the Athletic Council, before the Faculty Senate can hardly be termed "neutral". He attempted to emasculate the "student compromise" by urging the Council not be forced by the document to have open meetings, not be forced to open its financial records, and not be forced to report to the Student Senate. It was at least a good attempt at roadblocking.

4. Mr. Bussell makes the comment that under his compromise the Council's student members "would be elected in the same manner as alumni." The recent "selection" of alumnus Jim Mulcahy to the Council has been termed by many a "rump election"--an unacceptable procudure as far as I can see.

5. Mr. Bussell also asserts that "student leaders never really got in touch with the student body over the issue," resulting in misunderstandings. This is also blatantly false. I personally spoke to six of the seven area governments (sorry commuters), most twice, wrote in the Collegian, spoke to the Senate frequently, and went on WMUA. Mr. Bussell refused to join me on the radio as I recall.

6. You ignorantly state "Both groups have hidden issues from their constituents." Name one that the students attempted to hide?

7. You end by calling for an end to "political machinations". We (students) ended long ago. We argued our case before our peers, the administration, and the Faculty Senate. It is the "jock sniffers" among the Faculty who hold up resolution of this issue.



8. Finally in a brief account of my first Council meeting you quote me as saying, "it made me want to blow lunch". "Blow Lunch" should be capitalized.

Turning Points

Sweet Cent Dept. Melanie's new album, Garden in the City, is reportedly awful, but the record cover is something else. Picture, if you will, a lovely garden set agaifist the Manhattan skyline. If you look really close, you won't see anything more, but you'll actually smell the fragrance of flowers. Far out, huh?

Real Good Times: On their upcoming tour, the Faces will bring along a veritable circus: trapeze acts, clowns, motorcyclists and jugglars. Oh yes, they'll also bring along (none other than) Fleetwood Mac.

One of our perceptive reporters discovered that you can now buy repackaged old 45's at record stores. They sell for the same price as recent ones (sneaky), and only selective ones are making it. Now's the time to get "The Inner Light", "I'm Down", and all the others that got away.

John Lennon and Mick Jagger are among the composers of songs in an upcoming off-Broadway play based on the courtroom trials of "Oz", the notorious underground newspaper published in England. Also Peter Yarrow and Charlie Mingus are involved.

This week's winner of the John Lennon Cop-Out Award goes to Andy Warhol. Warhol, it seems, has agreed to be a judge in this years Miss Universe Contest. Ultra-Violet and Viva are not in the running.

The two creator's of last fall's First Annual New York Erotic Film Festival were busted for "promoting obscenity". Or so says the Law. "The only harm done", rationalizes one of them, "is the people who came to jerk off, couldn't". You'll have no trouble recognizing them--they're the ones with hairy palms.

The Rolling Stones are coming back strong. A new single called "Tumbling Dice" should be out by the time you are reading this. Their double record set, Exile On Main Street is due out on May 7th. Included are 18 new songs. Mick Jagger is already comparing it to Electric Ladyland. Their tour, meanwhile, starts in Seattle, on June third. Yes, they are coming to Boston; no, they are not playing Altamont.

It looks like a tour deforce --Reprise artists Jethro Tull and Captain Beefheart will be touring together in April, May and June.

The Firesign Theatre have been busy lads over the past few months. After the release of Dear Friends, which is the best of fifteen hour-long radio shows, they immediately started another syndicated series, this time called Let's Eat. Now there is talk of a possible TV show on CBS and a couple live TV specials. Last, though hardly least, will be the publication of The Firesign Theatre Big Book of Plays. It will contain, among other things, scripts of each album. Eat it up.

Crawdaddy on Radio: Crawdaddy Magazine, a well-edited rock publication, has originated a bi-weekly "magazine of the air." In early April, over 200 college radio stations (including WMUA, naturally) received the first in the series which includes a John Lennon interview, unreleased live Beatles tapes and aural record reviews. Promised in the upcoming editions are a Ray Davies interview and more never-before-broadcast tapes.

Melody Maker, the top music trade paper in England for several years, is now being published simultaneously in America. It costs thirty cents and might be worth your while to look into.

In England, Decca is releasing more old Rolling Stones' hits. This time around (at least the fourth), the package is being called Milestones. The songs are (yawn), "Satisfaction", "She's a Rainbow", "Under My Thumb", "I Just Want to Make Love to You", "Yesterday's Papers", "I Wanna Be Your Man", "Time is On My Side", "Get Off Of My Cloud", "Not Fade Away", "Out of Time", "She Said Yeah", "Stray Cat Blues".

Bootlegs Dept: We here at PR still are keeping tabs on the bootleg record scene. Latest news comes from London where a new Led Zeppelin Live album was spotted. Also hot off the pressers are Elton John -- Live at the London Festival Hall and two different assorted samplers.

The Kinks' performance at Carnegie Hall last March 2 and 3 was recorded for an upcoming live album on RCA.

And finally, John Lennon has announced a new single to be released any day now. "The Luck of the Irish", recorded at the Record Plant in New York. Lennon previewed the song, along with "Attica State", and "Ten for Two" on a talk show some time ago, and "The Luck of the Irish" was clearly the best of the set. He's expecting the same fate for his single as Paul McCartney--namely an official BBC ban. The song is pro- IRA.

Getting Even With Woody Allen

by BARRY STAVRO

If you like Woody Allen in the movies, in his plays, on television, or in nightclubs, then you'll like his book Getting Even. If you don't like Woody Allen's humor--well, you can always use this paper to wrap fish with.

Getting Even is a collection of seventeen humorous pieces, combining the wit, perception, social satire, and innate weirdness that resides inside Woody's head. His subjects range from Nazis to philosophy, the Mafia, literature, the coming of death, the world's fattest man, and he ends the volume with a spoof of Kaiser Lupowitz--super sleuth.

An analysis of humor may be superfluous, since the only prerequisite is that it be funny. Nevertheless, Woody Allen seems to succeed with high frequency due to several inborn characteristics. The first is his knack of humble understatement: "I am a frequent contributor to Sight and Stream, a cerebral quarterly dedicated to advanced concepts in cinema and fresh-water fishing. If these credentials are not enough to tag me Joe Sensitive, then, brother, I give up. And yet, with this much perception dripping from me, like maple syrup off waffles, I was reminded recently that I possess an Achilles' heel culture wise that runs up my leg to the back of my neck."

The second Allen peccadillo that helps convey his humor is the ability to develop absolutely bizarre images. For example, the unfortunate plight of a traveling rabbi: "Three days out of Zans, he was set upon by wild nomads. When they learned he was a Jew, they forced him to alter all their sports jackets and take in their trousers. As if this were not humiliation enough, they put sour cream in his ears and sealed them with wax. Finally, the Rabbi escaped and headed for the nearest town, winding up in the Urals instead, because he was ashamed to ask directions."

And third, droll Woody is able to move through all the peripheral fat and get down to the real heart of the matter, which should cause envy in editorial offices throughout the country: "Dr. Helmoltz...is perhaps best known for his experiments in behavior, in which he proved that death is an acquired trait." And the same Dr. Helmholtz (alias W. H.) on religion: "I don't believe in an afterlife, although I am bringing a change of underwear."

One of the funniest pieces in the book is "The Schmeed Memoirs." This is a take-off on the Albert Speer memoirs of the Third Reich, except here the memoirs came from Hitler's barber. Early in the piece the reader senses Herr Schmeed was not terribly up on the political situation in Germany during the thirties: "As I told the tribunal at Nuremberg, I did not know that Hitler was a Nazi. The truth was for years I thought he worked for the phone company. When I finally found out what a monster he was, it was too late to do anything, as I had made a down payment on some furniture."

Woody also gives us some insights into some of the leading players on the Axis team during the world War Two competition. "Himmler was not accustomed to being invited to Berchtesgaden, because his eyesight was poor and Hitler could not bear to watch him bring the fork to his face and then stick the food somewhere on his cheek." And Rudolf Hess: "One day, Hess took the Fuhrer's bottle of Vitalis and set out in a plane for England. (Hess later explained at Nuremberg that his plan was to give Churchill a scalp treatment in an effort to end the war. He had got as far as bending Churchill over a basin when he was apprehended)."

Schmeed also tells us of a plot to take over The Nazi command. "Then, in January, 1945, a plot by several generals to shave Hitler's mustache in his sleep and proclaim Doenitz the new leader failed when von Stauffenberg, in the darkness of Hitler's bedroom, shaved off one of the Fuhrer's eyebrows instead. A state of emergency was proclaimed, and suddenly Goebbels appeared at my shop. "An attempt was just made on the Fuhrer's mustache, but it was unsuccessful," he said, trembling. Goebbels arranged for me to go on radio and address the German people, which I did, with a minimum of notes. "The Fuhrer is all right," I assured them." He still has his mustache. Repeat. The Fuhrer still has his mustache. A plot to shave it has failed."

Another funny piece in the book is a one act play called, "Death Knocks." The curtain opens on the apartment of a fifty-seven year old dressmaker--Nat Ackerman. He is reading the local scandal sheet when death arrives through the window in an attempt at a stylistic entrance--unfortunately, "he trips over the windowsill and falls into the room."

"Death (for it is no one else): Death: I knew I shouldn't have thrown that nine. Damn it.....

Death: Look--I'll be back tomorrow, and you'll give me a chance to win that money back. Otherwise I'm in definite trouble.

Nat: Anything you want. Double or nothing we'll play. I'm liable to win an extra week or a month. The way you play, maybe years.

The comic bard also concocts his own college catalogues.

Philosophy XXIX-B: Introduction to God. Confrontation with the Creator of the universe through informal lectures and field trips.

"Fundamental Astronomy: A detailed study of the universe and its care and cleaning. The sun, which is made of gas can explode at any moment, sending our entire planetary system hurtling to destruction; students are advised what the average citizen can do in such a case.

"Modern Biology: How the body functions, and where it can usually be found. Blood is analyzed, and it is learned why it is the best possible thing to have coursing through one's veins. A frog is dissected by students and its digestive tract is compared with man's, the frog giving a good account of itself except on curries."

After reading Woody Allen's enticing course descriptions I wonder--can we get him into the Academic Affairs Office?

Mr. Allen also gets around to discussing such other related subjects such as girls, the Mafia, artists, and revolutionaries.

"...the dames, which are a minor preoccupation of mine that I rank just ahead of breathing. That's why, when the door swung open and a long-haired blonde named Heather Butkiss came striding in and told me she needed my help, my salivary glands shifted into third. She wore a skirt and tight sweater and her figure described a set of parabolas that could cause cardiac arrest in a yak."

"It is no secret that organized crime in America takes in over forty billion dollars a year. This is quite a profitable sum, especially when one considers that the Mafia spends very little for office supplies. ...(Death, incidentally, is one of the worst things that can happen to a Cosa Nostra member, and many simply prefer to pay a fine)"

"Juan Gris, the Spanish cubist, had convinced Alice Toklas to pose for a still life and, with his typical abstract conception of objects, began to break her face and body down to its basic geometrical forms until the police came and pulled him off."

On a captured revolutionary: "The dictator took into consideration the mitigating fact that we had given up voluntarily, and while he still planned to disembowel Vargas, the rest of us were going to get off with being skinned alive."

In short, Getting Even is full of funny baubles, all conceived from a mind that was twice considered unfit for duty and consequently expelled from college. I think with a shudder what four years of stoic academia could have done to him--why it could have warped his mind and given him a perverted sense of humor.

Dave Bromberg's reputation as a hot guitar picker has been gobbled up by his career as David Bromberg.

David Bromberg's guitar picking is practically legendary. As a studio and stage sideman his playing has embellished the music of Bob Dylan, Paul Siebel, Jerry Jeff Walker and other top artists.

But David has also had his own thing going. For eight years he's been playing clubs and cafes, radio shows, the Philadelphia Folk Festival and he captured the spirit of the Isle of Wight Festival as David Bromberg: singer, songwriter and total performer.

David's first album is a balance of his two worlds. Some live recordings to capture his performing magic. And studio tracks he produced himself with Bromberg-stamp-of-approval sidemen.

The music is easy low-down blues, shit-kickin' bluegrass and off-the-wall jobbers like "The Holdup" and "Suffer to Sing the Blues."

Living

Southwest: Anatomy Of A Sanctuary

BY DON ROBADUE, JR.

Dormitories are ratholes or sanctuaries, depending on one's point of view and taste in living accomodations. Southwest Residential "College" is a blend of both tendencies that doesn't make any sense to the naive observer, and which may resemble the real world more than any other dormitory area on campus. The analogy is still largely an illusion, so don't put any bets on a microcosmic justification for any perversions or insanities you might be indulging in.

The variety of architecture featuring the low rise and the towers, three nearby dining commons, close proximity to Amherst center and the playing fields—all combine to form Southwest's tremendous potential as a rewarding living experience that permits individual growth to staggering heights, freedom to eat anywhere one wants, and the chance to meet the nicest and rottenest people in the whole state.

A lot of people will tell you they wouldn't be caught with their pants down living in Southwest. People have jumped off the towers, stereos blast twenty-four hours a day, and it is too far away from classes, too big, too cementish, too estreme. These are the people who enjoy, or at least can cope with the decadence of Central and the isolated comfort of Orchard Hill. To them, Southwest represents "The Big City", traditionally, a hellhole of sin, depravity, drugs, and sundry zoo-like qualities.

Southwest is indeed a place of contrasts and extremes, but it is not without life. It has within it a genuine organic community spirit that creeps out of the walls onto the sidewalks around 11 pm every night. It celebrates its presence with a barrage of firecrackers and other explosives combined with howling, shouting, laughing, and shrill screaming. The trade mark of Southwest is the loud music followed by obscenities that are shouted at passersby, at people in the various dorms, and the Hare Krisna's who slither about the area. Guys in the towers shout obscenities at the girls' dorms, girls provoke the guys into shouting matches and taunt them into exposing themselves, guys expose themselves without provocation, drunken idiots urinate in elevators and Beer bottles are carelessly dropped from the towers. Whereas in other areas stereos warm up at 7 pm and shut down at 1 or 2 am, in Southwest they are going all day, shut down at dinner and resume full power from 10 pm until 3 am. This orgiastic creature dies before the sun comes up, to be reborn again in the evening.

Southwest is 'almost' a city. It is nearly covered with concrete, fashioned in a manner that the architect should look upon with regret and prefer to forget. If one is alone in life, or has friends only in other parts of the campus, it is a very empty place that is even worse on rainy days when one has to stay inside and look at how ugly concrete becomes when wet. It has its ample share of violence, destruction, and people turned maniacs by too much alcohol, or people turned blurry eyed vegetables by the large daily consumption of marijuana and who knows what else.

However, if one hates to be isolated from people or prefers the comfort of larger L-shaped rooms, easily accessable lounges, carpeted floors, quasi-defunct elevators, and bathrooms that are in decent condition, Southwest has a strong appeal. Like a city, each dorm, and separate floors have a certain style. They range from the quiet anti-zoo upperclass orientation of MacKimmie, to Kennedy tower, notorious for damage and dirt. Pierpont otherwise known as Project 10, is on the border of the campus and offers the peripheral student and the 'lunatic fringe' a place that is physically borderline to the campus.

Southwest, night in the city looks pretty to me.

It is not unusual, in the case of the Project, for a student to stay in Southwest for months if all his classes are held in his dorm, and for other residents to stay in the same building all weekend without even caring to venture out. For many students classes are an unavoidable nuisance. Their life's essence is in the organism of Southwest and the communal spirit of their floor, the drinking and television viewing, the endless conversations, and the general preoccupation of amusement and diversion.

Time often passes in Southwest the way a cigarette burns in an ashtray—the smoke rising lazily in calming soft whirls and spins, rippling when caught by a breeze and filling the room with a stench that clings to the walls and the air long after the cigarette has burnt itself out. The sunrise is always beautiful, because the evening smokiness has been swept away, all is finally quiet and the sun strikes bolding and silently across the dormitories, creating contrasts of bright sunlit patches and the long shadows. In the evening the place is lit as bright as a city and the smoke pours into the rooms. When the fog is thick, the lights from the thousands of windows become diffused, giving the whole area the bizarre appearance of an inferno.

To add to its external blazing, the guys on the floor below will be laughing a little too loud for it to be a happy laughter, and their stereos will be up too loud for pleasurable listening, but at the proper volume for them to be enveloped and protected by the pounding sound. Drinking parties run rampant Friday nights, and the dope smoking becomes twice as hard. On Saturday morning there is vomit in the sink and broken lights in the stairway. From the night before you remember hearing yelling, a girl crying, and doors slamming, a guy laughing, and a girl violently screaming on the floor below, perhaps the same girl that was there last weekend. Parties generate lots of noise, people trying hard to have a good time, energetic people planted last fall get trampled on and destroyed by slobs, who know they are there, but insist on going out of their way to destroy them. People throw garbage all over with the assumption that somebody else will pick it up, or that it doesn't matter at all.

It is the unpleasant aspects of Southwest that seem to say the most profound things about the kind of people and the quality of life there. You watch the hundreds of flower bulbs that some

While Southwest has the same nuts and cretins that thrive in any city, the main portion of the populace finds itself there for another set of reasons.

It, like other dorm areas, offers a great deal of separation from the real world of studying and responsibility, while retaining a very urban flavor. It is quite possible to go about one's own business without ever having to get involved with the people on one's floor. It is a last refuge for students who want to live off campus but must make do with the privacy available in the impersonal city.

For a while it is a taste of independence---one can drink heavily with legal immunity, and dope is within easy access. One can come in at 3 am and sleep until 2 pm without being bothered by anyone, or even being noticed, since it is a common practice. The ethic of Southwest is to leave the other person alone to his own business, and yet to join in the community if one doesn't wish to make waves. Just like in the big city, just like in the real world where there aren't mommas and daddies to make their children come in early, stop them from sleeping with their friends, make them behave, or to ignore them and call their money-gifts "love."

Southwest was the creature of a single architect and his associates in an attempt to form a somewhat interesting, if not aesthetically pleasing, housing development with enough structural variation to make it bearable to look at and live in day after day after day. The fact that it is impossible for the windows on the towers to be washed, that many of the walls between rooms have cracks, and that large cracks exist beneath the window frames where cold air gets in, doesn't dismay the inhabitants of the area. Garbage is picked up regularly, the floors and bathrooms cleaned well, with meals, just a short distance away.

A city was never before so well managed.

Cities are in the 'real world.' Is Southwest part of the 'real world' too? Perhaps not, for it is a sanctuary, not a hellhole. It is transitory, while the people in New York City live there all the time. Southwest is a plan somebody, perhaps a good Public Relations man can find words to justify and explain. There is no good excuse for Boston, and that's what might make it real. Some parents would say the same about Southwest, but fear not, the good PR man will mumble something about 'educational, residential College' and everything will be alright. It hardly matters anyway, since Southwest is a bastion against such idiotic questions.

The Unnatural Acts Of Businessmen

BY JOHN KIRKPATRICK AND JOSH GORDON

Intro and Background

Corporate America is currently winning the environmental war for survival and the American masses are losing. Its single most effective weapon is the mass media in the form of what environmentalists refer to as eco-pornography. Loosely translated, eco-pornography is environmental B. S. in advertising. It was the media which brought out a brief flash of environmental awareness two Earth Days ago, and it is the media which now is destroying that same awareness.

Looking at the origins of eco-pornography takes us back to the end of World War Two. The war had just ended and the manufacturers were getting back to making consumer goods. Due to the war the country was highly industrialized and production was soaring. Post war technology made mass production no problem at all. The problem now was to find enough consumers. During this time, television arrived on the scene and began to replace newspapers as the dominant media. Commercialized T.V. had the power to increase per capita consumption levels and was the savior of the economic system.

To boost the consumption levels of Americans a highly competitive and sophisticated industry known as modern day advertising was born. There remains today some of the old-fashioned straight forward informative advertising, but an increasing number of ad men are aiming at the subconscious minds of people. This is called "depth advertising."

All people have certain subconscious personal needs and among the most common of these needs are those for self respect, security, and a sense of roots. These needs can be repressed by the conscious mind due to socio/economic pressures, but they will nonetheless manifest themselves in the subconscious mind. Ads appear showing ego related needs linked to a product and if the ad is effective, purchase of the product will appear to satisfy this need. Thus, the aging housewife can regain part of her youth by drinking the zestful, bubbly drinks of the Pepsi Generation; an insecure male can regain his masculinity by devouring one of Campbell's Manhandlers; and the disoriented college student searching for a sense of roots can find reassurance in Winston's Down Home taste.

Often products can be sold on the bonus psychological features alone; needs can be exploited by the media. Commercialized T. B.'s main impact is that it sells the generalized concept of consumption, which says that consumption is basically a good thing and that it will satisfy many of one's subconscious needs and desires.

Now we come to the age of ecology. People are becoming aware that the environment is falling apart and that high level consumption is ecologically unsound. High level consumption is the driving force between resource depletion and refuse production. Americans, who represent about 6% of the world's population, consume over 40% of the world's resources annually. Now the American people are becoming environmentally conscious and if their actions were to follow their convictions they would consume less in general. To counter this, advertisers have come up with eco-pornography, the science of linking the consumption of a product with the ego-related desire to be doing one's part for ecology.

This sort of advertising is extremely important to industries which have a detrimental effect on the environment. Encouraging consumption now involves relieving the consumer of any guilt feelings. Knowledge of the ecological consequences of the use of some products would cut down on their use. Thus the electric, oil, paper, and soap companies must assure you that their products are ecologically sound through the use of half truths, slanting, and what ever other means are open to them.

Eco-Pornography--Some Examples

Every sentence on that label is at least partially misleading or untrue. One comes away from the ad with the general feeling of "Oh boy, I can help my environment by using Shifty Plastic bags" and this is not the case. They do not mention that plastic is at best poorly biodegradable, cannot be recycled, and that the trash inside the bag is also rendered unrecyclable. The natural process of decomposition is impeded by the plastic bag and decomposition is generally a good thing because it can add to soil fertility. The use of plastics then represents a major environmental threat because of their system clogging characteristics.

The claim about the burning is also true—but not true. When anything including humans, trees, and turtles are burned the end products of the combustion are "mainly carbon dioxide and water vapor." What they do not tell you is that carbon monoxide and oxides of nitrogen are also produced. These gasses can kill or harm the respiratory and cardio-vascular systems of the body. It is also true that when "efficiently incinerated it will not contribute to pollution": but of all of the incinerators in use in the U. S. today far less than 10% are efficient.

The question of phosphates has recently loomed large on the environmental scene. When it was discovered that phosphates could promote greatly increased algal growth and therefore speed up the natural process of aging known as eutrophication, a fear spread throughout the population. Advertising took hold and "Phosphate Free" was printed boldly on the labels of several new detergents. The early substitute for phosphates was NTA and we now know that NTA is worse for the environment than phosphates. Consequently the mood of detergent advertising changed and now the ads have shifted to the promotion of phosphorous levels. "Now only 8.7% Phosphorous" is very commonly seen on the boxes. This claim is a deceptive one since there has always been 8.7% phosphorous in many of these detergents. When that 8.7% phosphorous chemically combines with oxygen, phosphates are formed. As a general rule you can multiply phosphorous levels by 3 or 4 to derive the phosphate levels.

A third example of eco-pornography is the new ads for the veritable Trash Masher. This machine is the result of vast inputs of modern technology and is unconditionally guaranteed to make 25 pounds of trash out of 25 pounds of trash. The typical trash compactor advertisement directs itself to the need for convenience in the American household. The manufacturers even have the gall to provide special plastic bags with the machines. It is true that this machine could make the homeowner's task of taking out the trash a little bit easier (though the trash still weighs 25 pounds) and the "brick" of trash can make the municipal collection of refuse somewhat easier and safer for the trashmen. However, when this brick is deposited in a sanitary land fill it cannot burn because it is too dense . The energy requirements necessary to break apart this mass of trash are such that air pollution is sure to result and if a man or machine must be paid to break the brick, economic inefficiency results.

What's A Mother To Do?

All at once a cry of despair is raised by all. "Do I have to be a chemist, biologist, or ecologist to shop ecologically?" The answer is definitely not. Here are a few rules which may be followed in order to help the environment, and therefore to help yourself, when you shop.

First, if you do not absolutely need the product in question--do not buy it.

- If you must buy it--shop wisely. You can read the labels or rely on outside sources of information for help. In short, some old fashioned prudence is in order.

- If when at the store you are not sure about the environmental impact of a particular product wait before you buy it. You can call C. E. Q. at 545-0618 and we'll do our best to find out for you.

You will find that as an ecological shopper you will save money since hopefully you will buy less in general. When you do buy, by all means buy the Jumbo Economy sizes. Usually the unit price of a product is less and you will help the ecology by consuming less packaged materials. If you can, re-use your paper bags and buy returnable bottles. In the long run, returnable containers save you money because the deposits and returnables definitely save some of our resources.

A Message From Our Sponsor

The battle of the environmentalists today is not merely one of saving trees, preserving wildlife, and stopping pollution. The battle is also one of changing the environmental attitudes of people and reshaping consumption patterns. There should be no doubt that an individual can make a difference.

Eco-pornography is everywhere: it affects us all regardless of race, color, creed or national origin. Its purpose is to make everyone well-greased buying machines in spite of any environmental awareness they may have.

The Movement Is Dead...Long Live The Movement

BY TOM MORIARTY

Nixon has been walking on political eggs since taking office in 1969. His administration has witnessed the two largest and most significant antiwar actions in the long history of the movement. In May of 1970 he attempted to widen the war through ground invasion of Cambodia. Staunch resistance on the battlefield and an unprecedented wave of student strikes moved Nixon to abort that invasion. For nearly a month, students took control of the resources of their schools and carried through an intensive, sustained effort to educate, organize and mobilize against the war. That activity, despite cynicism to the contrary, was instrumental in stopping that aggression. On April 24, 1971, the largest demonstrations ever organized were held in Washington D.C. and San Francisco.

Nixon lies about U.S. policy in South East Asia. Why? He has to. Nearly a decade of antiwar activity has built the massive opposition that forces an American president to hide the true aims of U.S. foreign policy. Couched in terms of "protective reaction", "dynamic defense", "protective encirclement", "neutralization", "pacification", and "population relocation", the Nixon Administration has attempted to secure what has always been the US goal - military victory in South East Asia. He has had to pursue that goal behind massive propaganda campaign of Vietnamization, phased withdrawal, and a winding down of the war. The impossibility of realizing that goal, when faced with an enemy that will not lose and a domestic opposition that will not die, has been dramatically proven this week.

The liquid factor in Nixon's war plan has always been the Vietnamese themselves. He could never depend on their remaining quiet or inactive. In considering the events of the past two weeks, we should try to understand the conjuncture of circumstances that surrounds them. First, '72 is an election year. Nixon knows that he has not fulfilled his campaign promise to end the war. His "winding down the war" myth was beginning to wear thin. Two, intelligence reports had predicted the current offensive months in advance, but were unable to determine its potential size, duration or timing. Bombing of the DMZ, central highlands, Laos and Cambodia began to be seriously increased months before the offensive actually began. The war, along with total bomb tonnage approximations, began to appear in newspapers with increasing frequency. Third, due to growing domestic pressure, Nixon had been forced to withdraw most American ground troops during the preceeding three years. But the "Vietnamization" program, the pride of Nixon's secret plan, had proven a dismal failure, when engaged in the Laos invasion of 1971, and was in no better shape this spring. The ARVN (Army of South Vietnam) although huge, well-equipped, trained and financed, is far from being a formidable fighting force. According to returning GI's, there is considerable coersion used in recruiting the ARVN, and that even then, there is little willingness to struggle and die fighting against a national liberation movement. The idea of giving one's life to defend a US puppet dictatorship meets with little enthusiasm among young men in South East Asia. Fifth, the liberation forces have been, and are today, winning significant victories in ground clashes with the ARVN. The extent of US bombing all over South East Asia was not enough to stem the offensive. A situation was developing of possible US defeat in South East Asia. Major escalation of the war, involving many more B-52's, more aircraft carriers, more naval air power, and more military personnel proved insufficient to stop the offensive. Nixon made a desperate decision - Bomb Hanoi and Haiphong Harbor. Sixth, with the Vietnamese offensive raging, Nixon escalating the bombing, and the question of US defeat in Southeast Asia, Nixon's next scheduled troop withdrawal announcement (late April) takes on crucial importance.

The response to the bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong has been a wave of student strikes; local, spontaneous antiwar actions; and a massive resurgence of determination to act to end the war. The upsurge coincides precisely with the height of the Vietnamese offensive and the culmination of five months of organized activity around international demonstrations called for April 22nd The importance of these mobilizations against the war, as an independent, massive answer to the U.S. government, cannot be overemphasized.

All of the above noted circumstances were recognized by the Vietnamese. The timing, intensity, and initial success of the offensive have not been accidental. Liberation forces are depending on a decisive answer to the US government by the American people. The first, large scale united effort we can mount will be on the 22nd in New York City. Months of planning and building have gone into this activity which will occur simultaneously all over Europe. The massive character and clear demands of these demonstrations is of tremendous consequence as regards further US escalation in Southeast Asia.

Eight long years of education and organization have gone into building majority antiwar sentiment in the United States. We might just try to imagine the intensity of the undertaking that confronted the Vietnamese people 8 years ago.

A war, supported by the overwhelming majority of the American people, waged by the most powerful nation the world has ever known, began in response to the Vietnamese attempt to exercise self determination. They are still fighting for that right. But now they have allies en masse. Despite unbelievable losses, numerous setbacks, and wholesale territorial devastation, they not only continue to struggle, but are now making significant gains.

The fact of the matter is that the United States government is fighting a two front war. Over those eight years, second fronts were opened in Washington D.C., New York, San Francisco, Kent, Jackson, Berkeley, Boston, Madison, Chicago, Amherst, and in every major city from coast to coast. The more Nixon escalates the Asian front, the weaker become his defenses on the domestic front. What Nixon has done by continuously claiming to wind down the war, and to seek a negotiated settlement, has been to work himself into an inescapable contradiction. An air war unprecedented in scope and intensity, coupled with an overconfident, hard line stand at the Paris peace talks, began to erode his network of lies. The current Vietnamese offensive has completely shattered it.

The relatively cautious, uncertain steps he began to take are interesting to note. More B-52's. . . .then more aircraft carriers. . .then more battleships to shell the coast. The offensive continued. Then, the desperate step. The man of peace and reason bombed Hanoi and Haiphong harbor. The long smoldering mistrust, along with growing anger at the war's continuation and expansion, exploded. . .just days before internationally planned mass demonstrations on April 22.

To expand a little on mass demonstrations in general, they have proven consistently to be tactic around which the largest number of people can be mobilized in visible action against the war. Stated simply, size is important. A small minority in America continue to wage war against the often expressed and reiterated desires of the overwhelming majority. It is certain that the reasons that this is possible are vast wealth, control of the nations resources and political monopoly. The actions of no opposing minority in the US can successfully change current US policy. Only masses of people representing the sentiments of the vast majority, mobilized in action, have the real power to end that war.

A number of questions have arisen over the years as to the effectiveness of mass demonstrations, toward the goal of ending the war. Answers to those misconceptions at this time, and a clear reiteration of the strategy behind mass action, will hopefully convince people of the importance of being in New York tomorrow.

The Antiwar movement Hasn't Accomplished Anything

The antiwar movement has been the only brake on US escalation in Vietnam. The Pentagon papers show that over and over again US policy makers held back on drastic escalations of the war because of their fear of public opinion. Imagine what could have happened to Indochina if the mass demonstrations of the past few years had been pro-war -- Hanoi and Haiphong leveled, the dikes bombed, tactical nuclear weapons used. None of these possibilities is yet ruled out if the antiwar movement ceases to function.

Our task is not easy. The social forces committed to continuing the war have tremendous power at their disposal - billions of dollars, super weapons, free tv time for their lies. Yet already we have forced a number of consessions from them. Because of us, Johnson is out of the White House, the invasion of Cambodia was pulled back, some troops have been brought home. We have tied one of Nixon's hands behind his back; our job now is to tie back the other. The last thing we should do is let up on our pressure now.

"But Nixon doesn't pay any attention to us."

On the contrary. Nixon's whole Indochina strategy is determined by the antiwar movement. Every lie Nixon tells is testimony to his fear of what the antiwar movement can fo if the American people learn the truth about the war. Nixon is desperately trying to convince us that the war is almost over, to get the antiwar movement to shut up and go home. We must be doing something right.

The timing of last Christmas' raids against the North illustrate Nixon's concern about us. The weather couldn't have been worse, yet Nixon vetoes any delay in the bombing. He wanted to get the raids over before school resumed, so as to avoid any recurrence of the May 1970 demonstrations when millions took to the streets to protest the invasion of Cambodia and the killings at Jackson and Kent State.

"It's the same people and the same marches. People are tired of demonstrating."

In 1964 the war in Vietnam was called the "first concensus war in American history," and those who opposed it were called traitors or nuts. In 8 years we have transformed the country. Each new action has reached out to new sectors of the population and new areas of the country, until today, 3 out of 4 Americans want totally out of Vietnam by May 1. A recent Harris poll (Nov. 1971) shows that 65% of the American people think the war is "morally wrong."

But there are still millions of people who aren't tired of demonstrating for the simple reason they haven't demonstrated yet. When we mobilize these people we can end the war. Until we do we can no more afford to get tired than the Indochinese, who have fought invaders for a thousand years and held off the most powerful nation in the world for twelve.

"Demonstrations are counterproductive. They turn people off."

It is mass demonstrations, peaceful, legal and very visible, which have been the major factor in turning people off to the war and on to the antiwar movement.

Mass demonstrations give the movement visibility and they keep the issue of the war in front of the people. They give courage to the GIs in Indochina to oppose the war and prove to others that if they speak out against the war they will not be isolated.

One woman told a reporter after last April 24's march, "I always thought peaceneiks were a bunch of kids out to have a good time. But when I saw that march I realized they were big and powerful and serious. Now I oppose the war. I haven't marched yet, but if they keep it up and the war keeps up, I guess I'll have to join them."

Mass marches are not just a twice a year thing. They are simply the dramatic surfacing of the work that goes on year round. They provide the movement with a focus for its organizing and educating, and give the people concrete activities they can engage in.

"The antiwar movement is dead. The Nov. 6 marches were smaller than the ones on April 24."

The movement doesn't always follow a straight line. When we have massive demonstrations like last April 24 and force some concessions from the government, some people think the war is almost over. So the next demonstration may be smaller. But when the government misreads the sentiment and escalates again, as it did after November 6, this swell the ranks of the movement once again.

Antiwar sentiment has steadily increased. The war continues. Sooner or later these two facts must collide, and the longer Nixon tries to postpone the collision with empty promises, the sharper it will be. When that collision comes, if we have been there all along, educating and organizing, and spreading the movement throughout the country, we will mount the mass demonstrations that will end the war.

"Mass action has served its purpose. Now we have to try something else."

The purpose of mass action is to force an end to the war, and we are now for the first time approaching the point where we can fulfill that purpose. We have created majority antiwar sentiment in the US; now we must turn that into majority antiwar action. The worst thing we could do at this critical point would be to divert our energy and dilute our strength by going off after a new "tactic" or a different issue. No tactic has been found yet that can match mass demonstrations in moving large numbers of people into action against the war.

"Maybe we should have a moratorium on the antiwar movement until after the election, and work to get peace candidates into office."

Many people will work for different parties of candidates in the elections, but there is no conflict between electoral activity and participating in the antiwar movement. The two are not mutually exclusive.

Although we may work with or for others, we must continue to rely on ourselves. We connot depend on one individual to end the war for us. We should be an independent force which all the candidates must relate to. They must know that no matter who gets elected, we will be there with our demand to end the war.

Nixon would like nothing in this pre-election period than to point to the silent streets of America and say: "I have ended antiwar demonstrations. America is united behind my plans for Indochina." We must make it clear that the antiwar movement oppose Nixon's extension of the air war every step along the way.

Above all, we cannot wait for an election that is months away. There is no moratorium on the 300 Indochinese who are being killed every day; there is no moratorium on the 100 tons of explosives that are dropped ever hour on Indochina; there is no moratorium on GIs still dying in Vietnam or the draining of billions of dollars from the economy. There can be no moratorium on our ongoing activity against the war in Southeast Asia.

As regards our specific situation at UMass right now, the strike here has brought the war once again clearly into focus. Along with the demands stop the bombing; and immediate and total withdrawal of U.S. forces from Southeast Asia; students at UMass also called for freedom for political prisoners and an end to racist and sexist oppression here in Amherst. The advance in political conciousness undergone by many of us, especially since May 1970, was evinced in the thrust of those demands. The undeniable connection between racism at home and abroad; and the fact that sexist exploitation attempts to keep women in the kitchen, in the bed, or at the typewriter, has been eminently stated.

However, the fight of the Vietnamese people against incredible aggression at the hands of the U.S. government is a situation whose an international paragon of indominable human spirit, inevitable struggle, and ultimate victory. The outcome of the present crisis in Southeast Asia will be, in part, determined by the opposition we can mount against Nixon's counterattack. The circumstances facing the Vietnamese and U.S. forces clearly constitute a turning point in that struggle. Can there be any greater victory at this time against racism and oppression than a victory of the Vietnamese people? Stand with the Vietnamese. Be in New York City tomorrow.

Live Cream A Bit Sour

BY STEVE FELD

LIVE CREAM VOLUME TWO--CREAM (ATCO RECORDS)

If you were fortunate enough to have attended a Cream concert back in '67 or '68, you might have caught a glimpse of a frizzy-haired, moustached guy up in front of the stage. He was wearing headphones, turning dials, chain-smoking cigarettes, and always clapping the loudest. This is the impression that one is forced to get of Felix Pappalardi, the producer of every Cream record, and the main impetus behind the two posthumous Cream releases, Live Cream and, just recently, Live Cream Volume Two.

Pappalardi, who recently split from Mountain, obviously looks forward to his royalty checks from these fiascos. This reveals more about Felix, and his exploitive tendencies, than it does about Cream, because both of these records reek of futility, commercialism, and voracity.

And so, what we have here is more from the seemingly endless Pappalardi private tape stash. This time around, the package is more attractive (to make up for lost time), containing many of Cream's big ones ("Sunshine of Your Love", "White Room", "Tales of Brave Ulysses"). Yes, Eric Clapton still impresses, Ginger Baker still amazes, and Jack Bruce still expertises.

Cream formed out of restlessness. Eric Clapton, who was playing with John Mayall at the time, wanted to be up front , with just a rhythm section. His past experience with Jeff Beck and Mayall brought him into contact with all performers of the English blues scene--Jimmy Page, Rod Stewart, and especially Jack Bruce and Ginger Baker. Enough so of the latter two to specifically want them in his new group, a trio, which was unique in its day.

Their first album resulted in a bit of embarrassment for Atlantic, who hesistantly signed them up in 1966. Fresh Cream was held up for over six months. It was already completed, waiting to be released when the record company deemed it necessary--which was to be quite a while. When it was finally released it created quite a stir, but it wasn't until their next album, Disraeli Gears (which was completed before Fresh Cream was released!), and the single, "Sunshine of Your Love", that Cream skyrocketed.

Cream was always much more popular in America than in England. It was during these two years that Cream toured extensively and exhaustedly, mostly in America and mostly one-night stands (which any musician will tell you is hell personified).

If it is possible to pick one day, or one week, to represent Cream's peak, it was in the summer of 1968, when Cream played the Fillmore in San Francisco. Amid declarations that Eric Clapton was God, Cream came, saw, and conquered. The result of this manifestation can be heard on Wheels of Fire, Cream's third album, a double record. While record one ("In the Studio") revealed Cream's weak point, lack of suitable material, record two ("Live At the Fillmore") fittingly documented the Cream phenomenon. "Crossroads", "Spoonful", and "Toad" are all hallmarks of rock music and made Cream a living legend.

But it was the very reason for Cream's creation, restlessness, combined with the brutal temperment of the deadening touring, ephemeral. It was a case of the "too much, too soon" syndrome that oftens carries things way out of proportion and it is something that a group life America might have to deal with, today. Cream was a high energy band and was that finally caused Cream to disband. They found out that three persons in a group was very unmagical and unbalanced--decisions were majority ruled and the pressures of siding with one and oppossing the other were tantamount to treason.

The very nature of Cream demanded that they were to be epitomized by the old Speed-Freak himself, Ginger Baker. "It was a good thing, but it had to end", said Eric Clapton philosophically a year later.

They released a final album, Goodbye, with its vaudevillian cover. One side was more live material, "I'm So Glad" from Fresh Cream, "Politician" and "Sitting on Top of the World" from Wheels of Fire. Side two contained some studio gems, the Clapton-Harrison collaboration, "Badge", a Jack Bruce-Pete Brown tune, "Doing That Scrapyard Thing", and a Ginger Baker thriller, "What a Bringdown". Then Cream said goodbye.

Live Cream Volume Two is just what it says. You get what you pay for. Bruce's "Deserted Cities of the Heart" is a drudgery of a song with nonsense lyrics. "White Room" sounds good and was called "the most successful studio recording--well put together", by Clapton. Next, is the second time around for a live version of "Politician". It was on Goodbye also, but this rendition is tighter and better recorded. "Tales of Brave Ulysses" proves to be a drag by this time, but "Sunshine of Your Love" is powerful, and the best cut on the album. Eric Clapton's guitar playing has a clean resonance, every note is distinct and brilliant. His leads are statuesque, stately, and well thought out. The record ends with an old blues called "Hideaway" and the band rocks into the sunset.

What will be next? It's not too hard to figure out. Soon we'll have The Best of Live Cream and probably albums featuring each member with the group. Who knows! You can count on a Blind Faith-Live album (remember them?). Milk a good thing till it runs dry, and if any reputations or artistic sentiments are injured along the way, well, that's the breaks.

Canned Heat: Same But Different

BY MIKE KOSTEK

Historical Figures And Ancient Heads, Canned Heat, United Artists UAS-5557 time: 36:28

Historical Figures And Ancient Heads is Canned Heat's tenth album which prompts me to congratulate them for persevering in the face of such terrible misfortunes as they have suffered in the past few years.

The Heat have always been a hard-driving, relentless band that was the first white band of any name to boogie, and have been among the first to popularize blues-rock. Now when I say popularize, I don't mean they sold lots of records and created national fads ala the Funkers or David Cassidy, but Canned Heat, rather, gently showed people how nice and evil it was to boogie by playing well and with no needless hupe. Their music stemmed not from love of money or faddism, but fact is that the original five members of the band loved to boogie, they loved rock, and they loved blues most of all. Since 1966 when their first album came out they have given us an original mixture of the musics they love (but as we all know, music has no name, it's all the same). For this I want to stop and appreciate them. O.K., 'nuff. Plenty of Savoy Browns and Cactuses have come since, and have failed to excite. There are many who condemn the band for lack of change in their music, but that stems from a misunderstanding of just what musical idiom the boys choose to dwell in. How new can da blooze get?

Anyway, the Heat have really been Living The Blues (!) for the past two years or so, as one of the band's brightest talents, Al Wilson, (guitar, harp and singer of all of their Top 40 hits, as well as being a gifted songwriter) died two weeks after their finest album, Future Blues, came out. On Future Blues was a song written and sung by Al called "I Know My Time Ain't Long". Losing Allan was a tremendous blow to the group, and I thought that would be it for them. Later on, Bob "the bear" Hite was put out of commission for a while as his old lady left him. As we all know, every boogie needs a bottom, and their bass player, Larry Taylor, is one of the best around. He's so good that John Mayall wooed him away.

So it is that Ancient Figures arises out of this chaos and distress. Future Blues came out in the summer of 1970, so it's been nearly two years 'tween albums. Historical Figures And Ancient Heads emerges as a patchwork of sorts, with one cut from this session, another from that. There are eight songs on the album, and only two is written by anyone in the band.

In order to fill the holes in the band, Antonio de la Barreda has been recruited on bass, and he does an adequite job, and Joel Scott-Hill plays rhythm guitar and sings two of the songs.

Henry Vestine left the band just before they played Woodstock and has been in and out since, with Harvey Mandel filling in between. Here Henry plays lead guitar on 5, and has lost none of his spit and sunflower fire.

Bob Hite remains, though his voice is about half as powerful as it was, and he sings on four of the cuts.

Last, but not least, is Adolfo de la Parra, who is the most underrated drummer in rock. He played the best drum solo of the hundreds played at Woodstock, and fits perfectly into the band's style, playing along loudly and unobtrusively until a break comes along that he can fill, which he does with ingenious double drum work. Ah, bot you know, does Merricanz, dey got dat natural riddem annyway. . .

Cut One, Side One has the new Heat at work. Joel Scott-Hill is singing in a colorless tone, and Ernest Lane is playing piano, and Miles Grayson has arranged sone horns to toot at us. It's all interesting, but comes off as quite lame compared to their earlier work. Next is Joel leading us in a rave-up B.B.King style. The Mexican rhythm section cooks nicely, as it does on every cut. Canned Heat's power has always come from their rhythm section, which can play with any in the land, and here it keeps up the tradition of power.

The "Historical Figures" pop up all over. Little Richard makes the Bear sound hoarse. "Rockin' With The King" however merely emerges as another pleasant rave-up that lacks substance under close scrutiny. Good party number.

Another historical one, Harvey Mandel, turns up in "That's All Right", playing with tricks he used three years ago on his Righteous solo album. But that's all right.

Charles Lloyd plays some herbiemann flute on another cut, but it does take a versatile band to follow all these figures, and none of it is bad. Not BAD. Just not up to what the band can do.

One cut that is exemplary is "Long Way From L.A." which is the Heat at their wild, shakin', shazotin' best.

Historical Figures And Ancient Heads is a transition album. The new Canned Heat is trying out its style in the studio, with mixed results. If you liked the old Heat, you'll like this, though maybe not as much. If you never liked them before, this won't change things. If you were indifferent before, you haven't even read this far.

A Second Time Around

BY JEFF CLAYTON

Just Another Band From L.A., The Mothers

Most likely the Zappa fans out there (all please rise) weren't too dismayed by Steve Feld's review of Just Another Band From L.A.; it's not the first time someone has failed to make sense on the subject of a Mother's LP. If it happened that you were sick or bored last week, and you missed the Feld analysis, I wouldn't worry about it. Just put down your spoon or put up your feet, whichever applies and let me present a few partisan sentiments.

First point: a healthy number of reasonably thoughtful and musically aware people think this album is a knockout. Appreciation for this music comes from a familiarity with Zappa's favorite music styles (note: this means everything). Even his most serious work has elements of parody, folks, because of a certain hair-trigger response within the artist to shit in all it's forms. So if you don't like parody (or if you like shit), or if you don't know quite what it is Frank's referring to, you won't enjoy his music as much as you might. A peculiar personality bent, or some would say a peculiar bent personality, is another asset you might want to cultivate before embarking on an exploration of Zappa's stuff. Go look at yourself in the mirror and learn to mock.

Once you've mastered that, it's time to turn to the album. If you listen to it, you'll find it's not quite what Steve prepared you for. Side One, "Billy the Mountain" is an operetta and it is about a mountain whose wife is "a tree growing off of his shoulder." This didn't strike Steve as such a nice touch; anyway he didn't make any points about the character of the whimsy or Zappa's habitual use of low-brow English to give the product a little raunch value. I don't know; either you pick up on stuff of that kind or you don't. In any case it was at this point that the record and review diverged and never saw each other again, period! I don't want to start making grammar and usage notes, but I don't know what else to say, other than to say that the track is not necessarily either "boring" or short on the quality end.

I'm not entirely sure what Feld is talking about to begin with. He keeps making points that you might think would put Frank in a favorable light, but he always seems to be coming at them from the wrong end. That is, he can say a thing like, "Zappa has been skilled, in the past, at keeping his nonsense to a minimum, or at least accompanying it with some other qualitative features but here he loses out." I think he means for us to understand there's lots of nonsense on this record. Well, well. What's the matter Steve, you don't like nonsense? At the least you shouldn't confuse those of us who do, you make it sound like there's some evil force called nonsense always waiting to creep in and spoil your next LP if you're not careful. . .

A little lower, there was a reference to the Mothers' Live Fillmore album. Steve liked this one. He thought the band showed up "expertly skilled" (?) and "obviously well disciplined and experienced." What?! They were skilled and experienced then but not now? Farce was okay with Steve on this album, too. Nonsense didn't seem to bother him so much then; I wonder what it was soured him on it. And if the Fillmore set is tight and well-orchestrated, then what's the Other Band album? "Tuneless and annoying." Alright. Steve can be as inconsistant as he wants, but off the record, please. What's he like the Fillmore album for anyway? How can he? Concession: it's a better album than this one. Thesis: it's still logically impossible to love one and hate the other. This has got to be all a big misunderstanding. Feld criticizes a take-off of "Suite: Judy Blue Eyes" because it's insipid? What about the original? Would he wanna call down Swift's Modest Proposal or something for insensitivity? It's supposed to be satire, goddamn it.

Feld to the contrary, the second side is something more than filler. "Eddie, Are You Kidding?" is a slice at cheesy little businessmen who keep darkening our tube, and not only men's fashion. This is not the heavy-est riff on earth, but it's snappy enough. Nice chorus, too.

"Magdelena" is the highlight of the album. Anything but a "barnyard hoe-down" it moves from a rapid Gilbert'n'Sullivan kind of lick to some gorgeously potent fifties harmony complete with ever-accelerating chant finale. Pretty rude and crude, too. Some people aren't amused by Canadian incest, maple syrup, training bras, or nudes covered with mayonnaise and kaopectate, or flies in one's undershorts for that matter; can you imagine? Not Steve, though, he's amused by all that stuff too. He said so.

Don't forget: "Call Any Vegetable" in its new boogie incarnation rocks harder than you'd believe. Miscellaneous Platitudes and Falsehoods: yes, the Mothers do have a definite vocal orientation, don't they? No, I very much doubt. Mark & Howie, extertles and lead vocals, are influencing Frank particularly. Just the other way around. They take the center stage because that's where Frank put them. True, Ian & Don are old veterans. Aynsley Dunbar is arrogant enough for Motherhood? How arrogant is that? Don't I remember some toad calling Lenny Bruce arrogant, too? At any rate Aynsley's credentials as a drummer are impeccable. Percussion-wise, he leaves the former Indian of the Group far behind. After two or more years, bassist Jim Pons is a newcomer? What is this? As Lyndon Johnson once said in his sleep, "The truth will out," and as Bob Dylan replied, "The key is Frank."

Two Fine Area Concerts

By JIM LAVRAKAS

Cody and Company

Bill Kirch of Commander Cody's Lost Planet Airmen said before their concert at Mount Holyoke College last Tuesday, "We play a hodge-podge of music. Out East here we tend to play more Rock and Roll for the people." Native to California, the Commander and Company arrived in a huge Greyhound bus. Along with them came "some hillbilly buddies", Asleep At The Wheel, and the two groups teamed up for an evening of fine Country Western music complemented with periodic injections of ancient Rock and Roll.

Asleep At The Wheel came on for the first set. The crowd, thinking that they would play for only a half an hour or so was, at first, fidgety and indifferent. Asleep At The Wheel got off to a bumpy start but soon their music came on smooth and enjoyable. Certainly the crowd appreciated the only female member of the band who had a surprising clear and versatile voice with which she attacked Country Western goodies like "You're Not Woman Enough to Take My Man."

Their lead singer was a tall, lanky, earnest man in a cowboy hat who sang songs like "Cryin' Time" and "You're Drivin' the Nails Into My Coffin", songs which the crowd remembered as old shit-kickin' greats but under this bands' production were wholesome and enjoyable (as the man on the TV advertisement says, "No song tells a story like a Country Western").

The password for the evening for the Holyoke College concert goers was "Boogie!" It was truly amazing to see how they could stuff their conversation with this one word. Everything was "boogie". Boogie with a beer bottle, boogie with a joint--it really didn't matter what you did it with or how you did it as long as you did attempt to do it.

It was after a twenty-five minute delay that Commander Cody and Company finally arrived on stage ready to play. The first half of their show consisted primarily of Country Western with a different flavor from the music Asleep played. "Wine, Do Yer Stuff" from their first and only album, "The Beer That Made Milwaukee Famous Made A Loser Out Of Me", and "I Took Two Bennies But My Semi Still Won't Start" are hardly what one could call wholesome, stylized Country Western songs, but they are really fun and enjoyable.

Throughout this first half, it was readily noticed that Commander Cody and his Airmen had a definite problem. When it came to leadership on stage, it was obvious that there was none. When a person has his name at the head of a band one expects that person to lead the band, or at least have a particular image, charisma if you like, or style that makes him stand out as the leader. It is one of the sad things in our age that Commander Cody has about as much charisma as a troll hiding beneath a bridge waiting for unsuspecting passersby. The Commander was hidden away at the right of the stage where he remained hunched over his piano for the entire performance. Once the Commander came out of hiding to stumble to the front of the stage for a somewhat downed-out Country Western version of talking blues.

Nowhere was there any kind of leadership that could really focus the audience's attention and participation. Even the so-called lead singer, Billy C. Farlow (who looked like a shaggy Michael J. Pollard) could never really be taken seriously. He sang for only the last half of the show. The real problem with him was the guitar hanging around his neck which he pretended to play but which was never plugged in; like Linus' security blanket he clutched the guitar.

As for the rest of the band, although they played and sang well, neither Bill Birch, or John Tichy, or Buffalo Bill Barlow, or their drummer, or steel guitarist, or fiddle player ever really directed the show. Their music was thoroughly enjoyable but their performance became frustrating if you opened your eyes.

The Airmen and the Commander finished the second half of the show as Bill Kirch had indicated. Jerry Lee Lewis and Little Richard (The King of Rock and Roll) were revived to the delight of the audience. "Tuity Fruity" was by far the most memorable song of the evening with Billy C. running the show. They played their own "Hey, Hey, Hey, Hey" and by the finale Billy C. had shed his mute guitar and almost reigned supreme.

The evening was thoroughly enjoyable. The music was surprisingly good with a little lesson in the merits of Country Western entertainment. With its recent revival and movement to this part of the country watching Commander Cody and Company and Buddies could very well have been watching the birth of the contemporary rulers of Country Western.

Kirk: lung power plus something else.

Cody and Friends: shit-kickers?

Rasahaan Roland Kirk

The audience in the Student Union Ballroom never fails to amaze me. Whatever musical performer may be playing on a particular evening the Ballroom crowd never fails to respond honestly, appreciatively, and personably.

Hound Dog Tailor certainly had his welcome. Little Latin Larry enjoys his own intensely personal rapport with the crowd, his fans. But Rasahaan Roland Kirk received perhaps the most affectionate and unrestrained reaction from the crowd when he performed in the Ballroom on Monday night.

Rasahaan Roland Kirk is a master of reeded instruments from the recorder and the duck whistle to the clarinet and sax. He includes these instruments plus three or four other major reeded instruments, and innumerable other wind "noise makers" in his music. I heard one cynical member of the crowd say that Kirk was a variety act that made good. This is true if looked at in a certain context, but the fact is that Kirk is one of the greatest jazz musicians of all time if only due to his proficiency at the instruments he plays.

The reason that Roland Kirk's stage show may present itself as nothing better than entertaining variety is due to the fact that the man is blind. For him what matters is the sound and the timing, not the fact that the movements and actions that he has to make during his playing is both distracting and frustrating to the audience. He cannot see the extraneous movements he makes, and in keeping with the timing in the music, he may have to move clumsily and hastily. Remember, it's the music that counts in the case of Rasahaan Kirk, and he makes it count.

When it comes to lung power Roland Kirk reigns supreme. When he plays three wind instruments at one time, his lungs pump a huge quantity of air into his mouth and his cheeks puff in and out like little bellows. The sound they produce on the instruments he may happen to have in his mouth is pure, crystal clear, driven straight and true.

Any song that Kirk and friends may interpret has itself stamped with Kirk's distinctive style. "Ain't No Sunshine When She's Gone" was one example of this. Not only were the lyrics his own interpretation but the musical arrangement made it into an entirely new song with sections of the original running through the song as main themes. His interpretation of "My Favorite Things" was pure instrumental bliss.

The performance was fine, then, as was the reception. The proof is building up that UMass can have the combination of good music and good audiences. Real appreciation is the key.

Filling Your Palate With Soap

BY BOB NESTI

X, Y, and Zee occasionally flashes with some finely drawn sarcasm which keeps this otherwise pedestrian anachronism about a triangular relationship set in contemporary London from sinking under its own weight of banality. It's principal interest, which isn't to say virtue, is the sharp and bizarrely maudlin script of Edna O'Brian who, it seems, has the uncanny misfortune of capturing some of the more insipid asides of some pretty uninteresting characters. These waver somewhere between high comedy and trashy melodrama, with the latter finally holding sway, and force director Brian Hutton into attempting to bridge the two genres. The results are compellingly bad; every scene has a laugh, some intentional, some not and all undermined by the mundane insipidness of the old fashioned, stock star vehicle this is clearly a throwback to. The film falls as being a poor cross between the crass bitterness of Such Good Friends and character nuance and the situations of Sunday, Bloody, Sunday and, despite some fine technical points, the film is an hopeless as the chubby Elizabeth Taylor's attempts to fit into a size twelve dress.

Miss O'Brian previously dealt with a similar relationship in the far less glossy and more interesting Three Into Two Won't Go. In that film, Rod Steiger played a man about to end his marriage with Claire Bloom for the younger, more attractive Judy Geeson.

Here the situation is the same, only the strategies are different. Michael Caine plays a wealthy, self-centered bore of an architect named Robert, the "X" of the title trio, who is married to Zee, a bitch of almost superhuman proportions played appropriately by Elizabeth Taylor. They swing from their posh townhouse apartment to the garish gaiety of chic London nightlife, exemplified by the party they attend hosted by their positively ridiculous cohort, played with relish by Margaret Leighton. There Robert forms an immediate infatuation for a lithe, sweet boutique owner Stella, (Susannah York) the "Y" who completes the trio. Zee senses competition and in her sublimely articulated bitchy manner moves in on the unassuming Stella with a barrage of nasty retorts. This, though, doesn't quite quench the spark between Robert and Stella and they have an affair.

Zee remains acutely aware of her husband's philandering ways, but assumes he will eventually, as always, return to her. When, though, this little affair begins to look like the "real thing", after all, as Robert tells Stella, she has him so made with love that he even wears a watch; Zee strikes with all the vengeance she can muster. She first tries being obnoxious, taking off for Spain, then, returning only to interrupt Robert and Stella's little dinner for two, then, when that fails, slitting her wrist in drunken self--pity. Stella takes sympathy with Zee and visits her in the hospital where they confess mutual confidences. The young girl has parted with Robert, who finds his simple pleasures fulfilled in his love--struck secretary, and Zee moves in for a final kill. In a scene that's as laughable as it is beyond belief, Zee comes to Stella's apartment and seduces her. It seems young Stella had been expelled from school for supposedly "kissing a nun," and Zee will do anything to keep the man she treats with such obvious disdain. The end of the film has Zee, holding her trump, standing over the bewildered Robert waiting for his decision.

Zee's seemingly final victory is the story's only logical conclusion and points to why the film is so obviously out--of--date prattle. The film is geared, formed, shaped to the talents of Elizabeth Taylor an she reveals in the part, mimicking the supreme bitch she has shown herself to be in the past. Here is a grosse, overburdening caricature of a near comic character. She moves without grace, without style, with what may best be labeled blatant mediocrity. Elizabeth Taylor doesn't approach the part of Zee with any understanding of the intrinsic drives of flighty, unhappy, obnoxious woman. Instead she rides the part in self--possessed grandeur. There isn't a moment when we aren't aware that there is a star on the screen and this is her film. X, Y, and Zee is a throwback to the Forties styled woman's picture given a healthy transfusion of liberal sexual and social references to make it as contemporary as possible. None of it makes sense of a good film; there's a thinness to the dialogue, a genuine ineptness to all the performances, including the overly flat Susannah York as Stella and the overly obnoxious Robert, Michael Caine and a genuine lack of direction by Brian Hutton.

Burdened with the vague script, Hutton was forced to approach his film almost in sections and banked on the idea that the high comedy of the earlier sections should blend with the melodramatic elements towards the end. His lack of subtlety and lax controls of his stars only resulted in bottom--heavy soap--opera which amounts to nothing more than elaborate campy fashion show for the Medusa--like presence of Elizabeth Taylor and some decent photography by Billy Williams. X, Y, and Zee is an extremely well--shot film; planned with care then executed with much creative skill by cinematographer Billy Williams, who did the same for the remarkable duo Woman In Love and Sunday Bloody, Sunday.

Yet even the fine technical points cannot save the day to the vulgarities of self--ridicule Elizabeth Taylor insists upon indulging. There is only one consistant element and that's this woman's obvious character and much of that is due to the script. There is a sharpness, a novelist's eye for situations and their implications, at play in Edna O'Brian's words, but there's also a brittle ferocity which only the worst melodrama possesses. Worse, still, is the genuine laxness of performers and situations throughout. Understandedly Hutton couldn't much handle the schizoid nature of the material, but that's hardly an excuse for letting his actors camp and carry on with almost satirical vengeance. There are certain sequences of unrestrained hilarity, quite unintentionally I'm afraid, when Zee lets loose at Robert with all the skill a viper can muster. When, though, these two become serious, the situations become ridiculous. X, Y, and Zee has the singular honor of being probably the most unintentionally absurd outing a serious star has undertook since Susan Hayward tried Stolen Hours and Lana Turner moaned and pissed her way through Imitation Of Life. This is what Hollywood once called "a woman's picture." One that matinee ladies could either weep with the plight or marvel at the marvelous manipulative ways of a star. At one time this film was the principal vehicle for stars like Katherine Hepburn, Greta Garbo, Bette Davis, and Joan Crawford. It wasn't until the Fifties, and the emergence of the character actress, did this genre fade with the stars who couldn't quite clearly make a transition. One of the finest young stars at this time was Elizabeth Taylor who has had a distinguished career ranging from her early daus with director George Stevens. (A Place In the Sun and Giant) to her startling interpretations of Tennessee William's heroines. It is really quite a pity that today her career has fallen to points where every role she attempts is a mimic of Martha in Virginia Woolf, an already overblown character she reduces to a sketch in comparison with X, Y, and Zee.

Her Zee is first amusing, mainly because she simply assumes a character of such grosse proportions can be maintained for two hours; but she soon peters out long before the plot begins to hold any interest. The same problem plagued the similar Such Good Friends. When it did attempt to become serious, it became brittle, and when Zee attempts suicide, she is lost to the obvious harsh tone. Although soap opera deals with the obvious, for it to be successful it must weigh delicate elements and deftly underplay them. The best work of Tennessee Williams, of Carson McCullers, of Edward Albee, all have tinges of poetic melodrama. When the obvious is held in firm control, most often by the scriptwriter, the drama will succeed despite limitations of scope. X, Y, and Zee hasn't any limitations. Its scope is as large as the ample Miss Taylor's numerous tent dresses and it fails miserably as both high comedy and sophisticated drama.

Improving Your Listening Environment

BY FRANK JOHNSON

In this day of ecological awareness, we tend to be aware of our environment and how it affects us. The home listening environment is no exception: there are certain interrelationships which exist when one listens to a stereo system, most of which concern room acoustics. Some are good and some are bad; today we'll take a look at how they work.

First, we must bear in mind some fundamental properties of sound. Certain substances reinforce it, and others deaden it. Those reinforcing sound are hard surfaces, such as smooth walls, mirrors, or uncarpeted floors. Substances which deaden sound are drapes, plush carpets, and fiberglass batting. In a listening room, we have to be aware of what sort of furnishings are present, because they can affect certain frequencies in the audible range. A room with very little furnishings, for instance, will usually sound "hard"; the high frequencies will be overemphasized and peaky. Conversely, a room with a thick carpet and stuffed furniture will sound "dull" and the highs will be diminished. Some of these problems can be controlled by tone controls. We'll discuss them fully later on.

Next, a rule to be kept in mind is that as frequency increases, so does directionality. Low frequency sounds - or bass - are essentially non-directional, and their location is hard to pinpoint. High frequencies, on the other hand, are directional and are hard to "disperse", or scatter, so that an accurate stereo image can be reproduced. To scatter the highs more effectively, many speaker manufacturers have designed tweeter systems with a very small cone diameter, because a smaller cone disperses highs better than a large one.

However, many speaker systems can be improved by adjusting the level controls that come with them. Earlier in this column, I mentioned the fact that unscrupulous salesmen turn down these controls on speakers they don't want to sell, and turn up the controls on speakers which perhaps give them a better financial return. When the choice has been made and the speakers are home, nevertheless, the need for adjustment becomes rather apparent, when the room characteristics are taken into consideration. If space and placement preferences dictate that one speaker must be in an unfavorable location, some of the problems can be alleviated by adjusting the level controls for the tweeter (the woofer does not have one) or the midrange, if the speaker system has one. If one speaker has to "project" harder than the other one, the level controls can be advanced on the disadvantaged speaker so that better overall balance can be effected in the listening area.

There is a method to properly adjust these controls which was pioneered by Roy Allison, Vice-President of Acoustic Research, Inc. The following description is borrowed from the very informative volume, "High Fidelity Systems", which is available from AR for about $1 or so.

To adjust speaker systems that come with level controls, first make sure that the system is properly phased. When an out-of-phase relationship exists, the stereo image will be scattered and some bass will be lost. The method of determining correct phase is simple: take the speaker systems and place them about 2' apart, facing each other. With a record or other source playing that has plenty of bass, reverse the terminals on one speaker (not both) and check to see if the bass increases. If it does, the speakers were out of phase originally and they are now in phase. Leave the connections alone for now. If the bass decreases, the speakers were originally in phase, and the connection should be reversed and restored to its original position. Take care to see that the speaker wires do not short out excessively when checking for phase; on some amplifiers, it is dangerous to do so.

A cross diagram of a omni--directional speaker. Omni--or one--dimensional speakers, which are the best for your environment.

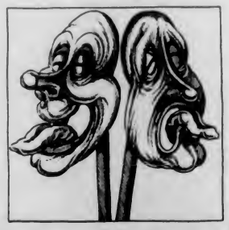
When phase is correct, locate a monaural record for the level control adjustments. If no mono record is available, set the mode control on the amplifier to "mono". Disconnect one lead to the right speaker; this will leave only the left speaker operating. Turn down all level controls so that the woofer only is working. Make sure all tone controls at the amplifier are flat, loudness compensation off. Now, locate the midrange control on the back of the speaker cabinet (if the system has no midrange, proceed to the next step below). Slowly, turn up the midrange control until the most natural sound is heard. Listen to a few different records and don't hesitate to adjust the control again until it's exact. When the desired position is reached, mark it with a chalk and leave it there.

The Tweeter, which handles only the very high frequencies (over 3 kHz) should not make an overly strong contribution to the sound; its effect should be subtle. On a 3-way system, the tweeter control should be located right next to the one for the midrange. It is best to listen slightly off-axis from the center of the tweeter cone, to make sure that the highs can project correctly. When the tweeter just begins to intrude as the level increases, mark the position once more, after checking the level with some different records (preferably ones with good high frequency content), and leave the control in the marked position. Do not worry if the new positions do not correspond to the "normal" settings. (On speaker systems that come with a 3-way toggle switch, exact level adjustment may be difficult, but experiment anyway).

Repeat this 2-stage process with the right channel, restoring the connection by returning one wire to the speaker binding post on the right channel, and disconnecting one speaker lead on the left channel. After all adjustments are made, listen in the stereo mode to check on what you've accomplished. There should be a noticable improvement in high frequency balance and off-axis projection.

It has been my experience that with wide-range speaker systems, excess bass results when the system is mounted in a corner, either on the floor or against the corners of a ceiling. The explanation for this is the non-directional nature of bass frequencies, which radiate from the speaker cone in a random pattern until they meet something. If it is a wall surface, they will be reflected. The more wall surfaces that meet the low frequencies, the stronger the reflection and the bass reinforcement. If speakers are left on the floor (or the ceiling) but moved out of the corner and towards the center of the room, the bass will be reduced. In some cases, it is to be preferred, because in a hi-fi system naturalness and sound accuracy should be the goal for which to strive, not excess bass. Too much bass reinforcement from wall surfaces can create a phenomenon known as "standing waves", which are certain frequencies that peak sharply in a room of near-perfect cubical dimensions. The ideal listening room should never have close to equal sides, and in theory, the larger the room, the better, to allow the bass to radiate without undue reinforcement.

Standing waves show up in the form of exaggerated, "boomy" bass, instead of tight, clean, balanced low frequencies. To reduce them, try moving the speakers out of the corner and toward the center of the room, if this is possible. Raising the speakers even a small height above the floor will probably clear up most of the trouble. Some manufacturers offer stands for this purpose; I have found that cinder blocks, used in foundation construction for houses, are ideal. They are also quite firm and support even the heaviest speaker systems ideally. When mounting the systems on the blocks, put a strip of cardboard or newspaper between the block the speaker cabinet so that the blocks don't scratch the wood finish.



Not only will this method allow a reduction in bass boom, but also the tweeter will be higher up than before, and the treble frequencies will be stronger and more pronounced. The stereo image should also improve. If there are still some standing waves, move the cabinets away from flush against the wall surface (only about 4" is usually required). If desired, the tweeter controls may again be re-adjusted, though this may not be necessary.

Recently, the problem of home listening environment characteristics has attracted the attention of many equipment manufacturers. To allow precise compensation for room acoustics, some manufacturers offer "frequency balance controls", which can be adjusted to affect only certain frequencies that are interferring with overall sound balance. Some of these controls are rather expensive, and they come in 2 forms: the "passive" type, which is adjusted for overall room balance by a factory-trained technician once and then sealed for permanent compensation; and the "active" type, which is placed between the preamp and the power amp (or the tape "out" and tape "in" jacks on a receiver) to allow continuous adjustment. The active controls are much less expensive, and need not be so precise; they may compensate for uneven recordings on either tape or records, and reduce excess hiss and noise from older recordings without adversely affecting the frequency response. Many of the newer preamplifiers are coming already equipped with these controls; the technique is slowly becoming popular, as the effect can only be an improvement.

If you want to incorporate a frequency balance control into your system, probably the easiest and least complicated method would be to place an active-type between the tape deck (if you have one) and the amplifier, or, as already mentioned, the tape out/tape in jacks. This method has additional advantages, in that it can be used to permanently adjust tape recordings whenever they are made.

The audio series is rapidly coming to a close, and I wish to repeat my earlier offer: if you have any specific questions or problems you want answered, drop by and leave the written inquiry in the Poor Richard's office (no phone calls, please). They will be printed and answered whenever possible.

Next week, we will be taking a look at the literature of hi-fi; this includes books, magazines, pamphlets, and other publications which will allow continuous reference to the elusive art of high fidelity.

well-crafted, well-acted narrative about the perils of growing up in the finest tradition of the great Hollywood directors. The film is nostalgia in the negative sense and despite some near melodramatic plotting is the most poignant film in quite some time. The acting is superb by a cast of mostly unknown character actors led by Cloris Leachmen, Timothy Bottoms, Jeff Bridges, Eileen Brennan and Ben Johnson. The film won four NY Film Critics awards and finished second in voting for Best Picture behind Clockwork Orange an often searing film.

Director Alain Resnais and screenwriter Alain Robb-Grillet collaborated on this New Wave egigmatic classic, which, when released in 1961, was hailed by most critics as a masterpiece although most really didn't know why it may be an elaborate put-on, judge yourself; at any rate it's a must for a film cultist and the kind of film that leads true cinema devotees to write six page letters as to its meaning to then favorite critic or obscure film journal. It has three main characters and its the audience's job to figure out what is the nature of their relationships set in a huge, baroque hotel, the film is an engrossing tapestry of beautiful shots which may or may not mean anything. Featuring Delphine Seurs who recently attempted a comeback as the beautiful, six hundred year old vampire in Daughters Of Darkness.

Love Story (Sunday, Student Union Ballroom, 7 and 9:15)

Erich Segal's best selling weeper is equally as obnoxious on the screen as it was printed. The trite little story concerns two college students, he a bore at Harvard, she a bitch at Radcliffe, who find love despite their class differences. The tale has a bittersweet ending with the girl contracting leukemia and dying in the final reel, but without muttering a banal Segal homoly about love meaning never having to say your sorry. There is a competence to this dross, due mainly to the understandable direction of Arthur Hiller who somehow manages to work around the limited ranges of Ali McGraw and Ryan O'Neal as the young lovers and at least make this soap opera respectable. Considering the script, probably the best that could be expected from the material, but hardly worth seeing considering the book can be digested in half the time.

Monkey Business (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30, 10)

As a group of stowaways who end up as bodyguards for a couple of gangsters, the Marx Brothers manage to turn an entire ship upside down in this Norman McLeod-directed production. The film also offers a chance for both Chico and Harpo to show off their musical abilities.

Among the weaknesses of the film is the presence of Zeppo who seems to get in the way of the antics of his three brothers. But if you can overlook him and concentrate on the actions of Groucho, Chico and Harpo who always seem to overcome their scripts, you'll find this to be one of their better films.

Night Of The Living Dead (Friday, Mahar, 7 and 9:30)

A film which has claims to being the most frightening film ever made simply because it goes further than any other horror film in showing utter depravity. The film is a huge, black conceit; working on the premise that a "blood--and--guts" film should not be covert, but rather overtly show some inhumane behavior. The plot concerns the plight of six-odd travelers who find themselves seeking refuge in an abandoned farmhouse the night the recently dead return to life and prey upon the living. This low-budget, B-flick has revolutionized the genre and despite some obvious rough edges, makes for amightly scary experience.

Paths Of Glory (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)

Stanley Kubrick's masterful anti--war film which devistates the viewer with a clean, sharp, analytical style and makes for an introduction to this director's pessimistic view of man as a human animal. The story, adapted from the popular anti--war novel of Humphrey Cobb, concerns three soldiers and how the French High Command had them injustly tried for treasons during the First World War. Still banned in France, the film is stirring, shocking cinematic indictment, which moves with a fluidness that's near hypnotic. The fine cast includes Kirk Douglas in probably his best role as the idealistic defender of the soldiers, and Adolphe Menjou as the corrupted, effete member of the French High Command. Simply one of the finest films ever made; one which profoundly shocks and deeply moves its viewers.

Summer Of '42 (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield; Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

This nostalgiac ode is quickly becoming this year's Love Story in terms of popularity. How a boy becomes a man, with a little help from Jennifer O'Neill, is seen in this rose-colored look at a young man's sexual awareness set one summer in Maine. Director Robert Mulligan has accomplished the rather difficult job of sustaining the same emotional tone-

What's Up Doc? (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)

Peter Bogdanovich's second successful attempt at recreating the great style of the classic Hollywood directors, this time the witty, sophisticated comedies of Thirties. Here the director is Howard Hawkes and the film What's Up Doc? exemplifies most is his Bringing Up Baby. The plots are nearly the same; in the earlier version Cary Grant played a scatterbrained young man who becomes romantically intrigued with the sophisticated Katherine Hepburn. In this recreation, Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand attempt to replace these two masters at sophisticated comedy and fail quite simply in the process. Their failure at imitation though is refreshing and allows for their innate charms to shine, as does the comedy which is a supple blend of the sophisticated and slapstick and from the opening title sequence featuring Streisand singing Cole Porter's "You're the Top" and ends with Porky Pig saying, "That's all folks." The film is a reverent vibrant evocation of the great Hollywood comedies

Weekend

Music

Amherst Folklore Center

Friday the center presents a night of accoustical jamming with the Zoto Brothers and Elaine and Jim Craswell. Saturday Richard and Lee Wilkie will appear at the Folklore Centre, Spring Street, Saturday evening. The couple sings traditional folk music on commercial and educational television, in concerts, festivals, schools and coffeehouses. They play banjo, mountain dulcimer, harmonica, autoharp and limberjack.

Residents of Albany, N.Y., they offer a survey course in American folk music at colleges in that area. Richard is a professor in the department of rhetoric and public address at SUNY (Albany). And Sunday the center will feature Jack Verenose and friends.

Annual Spring Concert

The annual spring concert of the UMass Concert Band will be Saturday at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Under the direction of Carl Daehler, the band is open to membership from throughout the Five-College Community.

Included in the program will be a wide selection of band music, from an arrangement of J.S. Bach's "Prelude and Fugue In G Minor" to the modern "Prelude and Fugue" by Vaclav Nelhybel. Also on the program are "In Malaga," a Spanish suite in three movements by Frederick Curzon; the finale to "Symphony No. 1 In G Minor" by Kalinnikov-Bainum; Jaeger's "Second Suite" in three movements; and 'March, The Southerner" by Alexander.

Featured on the program will be a performance of Rimsky-Korsakov's "Concerto For Trombone and Band." Larry Weed of the UMass music faculty will join the Concert Band as soloist.

Weed received his bachelor of music degree from Oklahoma City University and master of music degree from Eastman School of Music at the University of Rochester; and he is nearing completion of his work for a DMA degree from Boston University. He is assistant professor of music, director of bands, and low brass instructor.

The concert is open to the public, without charge.

Outdoor Jazz

The first of two outdoor jazz concerts featuring the Jimmy Heath All-Star Sextet and the McCoy Tyner Quartet will be Friday at 7:30 p.m. in the mall of the Southwest. There will be no admission charge for this concert sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council

Jimmy Heath, composer and arranger who plays tenor and soprano saxophone, and flute, will bring with him Curtis Fuller, trombone; Kenny Barron, piano; Herbert Lewis, bass; Albert Kuumba Heath, percussion, and MTume, congas and other percussion instruments.

The McCoy Tyner Quartet is led by McCoy Tyner, pianist, who played with John Coltrane before forming his own group in 1966. The quartet includes Al Mouvon on drums and wood flute; Calvin Hill on bass; and Sonny Fortune on soprano, alto saxophones, and flute.

In case of rain, the concert will be in the Student Union Ballroom. Because of limited seating, UMass undergrads with I.D.s will be seated before the general public.

April 28 at 7:30 p.m., the Fine Arts Council will present another outdoor jazz concert, featuring the Archie Shepp Quintet, in the mall of the Southwest Residential College.

Films

A Clockwork Orange (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)

Stanley Kubrick's masterful and devastating "horrorshow" of our immediate future deals with a society where criminals are subjected to behavior conditioning that strips them of their free will. The story concerns a juvenile delinquent thirty years hence and how his exploits lead him to become a dupe for both psychologists and politicians. This young man, Alex, has three primal drives: violence, rape, and Beethoven, specifically the Ninth, and spends most of his free time participating in his obsessions.

Bedknobs and Broomsticks (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

Walt Disney's latest super-children's musical is albeit less magical than some of his earlier attempts, but doesn't offend as some of his more recent efforts have unfortunately done. This one's main charm is the charming visual effects, which won an Oscar, and the performance of Angela Lansbury as the bit-bewitched governess.

Blonde Venus (Saturday, Gamble Auditorium, Mt. Holyoke, 8)

Josef Von Sternberg's 1932 meticulous melodrama about the plights of a misunderstood woman patterned against her unhappy marriage and the depression--ridden times. The story concerns the blind determinism of Marlene Dietrich to succeed in spite of her husband's obtuse attitude towards her. She moves from her poverty--ridden beginnings in a Galveston flophouse to being the toast of Paris, all the time pursued by her playboy husband Cary Grant. The true virtue of Blonde Venus and why it holds up some forty years later is Von Sternberg's rhythmic grace and firm hold on melodrama.

Duck Soup (Monday, Campus Center Auditorium, 7, 8:30, 10)

Generally regarded as the zaniest of their many pictures, this film marks the premier of the union between the Marx Brothers and director Leo McCarey. Groucho punally portrays Prime Minister Firefly of Freedonia while Harpo and Chico pose as peanut vendors turned secret agents. Zeppo also appears as Groucho's secretary and straight man, as if he needed one.

The mirror scene, in which Harpo and Groucho get each other and the audience going in cricles, is only one of the hilarious moments that this film has to offer. Of course, Margaret Dumont offers the lover interest, as only she can.

A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history. The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth that are all but culminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and cornball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best. Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant. An overrated, ill-conceived, charmless musical; with Norma Crane as the dutiful Goldie, and Molly Picon as Yente the Matchmaker.

The French Connection (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton; Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

A fact-based account of how police track down a shipment of heroin in New York City which is a fast, flashy, and fascinating thriller. The grittiness and chaos of New York City is captured at breakneck speed and brutality by director William Friedkin who has fashioned perhaps the stylish and finest thriller in some time. Gene Hackman plays a boorish detective who, as the antisocial, antihuman, detective, somewhere between Bullitt and Joe, the latest film cliche.

The Godfather (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Mario Puzo's sprawling bestseller reaches the screen as one of the most impressive and satisfying American films in quite some time. It is literally a cornucopia of everything a social drama should be filled with. A strong plot, nostalgic settings, warmth, violence; everything a good, strong piece of popular entertainment should have. Under the skillful direction of Francis Ford Copolla, the film revives the seemingly lost genre of the gangster films and does so with what may be best labeled the biggest of them all. Nearly every last piece of Puzo's mammoth chronicle of the rise of an Italian Crime syndicate is present in this spectacularly refreshing three-hour entertainment. The film also marks the return of Marlon Brando as one of our leading film actors in the titled role, and the supporting performances from Al Pacino to Sterling Hayden, are all equally fine. The film, like The Last Picture Show, shocks us into realizing just how good old-fashioned, straight-forward narrative can be.

Go West (Sunday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 7:30)

Though less well known then some of their other films, Go West still offers a lot of entertainment, especially for those who appreciate the Marx Brothers patented style of outlandish humor. In this one, the three boys play good samaritans trying to help out a beautiful young lady and her grandfather who are being swindled by the local saloon keeper.

Guess Who's Coming To Dinner? (Friday, Merrill Science Center Two, 7:30)

Stanley Kramer's attempt at sophisticated social comedy which all but becomes the trite but true patronizing soap opera about whether or not a boring young lady (white) should marry an equally boring young man (black), albeit the fact he is a Nobel Prize Winner. The focus of the drama is on how a young girl, played by Katherine Houghton, becomes engaged to Sidney Poitier and how the engagement affects her "liberal" parents Katherine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy. The point of the film is so obvious that its a shame that the number of fine actors and actresses wasted themselves in it, especially since the obviously ill Spencer Tracy died almost immediately upon completing the film. It also never ceases to offend for not only does it condescend on social grounds, it attempts to evoke the great Tracy-Hepburn even Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant. An overrated, ill-conceived, charmless musical; with Norma Crane as the dutiful Goldie, and Molly Picon as Yente the Matchmaker.

Extra Space At S.W. To Be Discussed Tomorrow

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

Due to the fact that the Basic Food line at the Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest will be moved to the Hampshire D.C., the Southwest Assembly has several proposals as to how to utilize this new found space. These proposals are a result of a long-term trend to integrate the life of Southwest students, and will be discussed this weekend, at a Southwest Internal Planning Conference. In addition, the Berkshire D.C. Clubroom is a proposed center for the black community, similar to that of Mill House.

The object of these plans is to make the dining commons more a part of life than just for food.

Tentative ideas for the space in Hampden include a substantial information center so that Southwest students won't be forced to look in unconvenient places. Other suggestions concern a counseling center for academic, mental health, and social (birth control, draft counseling, drug information) services; an academic center, a social/cultural film and game areas, art galley, experimental area) site; and a mini-student union", which would offer such services as check-cashing, and a sundae counter. Schemes for the use of the additional office space involve serving the R.S.O., Southwest Assembly, Area West Judiciary, and SWCRB.

An issue to be stressed is the fact that this reallocation of space will not influence the price of meal tickets unless it is in a positive direction. The change of the Basic Food line from Hampden to Hampshire is an economical move, the idea being to cut costs, however this move is on an experimental basis.

Both the Food Services and the Southwest Assembly are in accord for the rearrangement and the proposals made.

The center for the black community, to be located in the clubroom of the Berkshire D.C., will be available (when finished) for the remainder of the semester. However, Munchies and the snack bars at that particular site will continue to operate as usual.

On the other hand, the Hampden project will start in the fall. There will be workshops set up to continue through the summer to consider how to best exploit the available space. It is to be noted that, since the move of the Basic Food line is on an experimental basis, they may have to move back.

Concerning the Black Community, there will be presented tonight at 8:00 in the Hampden D.C., a two-hour workshop co-sponsored by the Black Caucus of the Southwest Assembly and the Committee to Combat Racism from the School of Education. This workshop entitled, "Is Black Art Exclusive: Black Art as a Humanizing Process", is presented by the United Black Artists.

Trustees Approve Rent Hike

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The Finance Committee of the UMass Board of Trustees Wednesday approved for suggestion to the Trustees a $30 rent increase for dormitories on the Amherst campus excluding the Sylvan Area.

Attending the meeting from the Amherst campus were Vice Chancellors Thomas Campion and Robert Gage. Also attending to protest the increases were Student Senators Michael Gregory, next year's chairman of the Senate Rents and Fees Committee, and Senator Elliot Sherman.

The most controversial aspect of the increase all along has been the proposed change in University housing policy which would allow fewer students to move off campus next year. The Administration maintains that without the change in policy a room and board increase would total $69. The Student Senate's reply to this is that a raise would not be necessary if there wasn't so much mismanagement on campus.

Finance Committee Chairman George Pumphret expressed the committee's feeling that the raise is necessary, but that negotiations should continue between the Rents and Fees Committee and the Administration in an effort to look into ways of curbing future rent increases. He expressed the committee's feeling that the rent situation is "a very serious problem" on the Amherst campus.

Also at issue was Rents and Fee's contention that the students should not be made to pay a $350,000 deficit incurred when the Administraton budgeted for 95% occupancy in the dorms and ended up realizing only 90% occupancy. Mr. Pumphret's answer to this was that the Administration "doesn't have a crystal ball", and can't be extremely accurate in projecting room occupancy rates. Nevertheless, Pumphret stated, the debt service on the dorms must still be paid, or the University will be in trouble with the State.

The Trustees will meet next week and consider the Finance Committee's suggestion. It is expected that they will approve the $30 increase.

In other action the WMPIRG petition, and whether a refundable $2 fee can be charged to the students, by WMPIRG was taken off the agenda for later consideration due to the fact that UMass President Robert Wood's staff lawyer didn't have time to look over the legal implications of the petition. The petition will be considered at the next Finance Committee meeting.

Senator George McGovern is a decent, brave and enlightened man. We urge you to vote for him in the April 25th presidential primary. Mark your ballot carefully. Vote the delegate slates headed by Robert F. Drinan for the delegates and alternate delegates at large, and for Frances R. Abrams for the district delegates and alternate delegates pledged to McGovern. Programmed by nobody-Senator George McGovern has credibility, integrity, and morality.

He deserves your support!

Vandalism Plagues Campus Center

By ED MATYSIEWICZ

The Campus Center has been plagued with a large amount of theft and vandalism since its opening. The major area of theft presently is the bookstore where $80,000 s projected to be stolen this year by shoplifters. The other areas amount to about another $15,000 a year.

How can the theft be stopped? This is a very difficult question. The Student Senate and the Judiciaries have stiffened the shoplifting penalties. The result was a dramatic drop in the number of shoplifting cases in the Student Judiciary.

Another area of theft is stolen Audio Visual Aids equipment and furniture. Stolen AVA equipment accounted for a $3200 loss last year and is about $900 for this year. Furniture was a large item which consisted mainly of $4465 of concourse cushions. A few of the long list of stolen items are a granite coffee table, a color tv, a leather chair, an electrovoice speaker, a 16 mm movie projector etc.

The theft and vandalism losses will run an estimated $100,000 this year, or about $5 on the Campus Center tax for each of the 20,000 students on campus. If you would like to possibly save $5 here's how:

1) Give any suggestions you may have on how to reduce shoplifting and theft to Rod Tripp, c/o SUG Board, Campus Center.
2) Return stolen items to the Campus Center desk on the Concourse level.
3) If you know someone who is shoplifting, try to get him/her to stop. If it is a mental health problem, encourage them to go to the informary.
4) Let the Campus Center know how you feel about shoplifting and what should be done to those who are caught.

GOP Convention Site Undecided

(AP) — Top Republicans say their plans to hold the 1972 GOP Natonal Convention in San Diego are running into more money and more problems than they had anticipated and they may have to switch the meeting site to Miami Beach.

Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, chairman of the Republican Naponal Committee, said in New Orleans Wednesday a decision will have to be made soon on whether to try to overcome the difficulties or change the site for the Aug. 21 convention. A party spokesman said a decision may be reached Friday.

John N. Mitchell, President Nixon's campaign manager, was quoted by the Miami Herald as saying the Republicans have "a real problem in San Diego...I'm not sure we can solve it."

R. L. Herman, vice chairman of the Committee on Arrangements for the party, said: "Our architects and contractors inform us that all of the modifications of the San Diego Sports Arena cannot be completed in time unless work can begin sooner than the arena owner presently will permit."

But Peter Graham, owner of the arena, told the San Diego Union: "There's no way, in my mind, that the convention is going to leave San Diego...Tomorrow or the next day we'll work it out."

"There's politics in this thing," Graham added. "I think they are digging at somebody. I don't understand why they are making me the bugaboo."

A source in Miami Beach agreed there was more to the problem than the arena and a reported shortage of hotel reservations in San Diego.

"They knew those things before they selected California," the source said. "What they couldn't know about then was ITT and the bombing of Haiphong."

He said the controversy over International Telephone & Telegraph Corp.'s pledge to aid the convention if it were held in San Diego has put a stigma on the Southern California town. And President Nixon's decision to renew the bombing of North Vietnam, the source explained, would result in mass demonstrations that could be contained better in Miami Beach, which is linked to the mainland by a series of causeways and draw bridges.

Miami Beach Mayor Chuck Hall, meanwhile, said the Republicans had contacted him to discuss his city as a possible convention site, and "Miami Beach is ready."

Republican officials are meeting in Chicago this week to discuss the San Diego problems.

Gruening Speaks For McGovern

By BARRY STAVRO

Former Alaskan Senator Earnest Gruening spoke before a crowd of 500 yesterday in the S.U. Ballroom in support of George McGovern's candidacy for the Presidency.

He called McGovern the only candidate who is "Sure of ending the war immediately."

Gruening cited McGovern's anti-war stand since 1963, his proposal to cut the military budget by 30 billion dollars, the elimination of the a.b.m., tax loopholes, his voting record against the draft and his support for amnesty for conscientious objectors, as reasons for his backing.

On conscientious objectors, Gruening rationalized, "Because they are wiser than the war makers, why should they be penalized?"

In his speech Gruening traced the history of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia beginning with the 1964 Gulf of Tonkin incident.

He said that Pres. Johnson and his advisors "conspired to lie" to the Congress and the American public to escalate our military involvement there.

"And so," Gruening said, "the U.S. was deliberately plunged into the longest and bloodiest war that we have ever been in."

Pres. Nixon, Gruening said, waited thirteen months before announcing his promised plan to get us out of Vietnam. But Gruening said, "It was not a plan to end the war but to perpetuate it."

He recounted the Administration's extension of the war into Cambodia and Laos. Plus the 20,000 American soldiers, who have been killed in Southeast Asia since Pres. Nixon took office.

Gruening summarized his feelings on the present Administration by saying, "These are the compelling reasons why the American public should go to the polls at the first opportunity and throw these people out who have lied to the American people."

"If we have four more years of Richard Nixon we will be headed into a police state," Gruening warned.

He based this reasoning on former Attorney General Mitchell's frequent wire tappings without court orders, and Pres. Nixon's refusal to abolish the antiquated Un-American Activities Committee. Gruening said this atmosphere resembles that of the Joseph McCarthy era of twenty years ago.

On Vice President Agnew, Gruening called him, "A hatcher of hate, a deviser of derisiveness, and a vendor of venom."

Similary criticized by Gruening were the nixon appointments to the Supreme Court.

When the Pentagon Papers case came before the Court, two of the three dissenting votes against releasing the papers were Nixon appointees. Gruening found it strange that "these strict constructionalist judges could not strictly construe the First Amendment on freedom of the press.

UMass Dance Group Concert Next Week

On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, April 26, 27, and 28, the UMass Concert Dance Group will present its annual spring concert under the direction of Daniel Peterson, assisted by Leone McEnroe and Candice Morse.

Dances in the concert this year will feature a variety of styles and techniques...ballet, modern, song-dance and jazz.

Three works by dance department faculty members will be presented: "Limitations", a modern piece in three parts, choreographed by Leone McEnroe; "Le Reve du Jour", a modern ballet with music by Stravinsky, choreographed by Candice Morse; and "Ur-Song", a song-dance work for sisteen dancers, choreographed by Daniel Peterson.

The concert will be April 26, 27, and 28, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, at 8:15 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets will be sold at the door on the night of performance; at the Bowker Box Office; in the Campus Center Mall, Monday, April 24 thru Friday, April 28, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.; or can be purchased at the Physical Education Building for Women, April 19 thru April 25.

"King" To Be Screened Sunday

The epic film "King; a filmed Record...Montgomery to Memphis" will be shown Sunday, April 23, at 2:30 p.m. and at 7 P.M. in the Campus Center Auditorium. "King," one of the most acclaimed documentaries made, traces the career of the late Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as leader of the civil rights movement from the Montgomery bus boycott to the assassination.

The three-hour documentary is being jointly sponsored by Harambee, the CCEBS Program and New Africa House

The three-hour documentary is being jointly sponsored by Harambee, the CCEBS Program and New Africa House. Harambee and CCEBS are UMass organizations aimed at meeting minority students' needs; New Afric House is the UMass Black Cultural Center, known for its excellent art exhibitions. Following the showing of "King" the audience will be invited to participate in a discussion of the relevance of the era of nonviolent civil rights demonstrations to today's events.

"King" is more than a tribute to a fallen leader; it is a re-creation of the sit-ins, jail-ins and mass marches for equal rights of the 60's. Without preachment or harangue, the film depicts the events as they actually happened, using newsreel and television footage. In releasing the film for community showing Mrs. Coretta Scott King said, "I hope especially that young people will see the film because they need to appreciate the link between yesterday's marches and today's issues. These events are a vital aspect of the Black Experience and also an important chapter in the history of White America."

"King" was conceived by the noted film producer Ely Landau, who enlisted the cooperation of the religious community to present the film as a noncommercial venture. After two years of preparation, "King" was premiered March 1971 in simultaneous showings in 300 cities to half a million people. Based on the one-night showing, the film was nominated for an Academy Award. The film is distributed by Martin Luther King Foundation, which was established by Dr. King's family and close friends to give support to organizations that perpetuate the ideals and goals to which he gave his life.

Tickets for the film are $1 for adults; children will be admitted free. Tickets are available at the following locations: At UMass: New Africa House, in the student RSO Office at the Campus Center, and at the United Christian Foundation, 319 Hampshire House. Tickets ar available in Amherst at: Mizaur's Mercantile, 9 E. Pleasant St., and at The Yellow Sun, 35 No. Pleasant St. In Northampton: The Valley Woman's Center at 300 Main St. Remaining tickets will be sold at the door 30 minutes before showings.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Jeanette Barnhill, of Mullins, S.C., complains that, "You don't write enough about the sign Cancer. Is it because Cancer's love life isn't very exciting?" Answer: Those born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer are warm, possessive, constantly in love if not always constant. The "love life" of Cancer is exciting and, this year, many born under this sign will marry, have homes and families of their own. Those already married may change residence, will have additional financial opportunities and will be rid of numerous burdens.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on creative efforts. Young ideas spark chances for success. You are able to spread influence and gain greater recognition. You complete, round out, set stage. You are due for and will receive plaudits.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some family members could exhibit stubborn streak. Win your way; don't attempt to overwhelm others. Be independent, not arrogant. New deal is due in domestic, property areas. You could receive fine offer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You find outlet for recent siege of restlessness. Ideas are plentiful. Be selective. Choose quality over quantity. Trust hunch. Short journey could be on agenda. Neighbor, relative will be co-operative.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis on money, personal possessions. You pay and collect. Highlight versatility. Have alternatives available. What you seek is available. Protect valuables. Be a horse-trader. Don't give up something for nothing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lunar cycle at peak, stress independence, original approach. Some preconceived notions are dispelled. Welcome contacts and challenges. Your intuition, judgement are on target. Act in confident, forthright manner.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Communicate with representativa of special interest group. You accomplish much through organized effort. Visit one confined to home, hospital. Shake off tendency toward fear, self-doubt.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent on using talents, assets to transform desires into realities. Be diplomatic. Entertain at home and include family members. Welcoma opportunity to form new alliances. Friendships can blossom.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid wishful thinking. Obtain hint from Libra message. If techniques are improved, you gain. Goal is not as far as you might now imagina. Those "at top" are willing to make room for you. Be responsive.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good lunar aspect now coincides with vacation travel; futura plans, development of philosophy. Obtain moral and financial support. Broaden horizons. Write, publish and advertise. Efforts will be rewarded.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Estates, documents which you own jointly with another--these are spotlighted. Be sure sharing of burden-financial and otherwise-is equally divided. Aries may be in picture. Protect your interests.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis on partnership, marriage. You require co-operation of one who cares-not wise going it alone. Be sure of legal rights, restrictions. Take nothing for granted. Obtain hint from Capricorn message.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Relative may be persistent in making demends. Kay is to overlook minor faults. By giving you also will receive. Share knowledge. Then you set up pattern which leads to ultimate personal gain.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fina sense of humor, appreciate luxuries, have tendency to be impractical. People like to have you around at parties, celebrations. You are a natural entertainer who can make others forget their woes. Often, however, you are smiling on the outside while crying inside. Powerful year indicated. September will be an outstanding month.

Crew Inaugurates New Home

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

The UMass crew team returns home this Saturday to host the U.S. Coast Guard Academy and St. Joseph's College of Philadelphia on Lake Wickabog in West Brookfield. The regatta will begin at 10:30 a.m. with two freshman races to be followed by the JV eight, the Varsity four and Varsity eight races.

This will be the first time that shell racing will appear on the lake. Coach Mike Faherty has worked along with the Lake Wickabog Boat Club in establishing the new 2,000 meter course. This will be the first time this year that the oarsmen will race upon a lake. In recent weeks, the Redmen have had to contend with the strong current of the Connecticut and the changing tides of the Harlem.

The UMass rowers have beaten Marist College, Wesleyan, Villanova and King's Point in the Spring Fever Regatta, and were beaten by a strong eight from MIT, but managed to pull ahead of Columbia. The varsity four is undefeated to this point.

Coast Guard seems to be the chief threat this weekend as they are now 3-0, with victories over Ithaca Colleg, Wesleyan, BU, Yale and Lasalle in one multi-regatta and two dual races. They have an experienced crew, as all members of the team that placed third in the Charles River Classic last year, are back.

St. Joseph's also promises to be tough, as they are undefeated, having beaten last year's National College Champion, Georgetown, by 14 seconds. Though this crew has lost four orasmen to graduation, They promise to be ready, as they have been finalists in the nationals for the past eight years, having won it three times.

Coach Faherty has said that these two schools rate at least in the top five of the college division. Coast Guard will race only in the four races involving eight man shells, while St. Joe's has entered two eights and a four.

Since last week, there has been a major shakeup in the varsity shells. Practices have switched from just rowing to competition between shells. Jeff Sheehan will pilot the varsity eight this week, while Captain Rick Jones has the inside track of switching from the varsity four to stroke of the varsity eight.

Weather permitting, the regatta on Lake Wickabog promises top flight competition for the Redmen. Homecoming should be quite interesting as the races will beheld in the morning to set up a situation where hopefully still water will prevail for the rowers to mai h skills. Fortunately this regatta was desi ned so as the fan will get a very good view o: the races. Also, the races will finish with plenty of time to spare for the energetic fan to get back in time to see the baseball game.

Directions: Take Route 9 to the center of West Brookfield (just the other side of Ware). Take a left at the lights onto Cottage Street. There is a beach approximately 3/8 mile down the road on the right. This will present an excellent view of the finish. This is approximately 20-25 minutes from Amherst.

Bruins Won't Do It

By BILL BALLOU

Just thinking a bit about hockey, seeing as baseball UMass style was rained out and baseball Boston style hasn't been particularly thrilling, I was trying to figure out who would win the Stanley Cup.

I succeeded.

By reading this you will save yourself either time or money, since you won't have to go to any of the games and you won't have to watch them on TV.

After examining all the facts, it becomes apparent that the New York Rangers will win the Stanley Cup. (I never had many friends anyway) Now realize, I didn't say the Rangers were a better team than the Garden heroes, for after all the Bruins did win the Prince of Wales Trophy, and regardless of what anyone says that is a better indication of superiority than Lord Stanley's Silver. But I do think it's the Rangers this year.

Some evidence.

Momentum, a major factor in any playoff situation, is entirely on the side of the Rangers. New York did a good job on the Canadiens, which marked them as a "for real" team. They are in the process of doing a job on the Black Hawks, and should take them in, at most, six games. Both these teams are tough customers, teams that had to be rated a decent shop at the Cup.

Compare Boston, who pretty obviously will also make the finals. The B's have beaten nobody. At least nobody who really figured in the race for all the marbles.

Toronto gave it their best, but it wasn't even enough to get the Bruins tired. And St. Louis just doesn't have a leg to skate on.

So what have the Bruins done to get themselves in the finals? They've played a few games against nothing competition, and done little to develop any kind of momentum. And, as I said, that's one thing New York will have.

The Rangers have a better defense than the Bruins. Not that Boston's isn't good, but it's been hampered with the addition of Carol Vadnais. Vadnais is a good hockey player but it's going to take a while before he fits into the Bruins' style of play. Remember Mike Walton.

Bobby Orr, Dallas Smith and Don Awrey are as good as anyone in hockey on the blue line, but the Rangers have more depth back there. They have five major league defensemen, the Bruins right now three and one-half. Ted Green just ain't a major leaguer any more.

Defense wins playoffs.

And lastly, the law of averages favors New York. The Broadway Blues have not won a Stanley Cup since 1940, and that's a helluva long time. The Rangers have made more consecutive playoff appearances than any other team in hockey over the last seven years. Sometime they're bound to go all the way. Their luck is due for a change, and if you don't think luck isn't a big part of any championship then you're kidding yourself.

It should be the Rangers. No, Virginia, Bobby Orr is not God.

They played well against the Reds, but they are in deep trouble against Nova Scotia. The Voyageurs could probably have beaten Pittsburgh out for the fourth playoff spot in the NHL West.

Hockeytown USA, will not be Cuptown USA, this year.

C's Try To Even Series

NEW YORK (AP) - The Boston Celtics will try to square their playoff series against the New York Knicks Friday night and their success or failure most likely will revolve around center Dave Cowens.

Cowens, who had sub-par performances in the first two games when the Knicks built a 2-0 lead in the best of 7 National Basketball Association semifinal series, was in top form for the Celtics' 115-109 victory Wednesday night.

"Cowens stood out," said Knicks coach Red Helzman after the Boston center hit 10 of 18 field goal attempts, grabbed 16 rebounds and handed out six assists.

A victory by the Celtics Friday would restore the homecourt advantage they earned by finishing first in the Eastern Conference's Atlantic Division while the Knicks finished second.

The Celtics once again will try to take charge with their fast break which the Knicks stifled in winning the first two games.

"The thing they did differently Wednesday night," said New York's Bill Bradley, "was that they ran better and got all key hoops."

Both clubs appeared to be ready physically for the fourth game in Madison Square Garden. New York guard Dick Barnett saw only one minute of action Wednesday night but his sore back reportedly is better.

The winner of this series will play the winner of the Los Angeles-Milwaukee series, which Los Angeles leads 3-2, in the finals.

Ruggers In Action

On Saturday afternoon the UMass rugby club will be facing a stiff challenge when the Schenectady ruggers invade Amherst. UMass will be sending their "A" and "C" squads against the visitors while the "B" team will be playing an away game in Portland. The first game will start at 1 p.m. when the "A" team takes the field. The "C" game is scheduled to begin at approximately 2:30.

Last Saturday the ruggers fared well against a tough Brown University contingent when they were able to win two of their three games.

The "B" team opened with an impressive 16-4 victory behind the superb running of scrum half Larry Thibeault.

In the main contest the "A" team lost a well fought battle by the score of 12-0. Despite a fine team effort the A's were just not ableto penetrate the Brown goal line and had to accept their first loss of the spring season

Lacrossemen Face Wesleyan

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

"Let's play them one at a time" is the policy of the Redman Lacrosse Team as they travel to Wesleyan University tomorrow to try and continue their winning streak and retain their ranking as one of the top lacrosse teams in the country with a 5 win and 2 loss record to date.

"After a strong victory over Harvard this week, we'll have to try not to let down on this game, but fight just as hard to win even though it isn't as tough a team", says Coach Garber.

Wesleyan currently ranks 8th in New England,(UMass is 2nd) with a 2-2 record; winning over Bowdoin and Middlebury and losing to Yale and Washington and Lee. UMass is the big game of the season to the Cardinal Stickers; last year the Redmen beat them 15-2.

However, this year Wesleyan boasts a very big (physically) team and an improved attack with Jim Akin 6'5", 230 lbs., in the crease attack position aided by Chris Diamond and Mark Fredland. A key to Redman victory will be the midfield's control of the ball.

Their defense is basically new this year, but Goalie Charles Cocores is supposed to be very good.

The hard part for the Redmen in playing this game Saturday is that they've just come off from a very physical game with Harvard. Coach Garber says, "We've got a lot of bruises so we'll have to go easy at practice Thursday and Friday."

Basically the Redmen will be playing the same game that has brought them their victories to date. Sure to see plenty of action Saturday are Goalie Bruce Crawford; Attackmen: Charley Hardy, Paul Ritch, John Nagle, Fred Michels, and Pete Conolley; Midfielders: Hirsh Seidman, Dana Stone, John Martin, Carl Leuders, Dwight Blomquist, and Tim Bosworth; and Defensemen: Kevin Carpenger, John McCarthy, Bill Blaustein, and Bob Lindsay.

Runners At Central Conn.

By EARLE BARROLL

And so the track season moves on.

Tomorrow afternoon the UMass track team will be at Central Connecticut for a tri-meet with the host team and Springfield College.

This will be the first chance this outdoor season for the Redmen to encounter the helter-skelter that goes into the script when three teams go at each other.

Due to Mother Nature, their only other chance for a three meet showdown with Northeastern and Boston University to open the season was snowed out. And then when it was rescheduled, B.U. had to back out to honor a previous commitment.

What can they expect from this who-can-beat-who-in-what-event and take-away-points-from-what-team type of psychosis that accompanies this situation?

Well, for starters, the Chiefs are probably the top threat for UMass on the basis of their winter shoing and a group of outstanding individuals including:

Charlie Duggan, a freshman distance ace who has run 4:10 for the mile and 8:54 in the deuce.

The Woodward brothers, Bob and Charlie, favorites in both the discus and shot not only for this meet, but perhaps in New England.

And Rogert Latham, a New England finalist in the 440 last spring who has run this distance in under 49 seconds.

Central Connecticut lacks the necessary depth to compete with both UMass and Springfield but does have the individuals who can take points away from one team and help the third team in so doing in:

And distance runners Bruce Ellis (4:12 mile, 9:00 deuce) and Bob Lees.

Where does this leave the Redmen? Not as bad as it appears. There is no doubt that Ken O'Brien has the depth needed to cope with a situation of this sort.

His formula for victory: "We'll just have to hope that our running can counter-balance the running of Duggan and the throwing of the Springfield athletes."

O's Beat Tigers

BALTIMORE (AP) - Paul Blair's fourth-inning home run, one of two Baltimore hits, provided the winning margin as Pat Dobson hurled the Orioles to a 1-0 victory over the Detroit Tigers Thursday night.

Blair smacked a 2-2 pitch into the left field bleachers leading off aginst loser Tom Timmerman. Two walks followed, but Timmerman eased out of the jam.

The only other Baltimore hit was a third inning single by Mark Belanger.

Dobson, posting his second straight victory, allowed singles by Aurelio Rodriguez in the first and fourth innings and an infield hit by Timmerman in the sixth.

Texas BB Begins

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) - The Texas Rangers bring major league baseball to North Texas Friday night with their home opener, hoping a few cheers can inspire some bat magic from Manager Ted Williams punchless crew.

Dick Bosman, who lost a 1-0 game to California Saturday, will pitch for the Rangers in Arlington Stadium against the California Angels with American League President Joe Cronin among the dignitaries present.

The Rangers were hoping for a crowd of between 15,000 to 20,000 fans-far short of the 35,000 capacity. Texas' home opener last week was postponed because of the baseball strike.

The former Washington Senators are 1-3 in the early going and have been shut out twice.

Williams says "I think the people of Texas will like what we have to offer but they'll have to be patient with out kids and appreciative of their hustle, spirit and improvement. We're going to give them a winner in a very short time if they'll be patient."

The Ranger roster is dotted with youth.

First baseman Frank Howard is the most experienced player on the team. The Ranger management did less than a spirited job of offseason selling of their product, leaving some top baseball people in the area shaking their heads.

Outfielder Elliott Maddox said, "We're going to be bucking football. I think all of us would've liked to have seen the club push harder after the franchise was moved."

Shortstop Toby Harrah added, "I think it would've helped matters if the team had been promoted in Texas more in the off-season. People would've know more about us and more about major league baseball."

However, there was an embarrassing mixup last Sunday when the Ranger television network faled to carry the game with California as had been widely publicized. The broadcast had been cancelled 10 days before-because of uncertainty over the players' strike. But no one told newspapers and stations about the cancellation. As fate would have it. It's the only game Texas has won this year.

Rangers Win Again

NEW YORK AP — Defenseman Dal Rolfe broke a tie with a second-period goal and the New York Rangers defeated the Chicago Black Hawks 3-2 Thursday night to take a commanding 3-0 lead in their best-of-seven National Hockey League Stanley Cup semifinal playoff.

The Rangers, bidding to reach the Stanley Cup finals for the first time in 22 years, can wrap it up in the fourth game against the West Division champion Black Hawks Sunday night.

Rolfe, who scored only two goals during the regular season, matched that total with his second playoff goal, completing a dazzling passing play that gave the Rangers the lead for keeps.

Linemates Vic Hadfield and Rod Gilbert started the rush in the New York zone and Gilbert's pinpoint pass sent Rofe in for the clean shot at Chicago goalie Gary Smith.

That made the score 3-2 and then the Rangers put up a spectacular checking curtain in front of goalie Gilles Villemure throughout the third period to keep Chicago off the scoreboard.

The Hawks lifted goalie Smith for an extra attacker in the final minute but the checking Rangers held them off.

Hitters Play Two vs. URI

April showers may bring May flowers, but all they give to baseball players are headaches. It rained yesterday (so what else is new), and the rain forced the postponement of the scheduled UMass-URI Yankee Conference baseball game at Kingston, R.I.

So, if Mother Nature cooperates, there will be a doubleheader between those same two teams this Saturday at Lorden Field on this campus.

The twin bill starts at 12:30 P.M. and will see the Redmen go for their eleventh and twelfth straight wins without a defeat. URI is 0-2 conference-wise while UMass stands at 4-0 and is tied for the conference lead with Connecticut.

Bruins Bomb Blues

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran Johnny Bucyk scored three goals and Eddie Westfall contributed a pair as the high- powered Boston Bruins mauled the St. Louis Blues 10-2 Thursday night for a 2-0 lead in their Stanley Cup playoff semifinals.

The 36-year-old Bucyk scored the first goal on a power play in the opening period, collected his second while the Bruins had a man advantage again in the third period and then tallied Boston's ninth goal for the second playoff hat trick of his career.

The Bruins fell just one goal short of the playoff record for most goals in a game set by the Montreal Canadiens in 1944.

The Blues, beaten 6-1 by the Bruins in the best-of-seven National Hockey League series opener, outshot Boston 33-31. However, the Bruins completely dominated the action and were much better marksmen.

The Bruins scored three goals in the first period, two in the second and then hiked the count to 6-0 before the Blues broke into the scoring column

Mike Murphy banged in his own rebound to spoil goalie Gerry Cheever's shutout bid at 4:37 of the finale. Less than a minute later, Phil Roberto stole a Carol Vadnais pass and scored the other St. Louis goal.

Dickinson Still Occupied, Negotiations On

By CHARLEY BERKOW

The student strike is over, but strike related activities are still continuing on campus.

Students voted in a referendum Friday to end the strike. (See referendum story on page 3).

At this time, the Coalition Against Oppression and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War are still holding Dickinson Hall, where Reserve Officers Training Corps offices and classes are.

Negotiations are being held between the UMass administration and the Coalition and VVAW about the building and its use.

Negotiations were held yesterday morning, afternoon and evening between negotiating teams from the administration and the Coalition Against Oppression. The negotiations were reportedly centering on the uses of the Dickinson Hall and the future of ROTC on campus.

The Negotiations resumed at 8:00 last night. The only comment by the Coalition negotiators after the session, at about 10:30, was that "Negotiations are still continuing."

At a mass meeting held yesterday evening in Dickinson Hall, the Coalition's Negotiating Committee was given a mandate to negotiate within the limits of "no business as usual at Dickinson Hall."

Yesterday afternoon's mass meeting was held to determine the general feelings of the people supporting the Center for Social Change and the Occupation of Dickinson Hall and to set the negotiating limits, goals and strategy for the negotiating committee. The meeting lasted about 4 hours and was attended by about 200-300 people.

John Hogan, speaker of the Student Senate, sat in on part of the Coalition negotiating strategy meeting. Hogan had been sitting in on the negotiations between the administration and the Coalition.

Members of the Negotiating Committee asked that Hogan not attend the negotiations between themselves and the administration. They said that he had been hampering their positions at the talks. They noted that negotiations with the administration are supposed to be closed meetings.

Hogan said that he was attending the negotiations as a neutral party, as Speaker of the Student Senate.

The mass meeting voted to ask him to not attend the negotiations but to allow him to stay there at Dickinson if he wished. He didn't.

Each negotiating team consists of six members. The members of the Coalition's team are Zoe Best and Barbara Gilbert of the Women's Caucus, Ray Kidisas and Joe Doucette of the VVAW, and Alvin Schmidt and Ben Jones of the Men's Caucus.

The members of the Administration's Negotiating team are Randolph Bromery, chancellor, Robert Gage, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Ellen Gerber, Associate Professor of Phys-Ed, Seymour Shapiro, Acting Head of the Botany Dept., Dallas Darland, Staff Assistant, Chancellor's Office and Zina Tillona, Associate Professor, Romance Languages.

Official spokespersons for the Coalition said that workshops and committee meetings were held in Dickinson yesterday. The spokespersons said that about 40 to 50 people came to a workshop on the inter-relationships between the war in Vietnam and racism and sexism. The spokespersons said that films were shown continuously throughout the day.

Official Coalition spokespersons said that the Coalition has at least five committees - a Workshop Committee, a Communications Committee, a Funding Committee, a Security Committee and a Negotiating Committee.

The Communications Committee was set up to deal with the media, and communications within the coalition and between the Center and the outside world. It is supposed to draw together information for press releases and official statements. All photographers allowed in Dickinson Hall must be escorted within the building by representative from the Coalition.

The Workshop Committee is supposed to organize workshops for discussing and educating people about sexism, racism the war in Vietnam; and their interrelationships.

The funding Committee was organized to get money for supplies, including food, which is being stockpiled in the building.

The Security Committee is responsible for making sure that no people get in the building who are not supposed to, making sure that nobody takes anything from the building that he is not supposed to, making sure that there is no vandalism in the building, and cleaning the building, according to the spokespersons.

Dickinson Hall was occupied Thursday morning by the Vietnam Veterans against the War and the Women's Caucus.

The University administration gave little resistance to the occupation of the building. The administration originally gave the use of the building to the groups until midnight Friday; this was later amended until midnight Sunday.

The VVAW and the Women's Caucus agreed - after Thursday night's split between the strike coalition when the Third World Alliance and the Women's Caucus left the main strike body - to occupy the building jointly. The Men's Caucus later joined in the occupation. The Men's and Women's Caucuses joined together in an organization called the Coalition Against Aggression (CAG).

The Coalition and VVAW announced over the weekend that the takeover of the ROTC building, Dickinson Hall, is permanent. They said that the purpose of the takeover is to end the ROTC programs on campus and to turn Dickinson Hall into a Center for Social Change for the entire community.

The Center said in a statement released to the Collegian that its purpose in occupying Dickinson Hall is to house its proposed program for social change. The statement said that that program consists of:

"Educational workshops on the issues of the war, sexism, racism, and their interrelationships.

The development of programs to deal with effective changes of these issues.

"To create a day care center, a veterans center, and womens center.

Viet Children's Hospital Focus Of Drive Here

A two-day fund raising drive for a children's hospital in Saigon will be initiated today in the concourse level of the Campus Center.

Frank Kennedy, leading organizer of the drive, said the drive holds special significance at this time since it will clearly express the sincerity of the UMass student in dealing with the issues and problems behind the Vietnam war.

He said the Center for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery in Saigon is dedicated to treating thousands of injured and maimed children, who have suffered directly and indirectly from the Vietnam war.

The center, said Kennedy in an interview, treats children regardless of which side caused the injury. All patients in the center are children with an average age of eight, he added.

"The drive comes on the wake of the two-day student strike since it will provide students with the necessary means of doing something constructive for the innocent victims of Vietnam," he said.

Asked what a contribution to the center will do, Kennedy replied with the following figures:

—$5 will enable five children to be transported from a hamlet to the hospital and back again.

—$10 will pay for blood transfusions for five badly burned children.

—$100 will pay for surgery and physical therapy to enable a child to walk again.

—$500 will rebuild a child's face.

"We can at least repair some of the physical damage they have suffered, even though the mental scars, the horrors they have seen and lived through, will last a lifetime," he continued. "The cost of operating the center is $330,000 a year, a small sum by American standards."

Quoting Dr. Arthur J. Barsky and Thomas R. Miller, co-founders of the children's center, Kennedy said, "If the war ended today, there would still be 30 years of surgery to correct the damage done."

News Analysis

Reaction To Strike Tepid

By DON BISHOP

In terms of the number of students who stayed away from their classes and the number of class cancellations, last week's strike should probably be listed as partially successful. While the number of classes held varied from about 50% to 90% in the various academic buildings on campus, attendance at the classes generally seemed to be 40% to 50% of capacity.

From this reporter's view, the effects of the weather on the number of picketers must necessarily be considered a factor in terms of those attending class. Only at Whitmore could the presence of picketers be seen as having some effect on the numbers of people entering the building.

Strikers were at Whitmore from around 8:30 a.m. until 3:00 p.m. They were present at the three main entrances and asked those people entering the building to come back and do their business on another day. According to one spokesman for the picketers, they themselves were denied entrance to Whitmore initially, but later were allowed to enter by Campus Security. The only problem that occurred during the morning there, according to this person, was when the picketers at one entrance padlocked one of the doors from the inside for a short period of time, until it was re-opened by security.

For approximately one hour during the afternoon, an estimated 150 strikers virtually closed the building, denying access to those wishing to enter. This ended at about 2:30 p.m. (See story elsewhere.)

During the class periods, 11:15 and 2:30, this reporter visited classroom areas in Dickinson, Bartlett, Herter, SBA, and Morrill.

No classes were held at all during the day in Dickinson in lieu of the buildings occupation by members of the VVAW (Vietnam Veterans Against the War) and the Women's Caucus. Workshops and meetings were held there by both groups yesterday and these are expected to continue today. (See story elsewhere.)

Classes were being held in the remaining buildings, with the average attendance being about 40% capacity, ranging from about 10% to about 90%. Attendance seemed to be higher in Morrill as compared to the other buildings. Also, the number of classes cancelled seemed to be greater, while the number of students attending those taking place fewer, during the afternoon classes.

When asked why he was attending his 2:30 class, one student replied that he didn't feel the Strike would be effective in changing U.S. policy in Indochina. Others indicated that their particular class was important to attend for one reason or another.

Most of the picketers indicated sympathy with the four Strike demands as being their primary reason for picketing and supporting the Strike.

SUG Board Vetoes Own Salary

By JOHN M. DONNELLY

At their regular meeting last Thursday night, the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board reconsidered a bill passed at the previous meeting which moved to reimburse the SUG Board officers with pay schedules. Upon reconsideration the bill was defeated by a roll call vote of 1 affirmative, 10 negative, and 3 abstaining votes. This differed greatly from the initial vote of two weeks ago: 7 affirmative, 6 negative, and 1 abstaining.

The cause of the reconsideration was principally due to the negative student sentiment. The bill was defeated the second time around because as Vice-Chairperson, Lisa Mandell, said, "The SUG Board members were trying to be more representative of the student body." However, some SUG Board members voted against the bill because they felt that higher reimbursement would be more appropriate.

The bill initiated by Ms. Mandell was moved in response to a current trend to pay student government officers. Many members are still in favor of the bill, and as one member said, "We should recognize that this is something we should discuss further (with students).

Westover Group To Continue Actions

By GILBERT J. SALK

The Westover non-violent civil disobedience action which began Friday, resulting in the arrest of over ninety people, will continue into this week.

At least twenty more people have committed themselves to being arrested early this morning, and others plan to be arrested Tuesday morning. The action will continue for as long as groups of fifteen or more people are willing to participate.

The actions consist of a brief prayer service, followed by a predetermined group sitting in front of the Westover Main Gate in non-violent civil disobedience, blocking traffic and remaining until arrested.

Role-playing workshops for those who wish to participate in the action either Tuesday or Wednesday will be held on both Monday and Tuesday evening at 7:30 on the 9th floor lounge of the Campus Center. Those planning to commit civil disobedience are urged to attend a workshop prior to their participation.

Supporters of the action who do not wish to be arrested have been invited by the organizers of the action to assemble at 6:15 a.m. on the Amherst Common. The group urges those with cars to make them available for transportation to Westover.

Those interested in more information should call Strike Headquarters in Cance House or contact Gil Salk at 545-0813 or 1-369-4097.

900 Students Protest At Westover Friday

By STEPHEN FISHER

At Westover Air Force Base late Friday afternoon, about 900 students from the 5-college area conducted an orderly protest against the air war in Vietnam. The demonstrators engaged in picketing, leafletting and singing at the main gate and industrial gate of the base. Several antiwar activists including a defendant in the controversial Harrisburg 8 conspiracy trial spoke to the crowd on war-related issues.

A representative from the Westover Action Group said that 21 B52 bombers from Westover, which is the 3rd largest Strategic Air Command base in the U.S., were presently flying bombing missions from bases in Guam, Thailand and Okinawa. She also said that 2 of these planes were shot down by enemy action and that 27 GI's from Westover were killed recently. The speaker also claimed that many GI's on the base supported the protesters, but were confined to the base. She decried this as "a violation of their Constitutional rights." Several GI's observed the demonstration from inside the base.

At least 20 police officers from Chicopee and Holyoke, including a squad of tactical police, were on hand, but were not needed. The rally was generally peaceful and orderly in contrast with the morning demonstration at Westover in which about 90 people were arrested for blocking the industrial gate.

Sargent Defends Funding

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent said Sunday his non-election year fund-raising efforts provide money to pay for officeholder's expenses that the taxpayer should not have to subsidize.

"There are expenses that a person in office, particularly a governor, has that in my opinion should not be paid for by the public taxpayer," the governor said in a radio interview.

Examples of such expenses, he said, include travelling to the Republican Governors' Conference in West Virginia next month and to the Republican National Convention this summer.

The governor has been under fire recently for his off-year fund-raising efforts. Last week, he disclosed a list of contributors who, he said, had donated some $151,000 to the fund-raising Sargent Committee since March 12, 1971.

"I think it is better to have small contributions over the years rather than having a crash campaign at the last minute of a campaign and getting huge contributions," the governor said Sunday.

UMass To Get Mass Transit In 1973

By BARRY STAVRO

A $700,000 Mass. Transit Program will be installed in the UMass-Amherst area beginning in February 1973, it was announced here Friday at a press conference by Congressman Silvio Conte.

The Mass. Transit Program is designed to reduce the heavy inter-campus flow of automobile traffic on campus.

Conte said that presently there are 17,850 cars registered on campus for the population of 28,500 students and faculty.

Plans call for free bus service to and from the University on Rte. 9 east and Rte. 116 north.

Twelve buses will be used in the program. The buses are schedule to run every eight minutes.

Additionally, changes will be made on campus to encourage use of the system. Some parking lots will be eliminated and bus lanes will be introduced.

The Department of Transportation will supply $475,000 of the money through a grant, with the UMass School of Engineering supplying the difference in money and services.

These grants will last for twelve months, but Conte predicted the bus service would continue thereafter.

In general, Conte said, "service (of the system) will belong in the hands of the students."

Conte acknowledged that "exactly how many people will use the system will depend on its service, accessibility, and cost." Since there is no charge for thr rides, Conte hopes that the system will be supported.

The UMass project is said to be the first of its kind in the nation, where an attempt is being made to cure the dependency on automobiles in an urban-like community.

"In effect," Conte said, "the University will be an Urban laboratory."

Strike Deemed Officially Over

By DON BISHOP

Last week's two day strike is officially over, according to Student Senate Speaker John Hogan. This word comes from Hogan and the Student Senate after tabulations of Fridy's referendum revealed that 2958 students voted to end the strike on Friday, while 2906 voted to continue the strike through this week.

The referendum, which was conducted in dorms, fraternity houses and the Campus Center, gave students three options. Question one statedone stated that the strike should be ended on Friday. Question two stated that the strike should be continued through the week and ended then. Question three allowed for the strike to be continued for the week and then another referendum would be held this Friday to determine whether the strike should be continued after that.

In the final counting, the Senate added the results from question one with those from questions three to come up with the total of 2906 students being in favor of continuing the strike. 519 people responded to question two while 2387 voted for question three.

A further breakdown finds that 26 dormitories voted to end the strike last Friday, while 20 dorms voted to continue it. Four dorms split on the question.

In terms of the Student Governing Association (SGA) Constitution, for a referendum to be binding upon the Senate, there must be a turnout of at least 25% of the student body. Friday's referendum received a response of approximately 40% of UMass undergraduates.

Although there have been some questions made about the legality of Friday's results, from the standpoint of alleged non-checking of commuters ID's and the supposed early closing of the polls, the Senate has chosen to recognize the validity of Friday's results and will consider the strike officially over. It appears that there will be no major effort on the part of any group associated with the strike, to continue it in that name.

Conte Sees Pen And Paper "Strongest Tools" Against War

By JAMES GOLD

Suggesting to students who are protesting the Vietnam war that the "strongest tool is paper and pencil," U.S. Representative Silvio O. Conte (R-Mass.) called Friday for students to write to their congressmen before the "end-the-war-bill", which was passed by the Senate, comes to a vote in the House within a couple of weeks. Conte said to tell Congressmen, "If you don't vote for me, I won't vote for you."

Conte's remarks came during a question and answer period following the announcement of a mass transit project slated to begin here next February. Knowing the situation of the strike, Conte said he had expected questions concerning his commitment to end the war. He then read from a prepared statement his history of war opposition.

Conte received applause when he said that the recent bombings of North Vietnamese population centers, "have reversed any headway we might have made."

"I was the first congressman to come out against the war," he stated. He added later that those against the war in the House are in the minority. He said that if the eighteen-year-old vote mobilized, they could get Congress to make changes.

He called for the reestablishment of the "power of Congress which has been usurped by the executive branch." Conte also said he supported and/or sponsored every piece of legislation to end the war in the House.

When asked to join the strike, Conte said, "I'm not a member of the school. You don't stop everything because you are against something," he added.

As a congressman, he said he was doing all in his power to stop the war. "When the bill comes up," he said referring to the end-the-war bill, "your congressman will be fighting." The bill also calls for the return of prisoners of war and the ending of war funding.

Westover Vigil Today

By GILBERT J. SALK

The report that 450 Westover AFB personnel will be shipped to Southeast Asia at 2:00 a.m. Tuesday morning has led to a call for an all-night vigil to be held outside the main gate of the base. Plans call for the vigil to begin at 11:30 p.m. Monday and continue until 8:00 a.m. Tuesday.

The vigil will demonstrate support for Westover personnel who are opposed to the Vietnam war. It is expected that prior to the vigil some groups will offer sanctuary, help in filing for discharge as Conscientious Objectors, and other concrete support to Westover GIs who wish help.

The vigil will take place in addition to the continuing nonviolent civil disobedience action in front of the main gate each morning.

Members of the Westover Action Project, a group of GIs currently based at Westover, have asked for Five College support of their anti-war sentiment, and organizers of the vigil feel that it will serve as one way of demonstrating solidarity.

For more information, contact the Strike headquarters in Cance House.

Strike Meeting Replayed

The events last Thursday night in the Ballroom created a great deal of confusion and misunderstanding. The videotape of those events gives the UMass community an opportunity to objectively view their own actions.

The words "Racism" and Sexism" are not accusations; they are recognitions and realizations of conditions in our society which shape the make-up and behavior of every individual.

If this is true, the most direct line of attack in combatting Racism and Sexism must begin with examination of our own individual behavior.

All are invited to come and watch the videotape hopefully with this in mind. The film will be followed by a discussion workshop to explore these personal issues, especially as they relate to war and oppression.

Thieu Sees Failure In Enemy Offensive

SAIGON (AP)-Despite the most intense U.S. bombings of the war, North Vietnamese forces dealt new blows Sunday to government units at An Loc and in the central highlands.

But President Nguyen Van Thieu told the nation the Communist command's offensive so far had filed and would be defeated in the end.

The Saigon command reshuffled its thinly spread forces. Much of its strategic reserves has been chewed up in the enemy offensive that began March 30.

The North Vietnamese took more than 300 U.S. air strikes, including about 50 by strategic B52 bombers each carrying up to 30 tons of explosives. The enemy waited for overcast skies, then hit the provincial capital of An Loc from four sides.

A South Vietnamese infantry battalion was scattered in the central highlands with 15 men killed, 19 wounded and 120 missing. A third day of pinpoint shelling attacks at the central highlands division headquarters of Tan Canh killed one government soldier and wounded 50. Two American advisers were slightly wounded.

President Thieu said the Communist command had committed 250,000 troops to the offensive but failed to achieve any significant military or political objectives.

"They will be defeated again as they were back in 1968 and in the past 17 years," Thieu said in a speech during a celebration of Ancestors' Day.

South Vietnam has a force of about a million men.

As the president spoke, North Vietnamese forces, backed by tanks, launched ground attacks from the north, northeast, south and southeast against An Loc 50 miles north of Saigon, field reports said.

Fighting continued around the district town of Dau Thieng, 30 miles southwest of An Loc, and enemy forces were reported in control of the airstrip.

Field reports said North Vietnamese gunners renewed heavy artillery, rocket and mortar barrages agsinst An Loc just before dawn, then made ground assaults three hours later. Two North Vietnamese tanks were reported knocked out by fighter-bombers and at least 40 enemy soldiers killed in one clash.

South Vietnamese rangers were reported locked in battle with a North Vietnamese unit of 100 or more troops in the northeast sector of An Loc.

Military sources said prisoners captured in fighting around Dau Thieng, headquarters for the once-prosperous Michelin rubber plantation, said their unit had gone to the plantation to pick up food and supplies hidden there earlier.

The sources said fighting around Dau Tieng had virtually destroyed one battalion of the 174th Regiment of North Vietnam's 7th Division. The figure, not confirmed independently by other sources, was given as 230 killed.

The 174th Regiment has two other battalions, each about 250 men, the prisoners were reported to have told interrogators.

In addition to knocking out two enemy tanks near An Loc, South Vietnamese forces claimed the destruction of a 130mm artillery piece by aircraft, five miles north of the battered provincial capital.

It was the first time one of the 17-mile range artillery guns, capable of firing up to seven rounds a minute, had been reported as far south as the 3rd Military Region. They have been used in the fighting along the demilitarized zone and also in Laos.

Fighting was reported to have abated at midday.

Field reports said South Vietnamese helicopters flew in supplies to An Loc and evacuated about 60 wounded South Vietnamese soldiers, some of them apparently hurt in previous fighting.

In Brief...

Members of Congress Ask Nixon For Conference

WASHINGTON (AP)-Eighty-one members of Congress have signed a letter to President Nixon asking for a meeting to discuss the situation in Southeast Asia.

"We are writing as representatives of our constituents who want an end to U.S. involvement in the war in Southeast Asia, their letter, released Sunday, said.

The letter, signed up 12 senators and 69 members of the House, asked for the meeting as soon as possible and well in advance of Nixon's trip to Moscow next month.

Rep. Chisholm Appears in Boston

SOMERVILLE, Mass. (AP)-Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., called Sunday on Massachusetts voters to use her as a "catalyst for change" when they vote in Tuesday's state presidential primary.

Mrs. Chisholm made appearances in the Boston area and addressed her plea for votes directly at black and newly enfranchised young voters in the next to last day of campaigning.

Cop-Car Copped

READING, Mass. (AP)-Someone forgot to tell a Reading policeman to take the keys and lock the door when he parks his cruiser.

The cruiser was stolen Saturday night when a suspected robber eluded police in a wooded area and then escaped in one of several patrol cars left parked nearby by the offices who were looking for him.

Apollo 16 Wraps Up Mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)- Apollo 16 explorers rocketed away from the Descartes Mountains of the moon Sunday, carrying with them rocks geologists believe were formed by early lunar volcanoes. The two men thus achieved their primary goal.

With astronauts John W. Young and Charles M. Duke, Jr. at her controls, Orion, the lunar module blasted upward into the black lunar sky, and sped into moon orbit.

Scientists on earth praised Duke and Young for their accomplishments on the moon.

"I believe we got everything we went for," said Dr. Tony England, a scientist-astronaut at the Manned Spacecraft Center.

"What a ride, what a ride!" Duke called as Orion climbed into space. The two astronauts left the moon at 8:26 p.m., EST, and sped off toward a link up with the command ship Casper, piloted by their crewmate Thomas K. Mattingly II.

Together, the three will rocket out of lunar orbit Monday night and start toward earth and a Pacific Ocean splashdown Thursday.

Young and Duke were on the moon for 71 hours, and with them they brought a pocketfull of records, the amount of rocks brought from the moon, time on lunar surface and speed traveled in the moon vehicle.

The astronauts roamed a field of black and white boulders-some of them building sized and the largest moon rocks ever seen-and walked to the very edge of a crater so deep they could not see its bottom.

"I can't believe the size of the big black rock," Duke said as the astronauts stopped their electric car beside a massive crater they call North Ray.

French Give Britain, Pompidou Poor Reception

PARIS (AP)-French voters gave Britain a lukewarm welcome to the European Common Market on Sunday and dealt President Georges Pompidou a stinging rebuke by refusing his call for a massive vote.

Nearly complete official returns showed 68.11 per cent against. But 45 per cent of the registered voter stayed away from the polls or cast blank ballots, a record high for national elections since World War II.

The yes vote amounted to only 38 per cent of France's 29,195,300 registered voters.

The highest previous abstention rate since 1945 was the 30.9 per cent in the second round of the 1969 presidential election that swept Pompidou into office.

When the four countries became members Jan. 1, 1973, the Common Market will include a population of 256.6 million persons in 10 nations and be the second-largest economic power in the world after the United States.

UNICEF Declares Rich-Poor Gap Wider

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)- The U.N. Children's Fund has concluded that development programs in the last decade actually widened the gap between rich and poor in the less developed countries by overemphasizing economic growth and industrialization.

That assessment is set out in a study that the secretariat of UNICEF has drawn up as first step toward laying down goals for the fund to follow in helping children and adolescents in the Second U.N. Development Decade, 1971-80.

The study says a review of national and international development strategies of the 1960s shows an "excessive and unbalanced emphasis on the growth of the domestic product" as an end in itself, and not enough consideration of production and consumption patterns and effective use of labor."

S. Viet Casualties Up

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese have suffered at least 10,000 military casualties, including about 3,000 men killed, since North Vietnam launched its offensive 3-1/2 weeks ago, military sources said Sunday.

Communist command losses, according to estimates by senior allied officials, are 13,000 killed and an unknown number wounded and missing.

Up to last Thursday, South Vietnamese officials had withheld all casualty figures for the offensive which began March 30.

The military sources said the casualty figures for the South Vietnamese were based on total reported losses for the first 15 days of April, plus an estimate that they remained at least constant since then.

Even at that, one source noted, the figures may be on the conservative side since they do not include casualities for the last two days of March. The first enemy attacks across the demilitarized zone began March 30.

The figure of 3,000 estimated as killed so far was 800 short of the total which confidential reports listed as killed during all of the 45-day South Vietnamese invasion into Laos in February-March 1971.

Saigon had 10,000 casualties in that entire operation, those reports said-more than 40 per cent of the total attacking force. South Vietnamese officials admitted to about half that number.

The South Vietnamese military command last week reported 1,002 of its troops killed during the week ending April 15, a sharp increase from 641 of the previous week and the second highest weekly toll of the war.

The 15-day casualty figures were not disputed by senior U.S. officials. One said, "I have no reason to think that they are untrue or that the South Vietnamese are lying about their losses. They simply report what they know about, and their system is slower than ours.

"If their reports are behind, it is more a function of inability to get information from the front that it is an attempt to conceal it."

The casualty figures for the first 15 days of April showed 1,982 killed, 5,425 wounded and 854 missing in action.

On the North Vietnamese-Viet Cong side, the estimate of 13,000 killed stems primarily from prisoner reports and assessments of bombing of enemy troop concentrations by allied aircraft, which military sources said apparently is responsible for the majority of enemy losses.

Military sources indicated a belief that high-level U.S. B52 bombers had been particularly effective.

Doctors Object To AMA Iron Proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Journal of the American Medical Association has thrown its support behind a government proposal to double the amount of iron in white bread and flour. It acted over objections from about 200 doctors who fear it might increase cases of a rare and fatal disease.

"Final decision has been delayed twice since the proposal was first announced two years ago in deference to this group," the editorial said. "Rather than being guilty of 'malfeasance' as suggested by them, the Food and Drug Administration may find itself accused of over-cautious inaction."

The National Academy of Sciences Food and Nutrition Board and the Agriculture Department also have written in support of the plan designed to curb a rising incidence of anemia in the United States.

The FDA proposed a requirement that iron fortification of wheat flour be raised from 15 to 40 milligrams per pound, and enriched bread, buns and rolls from 8-to-12.5 to 25 mg. The old standards have been unchanged since they were adopted 30 years ago to help replace some of the nutrients found in whole wheat flour.

A more lengthy statement by the Council on Foods and Nutrition will be published May 8, reporting on Army research indicating that iron deficiency is becoming a significant problem among males as well as females of childbearing years.

Opoosing more iron in bread is a group of physicians led by Dr. William H. Crosby, chief of hematology at the New England Medical Center Hospitals in boston.

He argues that doubling iron enrichment might accelerate damage by undiagnosed hemochromatesis, which he calls a terrible disease that "eventually destroys the liver, heart, testes or pancreas."

Butterworth wrote that hemochromatesis "is a very rare disorder occurring perhaps once among 8,000 to 10,000 hospital deaths...."

"It is well known that wheat flour is widely consumed and that assimilable iron added to it will reach an enormous segment of the population for whom it is intended. The questions should not be 'Is increased enrichment with iron safe?' but rather, 'Is it enough?'"

Iron enrichment is necessary, he said, to replace sources lost when fewer people cook with iron pots and skillets, fewer homes use well or spring water and more food processors use aluminum, stainless steel, glass and plastic vessels.

Dr. Allan L. Forbes, deputy director of nutrition in the FDA's Bureau of Foods, said anemia is a more widespread problem than generally recognized, with degrees of severity ranging from pale complexion to death.

Fighting Renewed In Ireland

BELFAST (AP) — Fighting broke out between Protestants and Roman Catholics in Londonderry Sunday and bomb blasts caused widespread damage in other areas of Northern Ireland.

No casualties were reported from the two explosions, but 20 buildings in Dungannon in County Tyrons were hit.

A bomb was thrown and three shots were fired at an army post on Belfast's Springfield Road.

British troops claimed to have hit a sniper who fired on an army post near Belfast's Henry Taggert Memorial.

No troops were involved in the fighting in Londonderry's Waterside district, a mixed Protestant-Catholic area. More than a dozen rounds of gunfire rang out during the morning.

There was no report of casualties.

The area, across the Foyle River from the Catholic Creggan and Bogside sectors, had been relatively quiet until a stone-throwing battle erupted between people from the two religious communities.

In Belfast, the father of an 11-year-old boy who died Saturday of injuries received during a battle Thursday, claimed rubber bullets fired by British troops had fractured his son's skull. Rubber bullets are supposed to have a stunning but nonfatal effect.

The boy was the 313th victim of Northern Ireland's 32 months of violence.

Paddy Devlin, an opposition leader, said he planned to demand a full inquiry into the boy's death. He said he understood pieces of metal had been inserted into the rubber bullet to make it heavier.

An army spokesman said this was impossible but declined any further statement pending the outcome of an autopsy.

A political row broke out in Britain over a demand by Enoch Powell, outspoken maverick Conservative legislator, that the Heath government send troops in to occupy various Catholic districts.

Powell made his demands in a speech to a Scottish Conservative rally. He also delivered a personal attack on William Whitelaw, the party's former floorleader in the House of Commons and now the British government's administrator for Northern Ireland.

Lord Carrington, party chairman, took the unusual step of banning the distribution of Powell's speech through the Conservative party's administrative channels.

Powell has long been feuding with Prime Minister Edward Heath's government over its economic doctrines, efforts to join the European Common Market and Northern Ireland policy. But his personal attack on a former colleague and prty member was believed too much for Carrington.

Whitelaw rejected Powell's demands in advance in a speech at a party rally in Harrogate, England. He said he rejected the advice of "armchiar strategists" who claim Catholic areas could be taken over by force without serious casualties.

"I will not be panicked or tempted into operations which will be bound to cause substantial casualties to women and children," Whitelaw said.

Bouncing At The Blue Wall

Everybody is very happy down at the Blue Wall. Here is just another satisfied person who frequents the cabaret and by his smile one can tell that he is very happy with many things about it.

By ROBERT TOUAKE

The 18 year old drinking law goes into effect next April but there is the possibility those under age at the moment might presently wish to enjoy the physical and spiritual benefits obtained from a Power House or Bloody Mary at the Blue Wall bar. If this be the case these persons might have had more than a passing acquaintance with a man known, in common terms, as the Bouncer.

The other day this reporter spoke with one of these gentlemen, Mike. Depicting a bouncer as a big strapping guy, with a black belt in Karate or some equally dismembering art of self-defense, the meeting was approached with some apprehension on my part. Mike's easy going manner and friendly attitude was a total surprise.

Explaining he is "not a bouncer but instead a floor supervisor," Mike related that one of his duties consists of keeping those not 21 from crossing the patch of blue turf which separates the Blue Wall bar from the rest of the campus.

The carding, or checking of I.D., at the entrance to the bar is the major capaicty many deal with Mike and his peers in. It is here that a potentially good evening can be made or ruined. Mike explained he doesn't "enjoy turning people away" but is only observing the state law which requires everyone entering the Blue Wall bar be 21.

The chances of the A.B.C. (Alcoholic Beverages Commission) paying a visit to the Blue Wall bar are a possibility. Mike related that the Blue Wall "under sells many similar places around town." As a result, pressure from such places might bring the A.B.C. around to check the ages of the clientele of the Blue Wall anytime. If a minor is caught in the bar the bartender could be fined $500.

In many places serving alcohol a person under age cannot even set foot in the door. The Blue Wall is unique in that minors are allowed pass the entrance. The result of this open-door policy has allowed a few enterprising souls to slip past the floor supervisor stationed at the entrance to the bar.

On a busy night at the Blue Wall there may be as many as 600 people there. Mike realizes he cannot prevent a few people from "slipping into the bar" on such occasions. To curb such matters, on busy nights, a check has been placed at the entrance to the Blue Wall. Those who are 21 are stamped which allows them to enter the bar.

Besides carding people, Mike explained, the duties of the floor supervisor include, "making certain no alcohol and dope are brought into the Blue Wall from the outside" and cleaning up after the place closes. The former is accomplished by floor supervisors stationed unobtrusively around the Blue Wall, near the fringes of the crowd. In the event alcohol or dope is spotted those involved are discreetly asked to put it away.

McGovern Canvases For Blue Collar Vote

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. George McGovern campaigned for the blue collar vote Sunday, buoyed by his strong showing in a new poll and his chief rival's decision to cancel personal appearances in Massachusetts prior to Tuesday's presidential primary.

A spokesman for Sen. Edmund S. Muskie said Sunday that the Maine Democrat had decided to remain in Pennsylvania to retain a "momentum" which promised a better chance of victory in that state's primary, also on Tuesday.

The spokesman said that Muskie's chances of beating McGovern in Massachusetts looked "very dim."

The announcement came hard on the heels of a poll in the Boston Globe showing Massachusetts voters favoring the South Dakota senator over Muskie, 43 per cent to 19 per cent.

McGovern, however, was cautious about the poll.

He began the day at a Knights of Columbus rally in Medford, scheduled evening rallies in Worcester and Springfield. Prior to leaving the Boston area, however, he scheduled a news conference which said would produce a significant endorsement of McGovern's candidacy.

He told youthful supporters at the entrance to the restaurant where the breakfast was held not to "pay too much attention" to the Globe poll.

He said he wanted not only to carry the statewide popularity vote, but "We also want to carry McGovern delegates."

Although the winner of the popularity poll statewide and in each of the Congressional districts will be assured of the delegate vote on the first ballot at the Democratic convention this summer, the delegates are elected separately.

Therefore, it is possible for one candidate to win the popularity contest while delegates committed to another hopeful get elected.

In a speech to the Knights of Columbus, McGovern used the theme that everyone has the right to say "I am somebody."

He said that America, "individually and as a nation, is now in search of its identity, its roots and history, its hope.

"I believe that hope can be recaptured by a new recognition of the diversity among us upon which the common good can be built."

He said it is time "to stop denying out differences and begin taking pride in them."

The "great failure" of the Nixon administration, McGovern said, is its "failure to sense and understand currents of change that could increase the country's sense of community and common purpose."

U.S. Rep. Wilbur Mills D-Ark., also spoke at the Medford Knights of Columbus breakfast and again attacked President Nixon's economic policies.

Learn The Business Ropes

The National Association Of Business Economists will conduct a Seminar-Workshop here on Wednesday, April 26, 1972, at the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center. The general topic of discussion will be "Business Economics as a Professional Career."

Five prominent business economists will take part in the discussions and will also describe the functions he performs for his employer, the skills needed in his position, the training and experience needed in the field, and the potential for advancement.

Mr. Saul B.Klaman, President of the National Association of Business Economists will preside over the general session of the workshops. He is presently the Vice President and Chief Economist of the National Association of Mutual Savings Banks, has served on numerous Task Force Committees under President Johnson and Nixon and subcommittees for the states of New York, Connecticut, California and Massachusetts. A special activity in which he is presently involved is the President's Committee on the Future University, UMass.

Following the general session, there will be four workshops in separate conference rooms for informal question and answer periods.

(1) "Business Economists in a Diversified Corporation" with Robert J. Eggert, Senior Vice President, R.C.A. Mr. Eggert has been a consultant to several President's Council of Economic Advisors and has been a member of the advisory economic committee that serves the Business Council and the Economic Advisory Board, U.S. Dept. of Commerce.

(2) "Business Economics in an Industrial Corporation" with Steven B. Packer, Senior Economist for Mobil Oil Corporation.

(4) "Business Economics in a Trade Association" with Kenneth M. Wright, Vice President and Chief Economist for the Life Insurance Association of America.

This Seminar-Workshop, open to the entire Amherst and Five College Community, will take place in the Campus Center, Room 165. The general session will be from 1:30 to 3:00 with coffee served from 3:00 to 3:30. The four workshops will run from 3:30 to 5:00 with rooms 168, 169, & 170 used for discussion sessions.

Millionaire Taxes Police's Patience

OREBRO, Sweden,—The police have arrested a millionaire real-estate agent who allegedly locked himself up in an empty apartment here four months ago to escape paying a huge tax bill.

They said the 60-year-old businessman planned to hold out till the middle of next month, when the debt owed from 1967 would automatically have been written off.

Statement From Center For Social Change

The Center for Social Change now exists in Dickinson Hall. How its formulation occurred has deep roots in the history of political movements in the history of political movements in this country and is not just the outcome of the recent "strike". So, to clarify its evolution, we, the various groups involved in the Center, would like to give a brief explanation of its interelationships with the Civil Rights Movement, the Woman's Movement, and the Anti-war Movement as they led to the events of the past week. Clarification of those events are also necessary. The people who have worked for the Center are now involved in negotiations for its continuation with the University administration.

—Sexism, Racism, and the War —

The strike of April 20 and 21 centered around three demands:

2) Freeing of all political prisoners.

3) An immediate end to all racism and sexism on this campus and the community.

The main reason for these three demands is due to the inherent connection between them, and how they all go on to explain the nature and cause of U.S aggression in Indochina.

The war in Indochina is a racist war in that it is in line with U.S. foreign policy since the Monroe Doctrine, a fanatic desire on the part of the present and all other preceeding U.S. Administrations to control, manipulate, and stifle the desire of people of color to their basic human rights of being masters of their own destiny; that all U.S. administrations have continued to stall the desire's of Third World People to their right of self-determination.

We discern a definite pattern in the racist nature of U.S. foreign policy vis-a-vis the Third World, and how racist this society is in the treatment of Afro-Americans, Puerto Ricans, American Indians, Chicanos and Orientals. We affirm therefore, that it would be extremely myopic on our part as students of UMass to adopt a position that is going to be one-issue oriented; we also believe that it would be naive and shortsighted for a supposedly politically conscious student body not to relate the question of U.S. aggression in Indochina without seriously seeing parallels between the war and the subtle and sophisticated oppression against women in our society. This society continues to preach the age-old myth that women are inferior-that women, with rare exception, cannot attain the same level of advancement as men in this society. This insensitivity to the right of women to determine their own place in society rather than an already prescribed status, is comparable to U.S. administrations insensitivity to the desires of the Third World people (including those in Indochina) to their inherent right to self-determination. We affirm that in the same way as women are being manipulated, the same is true concerning the history of U.S. foreign policy i.e. "we know what is good for them".

It is because of the above explanation that we feel that the three demands are of equal importance; that we would be sophisticated enough to see all issues involved and not operate on the principle - "stop the war first and then we will deal with racism and male supremacy". We assert once again that this would be not only myopic but also dangerous as it would represent on our part, a capitulation to racism and male chauvinism. It is on this basis that we feel that we would be on the right track towards solving the ills that plague our society.

Historical Analysis

In the initial meetings of the Strike group on campus, four demands were agreed upon by the general Strike group, and were refined to three demands at later meetings. They are the following:

1. An immediate and to all bombing and withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia.
2. Freedom for all political prisoners.
3. An end to the oppression and discrimination against woman and minorities on this University campus.

The women's Caucus for the Strike and the Third world Alliance agreed to ally themselves with the Strike on the understanding that the group, as a body, understood the essential connection and equal importance of all three demands. Until racism and sexism era dealt with at homa, thara will always be Vietnams.

On Thursday night, the Strike group was presented a proposal for an organization that would reflect this understanding of the interconnectedness of these issues that the Strike group elect a Steering Committee of 400 members to be representative of dorms, interested groups, undergraduate and graduate students, faculty, staff and administration. The group would have an Executive Committee of 15 (with three co-chairpersons) appointed by the Steering Committee at large; 1/3 chosen by the Third World Alliance; 1/3 chosen by the Women's Caucus.

The objection was raised to the proposal that so constituting the Steering Committee and Chairpersons would not appropriately represent the anti-war movement, in a strike, whose main focus, it was said was the anti war movement. Severel unmistakaably racist and sexist comments, addressed to Johnetta Cole and to the Women's Caucus and Third World Alliance were made and applauded by the audience which then voted to reject the proposal for constituting the Steering Committee. The Third World Alliance withdrew itself from thair alliance with the Strike group and the Women's Caucus voted solidarity with the Third World Alliance and also withdrew themselves from the group. The position of the Women's Caucus was that they could no longer ally themselves with a Strike group which had shown that they were not equelly committed to importance of all three issues.

Thursday night's meeting demonstrated the need for a mass program of education around these three issues of this University.

Therefore the Women's Caucus has joined with the newly formed Man's Caucus to form the Center for Social Change. The Center and the Vialnam Veterans Against the war agreed to continue the occupation of the ROTC building on campus for use as a generel community educationel and social action center.

The sentiment against mixing issues underlying what happened Thursday night came from the opposite direction in the early days of the movement against the war.

In 1967 Dr. Martin Luther King decided to join the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to a massive anti war demonstration, as had other civil rights groups, including the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee, which two years before had taken e position against the war.

Both groups were told they would lose mess sympathy and support for the Civil Rights movement by taking a stend against tha war, e very unpopular position with white America at that time.

By 1972 the situation had come full circle. Progressiva white America wes saying that the peace movement should not involve itself with the life struggle of Black America because it would cost them the support of the mass of people involved in peace activities.

The advent of the Black Power movement in 1967 confused white people as to their relationship to the Civil Rights movement. Black people found it necessary to deal with the liberation of Black people by themselves.

White people left active participation in the Black communities, ramambering a mandate from John Lewis way back in 1964: "don't use the South as a moral lightening rod" but go into all of America to fight against the war, racism, and all oppression and to make America e fit place for human beings. Prior to this white people had been eble to go into the Black community and play the role of Messiah.

The mandate to clean up our own backyards was indeed difficult to deal with.

About the same time the movement because of the heightened consciousness of women began to realize the oppressive relationship of men to women. Men becema charismatic leaders and meda important politicel decisions women did most of the work and were in reality political leadership. The dehumenized relationship, we realized, came from tha nature of our society, but we began to realize also the speciel nature of the exploitation of women and the need for special forms, such as tha Women's Caucus, to deal with that. We began to recognize then the need for leadership from women, as we realized that the direction for our struggle came in large part from the oppressed peopies of America.

For five years we have struggled to put thet whole concept together. At first, threatened by our concept of Black power, indoctrinated with racism and guilt by this racist, sexist, society, we continued to capitulate to racism and neglected the struggle of all oppressed people as we mobilized opposition to the war.

In the meantima the Black community moved forward around specific programs to end man's inhumenity to man in the Black community. In the movment against the war, in the struggles of the American working people. Giving leadership to all of these struggles as they have gone for all progressive America for a long time. But wa still did not realize that the Liberation of Black people in America did not threaten us, nor did the liberation of other oppressed people, nor the liberation of women.

In one sense, we raached a high point of understanding during the strika when we voted overwhelming on three separate occasions that the struggles of the minority caucus, the Third World Alliance and the Women'sCaucus were in fact our struggle.

Thursday night, however, we were forced to realize that we are still the victims of racist America, that we still feel threatened by the movement of Third World Peopla and by the Women's Caucus, that our understanding of the nature of our struggle is still deficient.

Our rialationship with the Third World Alliance is effected by what happened Thursday night.

But the essentiel unity of the struggle, existing even when whites moved out of the civil rights movement and misunderstood then, still axists and is still misunderstood.

Our task now is to find the proper forms for rialationships, to continua the struggle against racism, the war, sexism and all forms of oppression with a heightened consciousness of the effects of racism and sexism on our movement and on our society, with a heightened sense of the urgency of ending the war and dismantling the military apparatus of our university and in our society.

We have come togethar as the Women's Caucus, to break the habitual acquiesence to this system-an equiesence fostered by the submissive and inferior roles to which we have been consistently assigned--and to undermine sexism wherever it manifests itself in the community-at-large. We are struggling to frae ourselves and our brothers, from the roles which presume that all human interection comply with patterns of competition.

It is our responsibility as women to elucidate the link between liberation wars abroad and freedom struggles here in the U.S.A. Since our foreign policy and domestic affairs reflect one another, we assert that we can effectively, and radically change U.S. foreign policy by challenging the values of the dominant cultura and by developing alternatives viable for all segments of the U.S. population. We applaud the active participation of the Indochinese women in the liberation struggles of their home eraas.

The University of Massachusetts in Amherst is a microcism of the lerger society thet is structured and controlled by the military-corporate elite, and since ROTC is an established military training center on campus, the Women's Caucus found it appropriate to send a women's liberation force, in partnership with the Vietnem Veterans Against the War, to liberate the ROTC building and to begin it's transformation into a relevent action and educational center.

(The Women's Caucus is an organization opan to all women. We invite any woman who is interested in understending these issues mora fully, to join us at Dickenson Hall.)

The Relationship Of The Women's Caucus To The VVAW

The Women's Caucus and tha VVAW mede e joint seizura of the ROTC building. Both of the groups feel thet an institution which prepares men to fight in wers that interfere with the right of self determination of other peoples has no place on a university campus. Tha cruel destruction and killing in Indochina has brought about this sentiment. Both groups are united in their opposition to the Indochina war and in their desire to bring about social change in this country. They feel that the university and surrounding community would best be served if Dickinson Hall was to become a center for activity relavent to transforming the political and economic conditions in tha United States, rather than an institution dedicated to the ruthless perpetration of the existing conditions.

Statement Of The Vietnam Veterans Against The War

The Vietnem Veterans Against the War, in co operation with the Women's Caucus have demanded the abolition of ROTC from this campus. For this reason, they have taken control of Dickinson Hall to help achieve their mutual goals.

As e military establishment devoted toward teaching people mora efficient methods of death and destruction; ROTC on this campus is incompatible with both organization's goals of ending this war, and in a broader sense, the university goal of building a better life.

In addition to this, and in compliance with the VVAW'S national goals, the UMass chapter wants to reaffirm their commitment not only toward ending this war, but also toward changing the domestic, social, politicel and economic institutions that have caused war.

To achieva these goals, the VVAW demands that tha University administration turn Dickinson Hall into e center for social change and a community workshop directed towards solving social problems on this campus.

In the words of Chancelor Bromery "There is no alternative. No one in good conscience can stand idly by as the slaughter continues in our name."

We are not standing idly by.

Statement Of The Center For Social Change

A Center for Social Change has been established at the University of Massachusetts Its purpose is to communicate within our own University and the surrounding communities. The establishment of such a center is e result of our deep concern for the issues of U.S. involvement in Indochine, racism end sexism at the University and the community, and political repression in our own country. The racent bombings of all indochina have made us aware once again, of the war and its relationships to all of these issues (racism, sexism, tha economy, end political repression). For this reason it was deemed necessary that the ROTC building on the UMass campus be occupied. This occupation is for the purpose of housing the proposed program for social change. Thet proposed program consists of tha following:

1. Educationel workshops on the issues of the war, racism, sexism end their interrealationships.
2. The development of programs to deal with effective changes of these issues.
3. To create e day care center, veteran's center end women's center.
4. To establish a center for ongoing community action.

TYPES OF WORKSHOPS

Three types of workshops are beginning immedietely:

1) Generel workshops to educate the University on the issues raised by the strika.

2) Workshops, having as their purpose, the creation of ongoing programs to further educate the community.

3) Workshops to develop the courses and program of the Instituta for Social Change that will be integrated into and become a permenent part of the University curriculum es the Institute for Social Change.

Position Of The Women's Caucus

The U.S. presence in Vietnam is a reflection of imperialistic expansion into the Third World in order to maintain profits for U.S. corporations. This system relies on pacifying U.S. citizens at home by controlling them through a capitalistic hierarchy. This ideology divides and subordinates women to men end racial minorities to whites.

Throughout our history in the U.S., women have challenged the rigid sex roles that grant one segment of the population the power to control and determine the destinies of all other groups--women, and ethnic and racial minorities. These groups have recognized the necessity to organize themselves around the specific issues of their oppression in order to free our society from the white, male-oriented, male-dominated power structura, and to achieve total self determination within tha country.

ROTC And The University

By NICK APOSTOLA

ROTC is again at the forefront of discussions concerning the war, the strike and the University. The best reason to talk about the role of ROTC is because there are a large number of people sitting in Dickinson Hall telling all of us out here that the war must end; that the United States and its people must change; and that the University has to become one of the agents to accomplish both of those ideals.

The University has long been the whore of society. It tells its students that academic freedom prevents outside influence on the educational process, but their words cannot hide the ROTC building and the military recruitment. But we would be foolish if we focused solely on ROTC and forgot what the real issue is: who is to decide what will be taught and what will not be taught on the University campus? Who has the right to decide what we will learn?

For more years than I would like to admit, ROTC was required of all male students attending UMass. The reason being that the University was a land-grant institution and had to maintain the provisions of that agreement, one of which is that the University will provide for military education. But that excuse is no longer used. Now what they are telling us is that academic freedom must be preserved; that freedom of speech must be maintained. Now this one is harder to shoot down.

What must be made clear in this discussion is that there is no objection to ROTC being available to students on this campus, but there is objection to ROTC being given academic credit and use of University facilities without charge. ROTC cannot be treated as an academic discipline as it is now being treated. This is different from freedom of speech. ROTC speaks to me everytime I get a piece of junk mail explaining the glories of military life as an officer; ROTC speaks to me every time I turn on the radio and listen to how I can become part of the new action army.

But who tells me how I can work for peace? Where do I go to learn about changing my society? How do I find out about the minorities and how discrimination has effected them? Where do I go to learn how to change myself, to drive the action army man from within me? There is no place. Yet those who would tell you that freedom of speech for the army is being destroyed ignore these comments. There is no Department of Peace Studies as there is of Air Science and Military Science.

Peace is not a part of our society as war is. There is no place for social change in our society that is not violent. Violence is what is expected in order to change. It is about time that we learned peace.

X-ing It Up

An integral part of ending war, racism, sexism, and other forms of oppression is scheduled for tomorrow: Massachusetts Presidential Preference primary (and delegate selection). This is the first step in choosing our new leaders.

There really are only two candidates which represent honest government, ending discrimination of women and minorities, bringing a real end to the war in Southeast Asia, and allowing greater youth participation. However, both are Democrats, that is, opponents in the same race. Shirley Chisholm and George McGovern will lead us in the right directions if elected. But YOU must be the one who does the electing.

But there is more to it than just marking your paper ballot for your favorite Presidential hopeful. To make sure that whoever you desire as president has a good chance to win his or her party's nomination, you must make sure that you vote for the delegate slates which are pledged to your candidate.

We've been saying ever since eighteen year olds got their right to vote that this right must be exercised to be effective. Tomorrow is the day. You don't like Nixon? Get out and vote against him. You want change in our government, get out and vote for the candidate who will change it to the way you want it.

The Godfather

WASHINGTON–People are very confused about what we are doing in Vietnam. I believe the simplest way to explain it is to try to think in terms of "The Godfather."

A few weeks ago Don Riccardo, the godfather, was sitting behind the desk at his closely guarded house at 1600 Pennsylvania Ave. when his consigliori, Henrico, came in and kissed his hand.

"Basta," the godfather said. "I told the Hanoicheses to stay out of the Saigonetti territory or there would be all-out war."

"Yes, Godfather. I think we have to go to the mattresses."

"I want a meeting of our sub-capos in an hour," the godfather said.

An hour later the godfather sat at the conference table. He said, "The Hanoichese family has just violated an agreement we had about attacking the Saigonetti family. What do we do?"

"Godfather, we been (cq) backing the Saigonetti family for 10 years now. We give 'em weapons, we give 'em men, we give 'em know-how, we give 'em everything. I say we can't do no more. Why should we go to the mattresses again?"

A second sub-capo replied angrily, "That's a lot of linguini. We got to smash the Hanoicheses once and for all. We let them get away with this and our family will be the laughingstock of the world."

"He's right," a lieutenant said. "If the Hanoichese mob don't want peace, we are going to make them get down on their knees and beg for it. I say we put out the contract now."

"Wait a minute. Not so fast," another sub-capo said. "If we blast the Hanoichese territory, we going to have to deal with the Kremlinicchios. Now the godfather has a meeting with the Kremlinicchio family in May. What's going to happen to the meeting?"

The lieutenant said, "Everyone knows the Kremlinicchio family is supplying the Hanoicheses with guns. We got to get the message to them that we're not going to sit around and let them walk all over us."

"Now wait a minute. Are we ready to go to war with the Kremlinicchio family?"

"We ain't going to war with them. They know that all we're doing is protecting the Saigonetti family."

"Godfather," another sub-capo said, "there's a lot of unrest in our family over our commitment to the Saigonettis. Our boys have been bumped off and captured by the Hanoicheses. And nothing's changed. Many people in the family say we should get the hell out. If the Saigonettis can't defend themselves, we can't help them any more."

A tough lieutenant said, "I say we go all-out. Give us the word, Godfather, and we'll hit them with everything."

Everyone looked at the godfather. He sipped a glass of wine. "Everyone knows I'm for peace. But everyone also knows I don't like to be pushed around. Now the godfather elections are coming up in November, and if I do something it could hurt my chances of being godfather again. But if I do nothing it could hurt my chances even more. Now I warned the Hanoicheses not to hurt my chances of being godfather again, but they saw fit to embarrass me. Gentlemen, this is not a question of the Hanoicheses and the Saigonettis. It's not even a question of our family and the Kremlinicchios. It's a question of honor. I don't like my honor questioned during an election year. I say we go to the mattresses.!"

The family jumped to their feet and shouted, "God bless the godfather!"

As each one walked out of the room, he kissed Don Riccardo's hand, and the godfather patted each of them on the head.

Editorial Points

Except for those who would like to call it illegal, the referendum Friday showed how much students do not believe a strike would work. Of course, it was probably set for Friday so that students would not be able to say that a strike would not work before it happened.

And now, a moratorium on May 4 is being planned. Well, whatever non-violent means of ending the war are necessary, we shall all be willing to carry them out.

So busses are now being planned for the UMass campus to discourage auto traffic. But did they ever stop to think that if there are too many busses, there might not be enough room for the pedestrians to get around.

Silvio Conte sure was confident of his position on busses and Vietnam when questioned by members of the strike last Friday. He almost seemed like the perfect candidate. But something still seemed wrong about him. Maybe it was the propaganda statements from Nixon and Volpe. They really weren't necessary.

Letters To The Editor

Formerly The R.O.T.C. Building

To the Editor:

I would like to announce to my students and to all other interested persons who would like to attend, that I will be holding my undergraduate Ethics classes in the new CENTER FOR SOCIAL CHANGE, formerly the ROTC building. The information center in that building will have the room numbers assigned for them; the times are: MWF at 2:30; M, 3:45-5:45; W, 12:15-2:15. These courses will be focused on the topic: sexism, racism, and the war: their interrelations.

I would also like to urge all faculty to respond to the statement of policy of the Coalition Against Oppression, which reads, in part:

THE COALITION CALL FOR A UNIVERSITY—WIDE MORATORIUM ON BUSINESS AS USUAL. THIS MEANS THAT THE UNIVERSITY SHOULD REMAIN OPEN, AND THAT CLASSES SHOULD MEET, BUT THAT THE FULL EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES OF THE UNIVERSITY SHOULD BE DEVOTED TO UNDERSTANDING, AND DEVELOPING PROGRAMS TO IMPLEMENT, THE FOUR GOALS.

The goals are ending racism and sexism on this campus, freeing political prisoners, and the total and immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from S.E. Asia.

A particularly important response of faculty would be to reschedule their classes in the Center For Social Change, so as to begin immediately to use this building for educational work around these issues. This will also have the effect of freeing classroom space on the rest of the campus for use by the legitimate university courses that have been forced out of the building by the recent take-over.

There has been a notable lack of activity on the part of the faculty on behalf of the recent movement on campus to respond in a positive, constructive way, to ending racism and sexism on the campus. There is now great need for the faculties' organizational ability, experience, and intellectual resources. Even though all faculty are unprepared to understand the current struggles, and must further educate themselves in order to provide this understanding to others, they remain an important resource, and can begin to develop their own positions and analyses to contribute to the new educational process that is beginning on campus.

I, I, I, Me, Me...

To the Editor:

I am a racist. I am a sexist. I am addicted to these conditions. I am upset. I am nausious. I am nervous. I can bearly type. I am now suffering from what I hope are withdrawal symtoms from these leperous addictions.

I would like to attempt to expose my personal, perverted prejudices in an effort to purge them from my being and to perhaps create an awareness in the readers of their own addictions, and to perhaps initiate in them a withdrawal from their own conditions.

I entered the Ballroom tonight under the self-righteous guise of fighting against a great evil, the Vietnam War. Hiding within myself the thoughts of conscious subconscious prejudices. i.e. "Black is Beautiful...but Black", "Men and Women are Equal...but Men are More Equal", and "As long as I am white and male everyone else is inferior". As the discussion progressed the Third World Coalition and the Women's Caucus walked out. My prejudices now surfaced, I became aware of them, they were dominant and controlled my behavior. I was right! I knew it! The War was the principle issue, these other issues of Racism and Sexism were secondary, subordinate, and irrelevant. The Anti-War movement must continue with or without the endorsement of these others.

The floor was flooded with accusations, obscenities, proposals, and counter-proposals. Votes were taken, votes were rescinded. The meeting was anarchic at times. My mind was being bombarded with thoughts, ideas, and prejudices. My resistance was being destroyed, my armor was being penetrated. There were more opinions, there were more ideas, there were more thoughts. I was being reached. My habits were being hit. I was becoming more upset. What I felt was being publicly exposed, attacked, and destroyed. My firmament was cracking; reality and truth were flooding my private reality for which I worked so hard to maintain.

I then realized that Racism and Sexism were alive and well and living in me.

All of us as students, as educated people, as rational beings profess a desire to deal with truth. But before we can deal with truth we must first find it. Truth exists in reality, not in our own personally created, distorted realities which insulates us from truth. But the reality which is discovered after interaction, argumentation, examination and painful scrutinization of thoughts and ideas different from and contrary to our own.

To the Editor:

This letter is in reponse to Elliot Margolis' letter of April 21.

We would agree with Elliot that the bombings of Vietnam deserve our immediate attention. But how can he turn his back on the oppressed people here, and say the "3rd World Alliance is irrelevant" and "against our better interests?"

As members of the Jewish community we are outraged by his insensitivity and total lack of understanding. It is difficult for us to understand how he (who claims to be representative of a minority group on campus–Hillel) could be so detached from the situation and display such inhumanity. Perhaps it would do him some good to think about the following quote:

"When a trout rising to a fly gets hooked on a line and finds himself unable to swim about freely, he begins with a fight which results in struggles and splashes and sometimes as escape. Often, of course, the situation is too tough for him.

In the same way the human being struggles with his environment and with the hooks that catch him. Sometimes he masters his difficulties; sometimes they are too much for him. His struggles are all that the world sees and it naturally misunderstands them. It's hard for a free fish to understand what is happening to a hooked one."—Karl A. Menninger

Untie!

To the Editor:

After Thurs. night's meeting of the Strike Committee, it became apparent that the Strike will fail unless the students of UMass unite. Breaking off into factions groups such as the Third World Alliance, the Women's Caucus, and the YWLL cannot bring the students together in support of the Strike, this will only alienate students into a greater confusion.

The Strike was originally organized as a response to the bombings of Hanoi and Haiphong. However, certain groups came out during this week's meetings with the intent of using the Vietnam issue as a tool of their own petty power politics. If this is to continue, the Strike will fail. The demands will be forgotten and UMass will once again revert to the "hotbed of apathy" it has been in the past. We urge the students of UMass to unite for one common cause; to end the war in Indochina. The immediate priority of concern should be the senseless slaughter of people, and this slaughter must not be tolerated. UNITE.

3rd World Steps

To the Editor:

About Elliot Margolis's letter in last Friday's Collegian Elliot said that the Third World Alliance in irrelevant to the issue of the war in Vietnam. But this is false because the Vietnam war is a war against Third World people. He said "members of Hillel cannot, should not, and will not support anything to do with the Third World Alliance because it is against our better interests." As a Hillel member, I refuse to go along with any statement which suggests that Hillel members (or Jews as a whole) cannot, should not, and will not support ending racism.

David Lebowitz

Hah!

To the Editor:

I disagree most sharply with your William Loeb-type front page editorial of last Friday which was litte more than an hysterical attack on white males written by white male editors. If you wish to whip yourselves for some psychological guilt, that is your pleasure; but please spare the rest of us from the sores of your flagellation.

Rather than blaming the splintering of the strike forces on the spectre of a so-called "white male power superiority syndrome," I would suggest you turn your weeping eyes to the arrogant and vindictive campus representatives of the "oppressed" Women's and Third World Caucuses. It is the thirty or so people comprising these groups who are to blame for the disruption and division of the strike force.

One wishes that the control of a publication, no matter what its ideological or philosophical slant, will rest in the hands of rational and mature editors. The Collegian, then, suffers by its editors vehement endorsement of the puerile and self-righteous theatrics of the Women's and Third World Caucus representatives, and by its offense blanket condemnation of white males written by white males. I would suggest that you restrict such wantonly masochistic demonstrations to a room in the Collegian offices which you might want to furnish with whips, chains and straps. But please do not further expose the rest of us to your pathetic expressions of middle class guilt. We do not all share it with you, and fine you editorial purgatives offensive and highly unnecessary.

Vote Thrice

To the Editor:

On April 25 Vote Three Times! (Some say Mayor Daley votes more times than that). What I mean to say is that because of our complicated voting rules, you have to vote three times in order to have real impact.

First you register your "Presidential Preference" amongst the eleven names on the ballot. Then you should also vote for a slate of "At-Large Delegates" and a slate of "District Delegates". These are the women and men who will go to the Convention and will represent the state and this area, and will physically cast the ballots during the choosing of the Party's nominees. They are not bound by the "Preference" vote beyond the first ballot, so it is of great significance that you vote for them.

As a "District Delegate" candidate for Senator George McGovern, I would urge you all to cast your "three votes" for McGovern. What better message to send Nixon and Hubie who so desperately want a rematch? Why not send "Smiling George" and "Lanky Lee" to the Convention!

"AMERICAN MEDICINE"

Nature Of Poverty Explained

There will be a poverty workshop sponsored by the UMass Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs tomorrow in the Campus Center. The purpose of this informal program is to provide people with a knowledge of the problems of poverty in this region, in the country and in other countries as well as to organize specific actions to combat this unnecessary suffering.

A wide range of films will be shown in room 162 Campus Center from 1-5 p.m. dealing with the plight of the American Indian, poverty in Appalachia, hunger in America, migrant workers, life in a decaying tenement and a history of people's struggles for justice and an end to poverty in the U.S.

From 7-12 p.m., based in room 163 CC., programs of speakers and films throughout the Campus Center will be held. The majority of speakers will deal with the multitude of poverty programs in Western Massachusetts and will organize for specific action against these situations. Other speakers will deal with Bengladesh, hunger in the Middle East, and the economics of poverty in this country. The films presented in the afternoon will be shown in the evening and deal with poverty throughout the country. It is hoped that the participants in this workshop will become involved on their own or through WMPIRG credit programs with the Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs to work for an end to poverty and the related issues that promote its existence. For the sake of others, you are urged to attend.

A poverty family moves out from a rundown tenement somewhere in a poverty-stricken area. The nature of this and other types of poverty will be discussed in a meeting in room 162 of the Campus Center.

Blind Meet In Worcester

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP)-The first regional conference of the blind was held here Saturday with about 30 persons from Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Vermont attending.

A spokesman said the purpose of the meeting, held at the Worcester Telegram and Gazette building, was to improve communication among the blind of New England. The session was co-sponsored by the Blind Leadership Club of Massachusetts and the Vermont Council of the Blind.

If you use tampons, you already know how to use the internal deodorant™ Norforms.

Stopping feminine odor is easier than you think. Each tiny-as-a-fingertip Norforms® "Suppository" is as simple and safe to insert as a tiny tampon. Just insert—it begins dissolving instantly to kill bacteria, stop feminine odor where it starts . . . internally, in the vaginal tract.

You feel clean, fresh, odor-free for hours. No shower, no douche stops odor the way Norforms do.

FREE NORFORMS MINI-PACK plus booklet! Write to: Norwich Pharmacal Co., Dept. CN-C, Norwich, N.Y. 13815. Enclose 25¢ to cover mailing and handling.

Faculty Planning Hour Moratorium

A group of thirty UMass faculty, teaching assistants and staff members yesterday began planning for a one-hour, campus-wide moratorium on May 4 to urge an immediate end to he war in Vietnam.

They planned a meeting for this Wednesday, April 26, for all faculty and staff members, at which moratorium plans will be discussed. The time and place of the Wednesday meeting are to be announced.

A statement adopted by the "Committee to Stop the War" at its planning meeting yesterday read:

1) We support University Chancellor Bromery, the vice-chancellors, trustees, students and others who wrote to Melvin Laird Thursday opposing the escalation of the bombing and the war.

2) We support President Wood's announced ban on military recruitment on all campuses of the University of Massachusetts.

3) We support the aims of the student strike.

4) We join with the coalition of antiwar leaders and groups, including Congressmen and Senators, calling for a nationwide moratorium on May 4 to help stop the escalation and the war. This date is especially significant in the antiwar movement, commemorating as it does the killing of black and white students at Kent State and Jackson in 1970.

Empty promises. That's what you get when other beauty products talk about lemon.

Only Lemon Up™ has the natural juice of one whole lemon... controls oily skin and hair naturally.

Most lemon beauty products just give you lemon perfume. Or a dab of lemon extract.

Only Lemon Up gives you the natural juice of one whole lemon in every bottle. And lemon juice is nature's own grease-cutter.

Lemon Up Facial Cleanser whisks away dirt and oil and leaves your skin naturally fresh and glowing.

It cleans pores and kills bacteria on skin with its anti-bacterial formula. Lemon Up, the only lemon beauty products in the world with the natural juice of one whole lemon. And that's a promise we keep.

Philosopher Alan Wats has been the author of many books. The first of his many books, "The Spirit of Zen" was written at the age of 20, while active in London with the World Congress of Faiths. Since then he has written some twenty others including the Wisdom of Insecurity, The Way of Zen, and Nature Man and Woman.

Watt Workshop Needs Help

Alan Watts has been invited by the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development to the Amherst area to run a workshop this weekend beginning Saturday morning (April 29) running all day and evening and during the morning and afternoon on Sunday (April 30). At the present time there are fifteen people registered at $45 each. His fee is $1000 plus round trip airfare from San Francisco. At $45 per person twenty-five people must register just to pay these expenses.

To make it easier for those who want very much to spend this time with Alan and to make it possible for those already registered not to be disappointed, the fee has been lowered to $35. If you would like to attend, call the Center at 584-0240 BEFORE 7:30 P.M. THIS EVENING!! If enough registrants are not received by that time, the workshop will be cancelled.

Through books, articles, and lectures, Alan Watts has become known throughout the United States and abroad as one of the most stimulating and unconventional philosophers of our time. Although his special interest has been the interpretation of Eastern thought, especially Zen Buddhism, to the West, he is one of the new style of "generalists" concerned as much with philosophy of science although this is to use the old-fashioned language of boxed disciplines.

His visit is being arranged and sponsored by the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development which is a group of graduate students and professors interested in educating the greater UMass community in the new humanistic methods for enhancing personal relationships.

If you plan to attend, be sure to notify the Center before 7:30 p.m. this evening.

Conference Held Today On Black's Relationship To China

The W. E. B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies, The Third World Alliance, Harambee and the Black Mass Communications Project at UMass will host a conference on the subject of "China and the Pan-African World" entitled THE BLACK MAN LOOKS AT CHINA: CHINA LOOKS AT THE BLACK MAN.

The conference will explore the present political and cultural relationships between the People's Republic of China and the Pan-Africanists struggle for liberation. "The central question which we will be raising" said Associate Professor Acklyn Lynch of the DuBois Department, "is just what implications for the black struggle are represented by China's emergence as a world power totally opposed culturally, ideologically and even technically to the western powers that now control the world's resources. This is a subject that all Third World peoples must understand."

The conference begins today. There will be presentations from a group of Chinese African scholars and Afro-American scholars, activists and artists of international reputation in the Third World. The African World will be represented by Bro. David Sibeko, European representative of the Peking oriented Pan-African Conference which is presently directing the nationalist struggle against the Apartheid regime in South Africa and Professor Walter Rodney of the University of Tanzania in Dar-Es-Salaam, Tanzania. David Sibeko will speak on the African Liberation Movement and China's political agenda on Wednesday the 26th. Professor Rodney will discuss, "The Relationship Between China and The African World Prior to World War II."

Today also Madame Si-Lan Chen Leyda, an eminent Chinese choreographer and dancer and daughter of a former foreign minister of China will discuss "The Cultural Imperatives of A New World Order: Cultural Links Between China and Africa."

Tomorrow, Bro. Robert Williams, former President of The Revolutionary Action Movement, and Hon. President of the Republic of New Africa will speak on "The Afro-American Struggle and China's Response." Bro. Williams spent a number of years in exile in China where he met the leadership of the Chinese Revolution.

Wednesday, Professor Paul Lin formerly of Peking University will speak on "China and The African World". Professor Lin who is currently at McGill University in Montreal is an advisor to Chou En Lai and was instrumental in negotiating the trade relations between China and Canada that represented the first crack in the isolation of China in this hemisphere.

The Weather

By JANET HUGHES

Today's weather will be partly cloudy, with a chance of showers. The temperature will range from 55-60's. There is a fifty-fifty chance of rain. For all you optimists, there's a fifty-fifty chance of sunshine.

Folklore Lectures Featured This Week

To give a sense of both sides of folklore, the past and the present, the English Department will sponsor two lectures this week, one by the leading English Folklorists, Katherine Briggs, and the other by the foremost American Folklorist, Richard M. Dorson.

Miss Briggs, author of The Anatomy of Puck, Pale Hecate's Team, and Hobberdy Dick among other books, will speak in SBA 120 at 440 on Monday April 24th. Richard M. Dorson, Director of the Folklore Institute at Indiana University, ex-president of the American Folklore Society and author of more than ten books including American Folklore, Jonathan Draws the Longbow, American Negro Folktales will speak Thursday the 27th of April in SBA 120 at 400. He will talk of "Folklore of the Youth Culture." Miss Briggs will lecture on "The Supernaturalism in Nineteenth Century Literature."

Jazz Concert Tomorrow

The UMass Jazz Workshop will present a concert of original compositions and arrangements for the modern jazz ensemble tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the UMass Student Union Ballroom.

Included on the program will be three arrangements by Jake Epstein and one by Charles Vatalaro, both students and members of the Jazz Workshop. Two original compositions will be given first performance on the UMass campus. The compositions are "A Monstrous Thing," by Epstein, assistant director; and "Jazz Metamorphosis on a 'scheme' byJ.S. Back," by Frederick Tillis, music department faculty member and Workshop director.

The program will also feature a variety of instrumental and vocal solos by guests and members of the Jazz Workshop, which is composed of UMass students.

Presented by the music department, the concert is open to the public without charge.

TTPC Advisors Still Available

Advisors from School of Education teacher training programs (TPPC student teaching) will continue to be available on Monday. Program information and advising will be available in Room 168 Campus Center from 9-4.

All students wishing to be certified in the School of Education should have signed up for program interviews by Monday afternoon. Lists of accepted program members will be posted in the Old Library of the School of Education on Wednesday of next week.

All undergraduates must come on Wednesday and formally register for programs in which they have been accepted. Pre-registration and advising information will be available Wednesday through Friday from your program director.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Many born under Taurus, especially those born from April 20 to 30, will be experiencing happier days. Health will improve and there will be greater freedom of thought and action. In professional area, employment pictura will be brighter, in personal life, these persons will be retived of emotional burdens. Taurus harmonizes with Pisces, Cancer, Virgo and Capricorn. There is attraction to Scorpio, but caution should be exercised in relations with Leo and Aquarius.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may be ahead of contemporaries. Means your ideas jump boundaries of restrictions. You tend now to bend or break rules. Some associates could be irritated or envious. Be flaxible. Retain sense of humor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cement times of attection. Don't attempt to hide teelings. Secrets are due to be revealed. Applies especially in connection with finances, affairs of heart. Avoid acting strictly on impulse. Utilize logic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take special care around machinery. You may be traveling and you could be in a hurry. Don't provoke arguments. Avoid carelessness which contributes to accidents. You shake free from rut. Enjoy without being reckless.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family gossip is featured. Maintain sense of balance and reality. Be diplomatic. Refuse to be drawn into foolish argument. You could receive gift. Be gracious. Give special attention to Taurus and Virgo persons.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Friends are active and aggressive. Protect assets. Don't feel money can buy affection. Separate fact from fancy. See through pretense if realistic, you are rewarded. Otherwise, you pay through thi nose.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Goal is temporarily blocked, obscured key is to maintain faith, to fulfill obligations. What appears a setback is a test. Know this and refuse to be discoura,ed. Aggressive individual can be won over.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may be target for hidden persuasion. Be receptive without giving up principles. There is no easy way, no short cut. Lessons learned in past should be utilized. Remember recent resolutions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): New start in new direction is indicated. Leo plays prominent role. Friend makes proposal which could be expensive. Don't risk independence. Promises may be bright, but also empty. Respond accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be wary in attixing signatura to any legal document. Uncertainty prevails. If you don't know what to do, then do nothing. Mate, partner has definite ideas. Be an attentive listener. But hold off on action.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Slow pace. View alternatives. Value judgment can be correct it you refuse to be chided, cajoled or rushed. Accent is on your philosophy of task at hand. Key is to be thorough. Personal integrity may be at stake.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Study Capricorn message. Get to heart of matters. You could be involved now with another Aquarian and a Leo. Emotions run rampant. Nothing occurs halfway. Children make demands. Stress fair play.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may get argument from one who "knows it all." You tend now to attract back yard psychologists and jailhouse lawyers. Heed your own counsel. Refuse to become embroiled in legal tangle. Do some personal investigating.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are fond of luxury and easily fall into habit patterns denoting the "good life." You could be a partron of the arts or attract your own patron. You tend, at times, to overindulge. Must watch weight and adhere to health rules. By October, you will be happier and could be

Bruins Roll Over Blues

ST. LOUIS (AP)-Forwards Jonny McKenzie and Mike Walton rammed in two goals apiece as the Boston Bruins continued their devastation of the St. Louis Blues in a runaway 7-2 victory, nearly sealing their Stanley Cup semifinal series before a national television audience Sunday.

Boston's triumph, its third straight by a wide margin, put the Bruins in position to sweep the best-of-7 series when the teams collide on St. Louis ice again Tuesday night.

The loss was the Bruins 15th in a row in playoffs against National Hockey League Eastern Division teams in a skein beginning with their 1967-68 entry as an NHL expansion club.

Eddie Westfall, scoring his sixth short-handed goal to tie a career playoff record, began the Boston avalanche after St. Louis opened the scoring on Mike Murphy's shot at 2:05 of the first period.

After Westfall scored to make it 1-1, McKenzie connected for Boston eighth powerplay goal in as many playoff games and veteran Phil Esposito outfought Bob Plager in increasing the advantage to 3-1.

Walton needed only 2:58 of the second period to boost Boston's lead to 4-1, after which Ken Hodge pumped home a 30-foot shot and McKenzie added his second powerplay goal.

With Boston merely skating out its easy victory, Walton intercepted a Blues' pass and scored unassisted, Gary Sabourin then scored for St. Louis.

Knicks Eliminate Celtics, 111-103

BOSTON (AP) — The New York Knicks refused to let an early 14-0 deficit upset them Sunday, as they came back and defeated the Boston Celtics 111-103 and moved into the National Basketball Association play-off finals against the Los Angeles Lakers.

The Knicks, who took Boston 5-1 for the Eastern Conference crown, opened their best-of-seven finals Wednesday at Los Angeles.

"We didn't panic," said New York forward Dave DeBusschere, who led the balanced Knick attack with 24 points. "That was the big thing. We ran our stuff and got back into it. We pecked away, came back, and before you knew it, we were only down four or five points."

"We just couldn't seem to get off the ground," said New York coach Red Holzman of the first quarter draught. "It was just one of those things."

DeBusschere, who sat out most of the second period with foul trouble, came on strong in the third quarter, scoring 18 points despite an early fourth personal foul as the Knicks overcame a 55-50 half-time deficit for an 83-79 lead going into the final quarter.

"I was well aware of the four fouls," DeBusschere said. "I wasn't about to foul any more at that time."

The victory, New York's second in Boston in the best-of-seven semifinal, gave the Knicks the series 4-1 and moved them into the finals against the Los Angeles Lakers.

Stickers Sing In Rain

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

MIDDLETON, Conn.—Despite a constant downpour, the UMass Stickers kept right on scoring as they crushed Wesleyan 14-3 here on Saturday.

The freezing, continuous downpour made for very bad footing on the clay field, which turned greasy instead of muddy. The Cardinals thought they had a chance to win, hoping to catch the Redmen on a 'down' day, right between games with two very strong teams Harvard and Brown. However, when the action began, their hopes dissolved in the rain as the Redmen strength asserted itself.

Top scorer John Nagle started the Redman ball rolling 2:43 into the first quarter as he shot one into the net assisted by Dwight Blomquist.

Minutes later John McCarthy ran the ball down the field passing it to Paul Ritch then to Nagle who scored again.

Still in the first quarter, Hirsh Seidman with an assist by Hardy made a sure shot.

At the start of the second quarter, the score stood 5-2 for the Redmen. The next two quarters not much scoring action took place. It kept on raining.

Levenshus scored the final Cardinal goal 5:11 into the second quarter. Then Defenseman Dana Stone assisted by Hardy gained another one for the Red; score 7-3.

Lone scorer of the third period was Hardy aided by Stone.

During the final quarter, UMass came alive and completely dominated the Cardinals, scoring seven goals. UMass' forechecking and riding prevented the opponents from getting the ball to their attack.

Nagle assisted by Hardy and Seidman aided by Tim Bosworth both scored. Pete Conolley, Nagle, Ritch, and Joe Roache all scored unassisted.

The Cardinals fell in crushing defeat to the Redmen 14-3, a strong victory, boosting the Gorillas' record 6 wins and 2 losses to date.

Coach Garber, after the victory, said, "We displayed tremendous second half effort. Playing in the rain is a great disadvantage in speed, especially on the slippery footing. We scored 5 goals on the extra man play, which happens when one of the opponents is in the penalty box. We're looking to Wednesday."

Lacrosse fans can look forward to Wednesday when the Redmen face Brown, one of the top teams in the country. A real clash of power is in store.

Crew Hits Rough Water

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

West Brookfield -- The machine-like precision of the Coast Guard Academy cadets ruined the inauguration of the Lake Wickabog Regatta. The cadets spoiled the unveiling of the new, slightly under 2,000 meter course, as they swept all four events in which they entered. St. Joseph's College of Philadelphia won the four-man event.

The regatta, co-sponsored by the UMass crew team and the Lake Wickabog Boat Club, had perfect weather conditions on the still water raceway, but the UMass boats just did not have that extra stroke that meant the difference first and last.

The varsity eight was won easily by the Coast Guard Academy in a time of 6 minutes and 15.6 seconds, two lengths ahead of the competition. UMass was slightly ahead of St. Joseph's nearing the finish, but a final spurt by St. Joe's left the oarsmen a half a second behind. Missing once again from the action was senior coxswain Bob Jayes, this time replaced by freshman Jeff Sheehan. Billy Moran missed the action due to a leg injury. Inexperience once again had to be the difference, as the consistency of Coast Guard and the late surge of St. Joe's meant the difference.

The juggled lineup of the JV 8, whereby most of the undefeated varsity 4 were switched into the JV boat in hopes of countering the two strong boats, went for nought. An early lead by the Redmen narrowed sown to a very close finish between the three boats. Coast Guard won with a time of 6:31.9 followed with a flick of the eyelash by St. Joe's with 6:32.6 and UMass with 6:33.0.

The varsity four, with a four-some totally different from that had won 2 straight races, fell behind the talented Coast Guard oarsmen. This was only the second time this crew had worked together and it showed as they finished two lengths behind Coast Guard.

The frosh also could not cope with the overwhelming cadets as they trailed the bigger, stronger Guard by a length. The second freshmen unit showed signes of cohesiveness as they kept up with Coast Guard, missing their first win by a mere 7/10. Winning time way 6:54.8 as compared to the Redmen's 6:55.5.

A beautiful new course designed for the enjoyment of the fan, along with perfect weather, did very little to help the Redmen win, but by far this had to be their best performance this year.

Redmen Whitewash RI Twice

By EARLE BARROLL

They finally had their chance ...center stage.

100 and 220 yards they stood from the finish line in the sleet and mist of a normal spring day. And as their coach said later, "If it hadn't been for them, it wouldn't have been close."

For three meets, their efforts either went unnoticed or in the record books as off-days, but on Saturday the sprinters burnt their way down the cinders of Central Connecticut and led the UMass track team (72 points) to a tight tri-meet victory over Springfield College (68 points) and the host team (48 points).

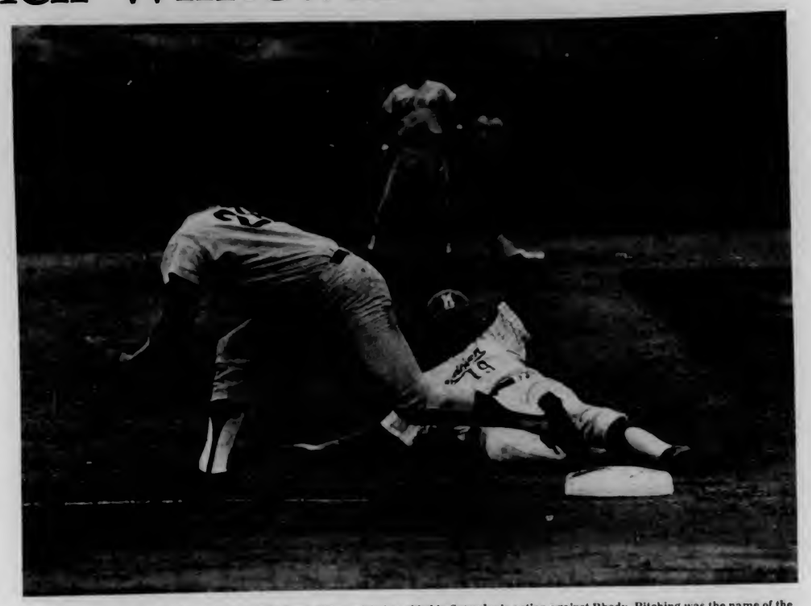
And of all things, it was the weather that enabled coach Ken O'Brien to formulate his coup that brought victory on a day when outstanding performances were at a bare minimum.

"It was an awful day and due to this type of weather, I ran two sprinters in each event (there are usually three or four) and ran them in only one race (they usually double) to keep them from possible injuries," O'Brien said.

So, in two's they came. Ron Harris and Tom Beland ran one-two in the 100 and Tony Pendleton and Dennis Busa did likewise in the 220.

It was actually the performance of the latter tandem that insured the win. "It was just one of those meets," O'Brien noted. "We thought we had it won on the way down, but once it got going we didn't get what I'd call too many inspired performances and by the 220, we finally realized that we were in a real dog fight."

Pendleton and Busa put an end to that.



As can so often happen in a tri-meet, Central Connecticut turned spoiler when its weight men ambushed Springfield for firsts in the discus and shot put that shut-off the Chiefs chances of mounting an expected heavy offensive in these events.

Gil Sylvia leveled the finishing blow when he broke his own UMass school record in the javelin on his final throw (214'10") and vaulted from third to first, leaving a Springfield thrower in his wake.

This set the stage for Harris and his speedy gang.

But it also led O'Brien to comment (in lieu of what previously had transpired in the other events): "We wouldn't have gotten away with it (a win) if Central hadn't broken up Springfield's scoring in the weight events.

SAFE!, was the call as Redmen catcher Billy Ryan slides safely into third in Saturday's action against Rhody. Pitching was the name of the game as the shell-shocked Rams were whitewashed twice, 9-0 and 7-0. (MDC photo by Frank Antosiewicz)

Tennis Team Rams Rams

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

After getting engineered out of a victory at MIT this past Thursday, the UMass tennis team rammed the ball down the throats of Rhode Island on Saturday to take their second conference win of the year, and move their record to 5-1 overall.

While it poured in Boston, snowing too, the Redmen travelled indoors to face MIT. Undefeated up to that point UMass was expecting their toughest contest to date. And that's just what they got. With William Young, a brilliant sophomore from Texas, playing and winning easily at number one, MIT captured the match 6-3, playing on their home indoor courts.

Things went a bit easier for MIT than anyone at UMass had figured, as right on down the line the Engineers had steady and consistent men, who eventually outlasted the errorful Redmen. After Ted Donahue lost to Young, Chris Coffin dropped his second singles match 6-3, 7-6. Fred Braley, at third, also had little success as he fell 6-3, 6-3, and down at fourth singles Steve Ferber came within one point of winning his match. Ferber split the first two sets, the first going to MIT 6-4, and the second to him 6-1. The third came down to a tie-breaker, and at 4 points apiece in the tie-breaker Ferber poked the ball wide on the double match point.

Mark Brass, in slot number five, had his ills too, losing 6-3, 6-4. Robert Schpeiser, meanwhile, was the sole bright note, coming through with a three set victory in 3-6, 7-5, 6-1 style.

Doubles found the Redmen at an advantage, as they picked up their second and third points of the match. Ferber and Braley teamed at second and came up with a win, while Brass and Schpeiser at third did the same.

With their confidence somewhat shaken, the Redmen faced big test number two on Saturday. They passed this one brilliantly. Facing their toughest Yankee Conference foe, the netmen earned a 6-3 victory on the strenth of their numbers three through six singles men. Donahue and Coffin found the going rough at first and second respectively, but from their on down it was one straight set victory after another. First Braley laced into Kenny Luba, a native Long Islander, winning 7-6, 6-1. Ferber then disposed of Lenny Moskowitz by 6-2, 6-3 scores. Brass was next, performing in 7-5, 6-1 fashion, with Schpeiser winding it up, taking his sixth singles match 6-4, 6-3.

After beating Amherst yesterday 5-4, the Rhody Rams thought they might pull off another one-point victory. After taking first doubles, the visiting Rams appeared to have a chance, but third doubles--that's Brass and Schpeiser, put the match away in two set fashion. Braley and Ferber added yet another point at second doubles as they again downed the team of Luba and M[illegible]owitz.

Sprinters Pace Trackmen To Win

By ROY LYONS

In the first game, the Redmen sealed the verdict in the eighth inning with a six run outburst. Up to that point, the URI pitching had been reasonably effective, allowing UMass a pair of runs in the first and a single tally in the sixth. However, the third Ram hurler coming on to face UMass in the eighth was plagued with control problems. The erratic southpaw surrendered the first two runs of the inning, issuing three walks, a base hit bunt, and a sacrifice fly. He was yanked with one out in favor of a righthander, the fourth Rhody pitcher used in the game. Third baseman Mark Palau promptly ripped his second pitch over the scoreboard in left for a three run homer. Co-captain Jim Saracino followed with a single to left and alertly took third when he caught the Rhode Island infield napping on a ball that didn't get beyond the infield. Rightfielder Brian Martin scored Saracino with his third hit of the game. A spectacular play by URI third baseman Rich Carroll ended the inning. He speared Ron Beaurivage's line drive and doubled Pete Backstrom off third.

Freshman sensation Mike Flanagan pitched the first seven innings. He checked the Rams on three hits, struck out five, walked four, and hit a batter. Mike helped his own cause with a two-out single, driving in the game's first two runs in the opening frame. Tom Austin, a towering 6'9" senior, pitched the final two innings of the shutout.

The second game was called after six and a half innings because of the cold and rainy weather. It had been a miserable all afternoon with even the hard core hecklers in the first base bleachers having long since departed when the umpire called it.

Again it was the big inning that put the contest on ice for the Redmen as they scored five runs in the bottom of the sixth. In that inning, Palau blasted his second round-tripper of the afternoon to start the rally. Martin continued his hitting spree from game one with a two run double that carried to the wall in left center. Beaurivage doubled Martin home, and Dan Kelly, red-hot of late, singled Martin across. Dan Esposito went down swinging to end the inning, but the damage had been done.

Tom White was impressive on the mound for UMass. He allowed only three singles and two of these were of the infield variety. The blazing lefty struck out nine batters and walked only one. He also opened the scoring for the Redmen in the fourth, lining a solo shot over the 405-foot mark in dead center. Beaurivage singled home Backstrom in the fifth for another singleton, and the five run barrage came an inning later. Backstrom called up from the jayvees, played two fine defensive games in centerfield.

The sweep enabled UMass to up their perfect slate to 12-0. They'll put that winning streak on the line again Tuesday afternoon at 3:30, hosting Amherst College. The back to back series against an undefeated University of Connecticut nine at the end of the season looms bigger and bigger.

Negotiations End, Dickinson Opens

By MDC STAFF

Negotiations between the VVAW, the; Coalition Against Oppression and the administration ended last night.

According to information now available the administration, in the person of Chancellor Bromery, has agreed to commit itself to the establishment and funding of a Center for Social Change.

The VVAW and CAO have agreed to allow all classes to go on in Dickinson Hall as of today. The workshops and activities scheduled by the organizations will be held in Dickinson pending movement to space provided by the University.

Though this has yet to be confirmed, it is reported that the Center for Social Change will be set up on the first floor of Munson Hall.

Chancellor Bromery also said he had grave reservations "concerning the appropriateness" of having ROTC on campus.

It was also announced at the mass meeting late last night in Dickinson Hall that the agenda for the Board of Trustees meeting scheduled for this Wednesday has been scrapped in favor of a meeting solely on the question of whether or not ROTC should be on campus. The meeting will reportedly be open to the public.

According to Larry Ladd, SGA President, Bromery had called Wood during negotiations and convinced Wood to change the Board's Wednesday agenda.

In other development, approximately 100 UMass-Boston students broken into University President Robert Wood's office at 2:30 yesterday afternoon demanding that he speak with them about the Dickinson Hall occupation and military recruitment on the Boston Campus. Because of a lack of space in Wood's office, the confrontation was moved onto the UMass-Boston campus. Reportedly 400-500 students debated the two issues with Wood.

After the announcement that negotiations were completed, a group in the Center began organizing for their activities at the Board of Trustees meeting on Wednesday. The basic activities planned for the meeting are mass support for the anti-ROTC demand, a small group of articulate representatives from the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, the Women's Caucus, the Men's Caucus and the faculty, to present their case to the Board and mass petitions against ROTC on campus.

The petition drive will start today. Separate petitions are planned for faculty and students. The wording of the petitions will be the same: "We the undersigned (faculty or students), feel that military training has no place on this college campus. Therefore, we demand that ROTC be removed from the University of Massachusetts as of September 1st, 1972."

Kathy Reardon, a spokesperson for the Center, said that the Center was planning to approach the Trustees meeting only about the ROTC issue because that is within their jurisdiction.

Reardon told the Collegian that the other issues are not being ignored.

Six Air Force ROTC students awaiting word of Bromery's decision outside Dickinson Hall last night said they were mostly upset with what they termed an infringement of their rights. They said what was at issue was not a matter of whether or not they were in ROTC or ROTC classes were being held in the building, but rather that they had rights as students--that classes they were enrolled in be held.

They said they felt ROTC should stay on campus because it exposed the students to "a liberalized college atmosphere", something they felt was not available in the services own Officer Candidate Schools.

The entire occupation of Dickinson was marked by the total lack of incidents. There were no thefts of any material in the building nor was anyone thrown out of the building. The people occupying the building cleaned and swept the building at least once a day. Janitorial services were removed last Friday by the University reportedly because the janitors, who usually clean at night, were unable to because of meetings and workshops being held in the building. According to one of the occupants, there was a, "Generally communal spirit" during the occupation.

Present at the negotiations were Zoe Best and Barbara Gilbert from the Women's Caucus, Alwin Schmidt and Ben Jones from the Men's Caucus, and Joe Doucette and Ray Kildisas from Vietnam Veterans Against the War. Representing the administration and faculty were Chancellor Randolph Bromery, Acting Vice-Chancellor Robert Gage, Dallas Darlind of the Chancellor's office, Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts Jerry Allen, Zina Tillona of the French and Italian Departments, Seymour Shapiro of the Botany Department, and Ellen Gerber of the Physical Education Department. Also present were Larry Ladd and Nick Apostola of the Student Government Association.

Student Government Association President Larry Ladd returned to the ROTC building late last night and told about 300 people there his interpretation of what happened at the negotiations with the administration.
It was a very long night. (MDC photos by Stephen Schuster)

Official Statement

(Editor's Note: The following is an official statement by Vietnam Veterans Against the War, Coalition Against Oppression, and the UMass-Amherst administration.)

All negotiations are dependent upon having all regularly scheduled classes, including ROTC, conducted without interruption, obstruction or interference beginning at 8 a.m. Tuesday, April 25, 1972, and upon having Dickinson Hall vacated completely by 5 p.m., after which the building will be secured.

The Chancellor states that personally he has serious questions concerning the appropriateness of having ROTC on the University campus in the face of our need to use our limited resources to solve pressing social problems.

In recognition of the urgency of the issue, President Wood has agreed, in response to Chancellor Bromery's suggestion, to convene a special panel of the Board of Trustees on Wednesday afternoon, April 26. Representatives of concerned groups from the campus community will express their personal and professional convictions on this subject at that time.

Chancellor Bromery will announce publicly that there will be a signature campaign to obtain a prompt and preliminary sense of the campus concerning this issue. The results will be transmitted to the President with the recommendation that further appropriate action be taken as soon as possible and prior to the renegotiation of the fiscal 1973 ROTC contract.

The Chancellor will instruct Vice-Chancellor Gage to make available members of his staff to secure mutually agreeable interim facilities for the Coalition Against Oppression and VVAW in order to facilitate the relocation of the Coalition's activities from Dickinson Hall.

Discussion will continue between the administration and the Coalition Against Oppression and VVAW with respect to the establishment of facilities and resources, commensurate with the needs of the various future programs as they develop.

The Chancellor wishes to express his warm appreciation to the members of the Coalition Against Oppression and VVAW, ' the ROTC cadets, members of the negotiating groups, and to the members of the Student Senate executive committee for their understanding, patience and real sense of good faith during these long and difficult discussions.

The two-day fund raising drive for the Center for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery in Saigon will continue today in the concourse level of the Campus Center. The center is dedicated to treating thousands of injured and maimed children, who have suffered directly and indirectly from the Vietnam war. (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

Book Move From Goodell

By ELEANOR DARLING

The 900,000 books of Goodell Library if placed side by side would form a line 15 miles long. Planning and overseeing the moving of these books into the new Tower Library is the responsibility of Gary E. Menkas, Coordinator of Branch Libraries.

Further complicating this responsibility is that Menkas cannot give a firm date for this move. The contractors have once again moved the completion date, now July 1, 1972. Once completed, the library must be prepared for the move with installation of physical things like carpets and stacks. If the July 1 date is met, it is doubtful that an attempt would be made to move the books before the fall semester. It is more realistic to project towards Intersession of Fall '72 and Spring '73.

The move will be up for bid by professional movers who may or may not have had previous experience in moving libraries. This move has a unique challenge in that the movers will have to use a tunnel and three elevators, two of which are extremely slow.

Menkas expects that the movers will stack the books onto large book trucks in the books numerical order. The book trucks will be moved down Goodell's elevator, out into the moving vans waiting at the rear loading dock, then over to the new loading area behind South College to be unloaded.

The book trucks will then be moved through the tunnel onto a slow-moving elevator up to the main level of the new library, then up the high-speed elevators to their proper floors to be unloaded onto their new stacks. Through all of this, the movers will be responsible for the condition of the books and their numerical order.

Tower Library with its 12 stack floors and spaces for 3,000 readers will have easy orientation in comparison to the existing library. There is a new library handbook being prepared, plus in the first months, there will be handouts for everyone entering and also in the first several months, there will be personnel waiting to assist those needing help.

Student-Worker Strike Urged

Student representatives from 21 New England colleges and universities last night voted to call for a nationwide strike of students and workers on May 4 to protest continuation of the war in Indochina.

Meeting in the student center at Tufts University in Medford, the 55 delegates approved the proposal after a 3 1/2-hour assembly, known as the New England Colleges Emergency Conference. It was closed to the media.

The final resolution was a combination of proposals offered by the various delegations and endorsed by the main body. The general strike measure was prepared by representatives of Yale University.

The date for the strike, May 4, marks the second anniversary of the slaying of four students at Kent State University in Ohio during a protest over escalation of the war. There was no discussion of the date's significance, but one delegate said it was implicit.

The conference also passed other resolutions, including one that calls for regional rallies on April 29 to help build support for the national strike.

In addition, the delegates endorsed "sustained and continuous acts of non-violent civil disobedience against directly war-related targets such as draft boards and (military) recruitment centers."

"We are not here to reavow student opposition to the war in a symbolic display which would show us to be pure and ethical but leave us practically important," the resolution said.

"We must systematically commit all our energies between now and May 4 toward bringing the student movement against the war together with organized labor in promoting their just demands-not only regarding America's policy abroad, but also its economic policy at home."

The conference also voted to demand "the end of university complicity with the war and its agents-military, government or corporate" and to support the aims of Harvard students attempting to force the university to div t itself of stock in Gulf Oil Corp.

About 40 Harvard students have been occupying the office of Derek Bok, university president, since Thursday, the day after Harvard announced it would not sell the stock.

The general strike proposal contained a proposed "agenda" for May 4 that included demands for total US withdrawal from Asia, an end to "the current wage freeze's burdening of American workers" and an end to company layoffs.

The Yale representatives who presented the strike measure cited a resolution by the Greater New Haven Central Labor Council, AFL—CIO, as evidence of labor disenchantment with the war.

The labor resolution declares that working people 'bear the heaviest burden' of the war, and it "condemns and deplores President Nixon's re-escalation of the war in Vietnam and especially his resumption of all-out bombing in North Vietnam."

The conference established a New England "coordinating committee at Boston College to implement its plans.

Delegates to the one-day conference were not selected in any uniform fashion. Some bore letters from campus antiwar leaders, while others were chosen from student strike groups.

Participating universities were: Brown, Harvard, Yale, Brandeis, Boston, Suffolk, Massachusetts-Amherst, Massachusetts-Boston, Northeastern, Tufts and Massachusetts Institute of Technology. The colleges were: Trinity, Colby, Smith, Mount Holyoke, Simmons, North Essex Community, New England, Wellesley, Boston and Emerson.

Also attending were representatives from Vietnam Veterans against the War.

WMPIRG Asks Support

By STEVEN GREENBERG

Tonight at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center, WMPIRG will hold an important meeting. The purpose of this meeting is to further define the organization structure, responsibilities, policies, and goals of WMPIRG. Up until now the number of students involved has been very small which may show that UMass students do not care about changing some of the present social evils or that they support by sitting in the bleachers.

The PIRG has proven itself to be a viable social force in Oregon and Minnesota. The Western Mass. PIRG can also be such a force here, but not without people and ideas.

You voted WMPIRG your support so it could become a possibility, you are now asked to support WMPIRG, so that it may become a working reality.

Primary Polling Hours

Registered voters in Amherst can cast their ballots for candidates in the Presidential Primary on Tuesday, April 25th, from 10:00 A.M. to 8:00 P.M. at the following polling places:

Precinct I - Parish Hall, No. Congregational Church.
Precinct II - Fire Station - Rear (announcement will be made in event of relocation).
Precinct III - Odd Fellows Hall, Kellogg Ave.
Precinct IV - Masonic Building, Main St.
Precinct V - Grange Hall, Main St.
Precinct VI - Munson Memorial Library, So. Amherst.
Precinct VII - Lutheran Church Lounge, No. Pleasant St.

The Board of Registrars points out that voters will vote in the precinct where they were living on January 1, 1971 - except that those who have registered since that date will vote in the precinct in which they were living at the time they registered. When in doubt, voters may consult voter lists posted in the Town Hall.

Independent Voters must inform the checker at the polls which party's ballot they wish, following which they will be directed to a voting machine if voting Republican and to a voting booth where they will mark their paper ballot if voting Democratic. Once the ballot is processed, the voter is enrolled in the party whose ballot he has chosen, and will remain so unless he changes back to Independent status at the Town Clerk's office in writing.

Trustees Meet Wednesday

By DON BISHOP

Amidst the usual anticipation and speculation, the April meeting of the Board of Trustees is due to take place this Wednesday, April 26, at 2:00 p.m. The meeting will be held in Boston.

Certain to be dealt with at Wednesday's meeting are the issues of ROTC and military recruitment on all UMass campuses, as is a proposal to raise the tuition for in-state students $100 over the next two years. The question of room and board increases for next year is also expected to be dealt with.

The meeting will begin with opening remarks to be made by UMass President Robert Wood. Chancellor's Bromery and Broderick (UMass Boston) have also been invited to speak along with the Dean of the UMass Medical School: Lamar Soutter.

The Trustees are then scheduled to hear reports from several of their standing committees. This would include the Committee on Faculty and Educational Policy, the Committee on Student Activities, the Committee on Buildings and Grounds, and the Committee on Finance. A report of the Special Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics here at UMass Amherst is expected to deal with the question of need basis for athletic scholarships.

The subject of military recruitment on all UMass campuses is likely to come up Wednesday, in the wake of President Wood's announcement last Thursday of a ban on recruiting on UMass campuses pending further study and discussion. The Trustees may issue some statement regarding this practice. ROTC will come up as a separate question.

On the question of tuition, the Trustees are expected to approve a $100 per year increase in tuition which will be spread out in $50 increases for the next two years. This plan, which has been neither confirmed or denied by official University or Trustee spokesmen, was first reported in a story for the Boston Globe.

Third World Alliance Statement

We, the Third World Alliance, are a representative agent of the Third World Community at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst. As such we can support the demand that ROTC be removed from ALL College and University campuses in this nation and all United States foreign bases in Third World Countries because we find the military agency in this country to be in extreme contradiction with the masses of the people under its domination. We stand against the military because:

1) they represent the nucleus of the capitalist superstructure, which 2) oppress and exploit wage labor for superprofit and 3) supply, produce and use arms to keep in check and kill all those who resist its exploitation in the slightest way. We are not against the military primarily because of the Vietnam war but because its (the military) existence can only be realized through its repressive activity.

We can join in a concerted effort with the Coalition Against Oppression and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War to fight for an immediate end to the war in Vietnam and total American withdrawal, not because of the increased bombing or the unveiling of Nixon's deception but because we denounce financial and military imposition by any imperialist country on any Third World Country which wants to determine their own destiny.

We feel that clarification of our position is most necessary at this point so that you will be able to understand exactly the degree of commitment we in the Third World Alliance have toward our people all over the globe.

We will not be pulled into the PEACE movement on a superficial level, such as rallying around an issue to achieve group goals. We are not about helping groups to achieve their defined interests unless they will benefit the total population of our people.

We feel that your using the deaths of our brothers and sisters and children in Vietnam to secure a building for feminist activities (whether they will house day care centers or anything else) is exploitative to say the least. And the Third World Community would view our participation in such actions as being integrated into an exploitative situation.

We understand your need for a building to form a base of operation; but we must seriously, very seriously question 1) how this building will relate in a positive way toward oppressed people of the Third World over coming their position as the dispossessed and 2) the integrity behind using our peoples misfortune to get something for self.

We feel that by using the Vietnam issue as a philosophical base for furthering group interests is incorrect. We also feel it is imperative that you give more consideration as to what issues you will use to accomplish your goals; and what effects your goals will have on the total community. We feel it is necessary also, that you consider how much of the energy of your work force is exhausted in gaining demands which do not weaken the contradictions in our society, as opposed to work channeled positively toward destroying the imperialist forces which oppress you through sexism.

In lending our support to other causes we the Third World Alliance must at all times be cognizant of our class goals for the unification of our peoples. We do not see how this building or the idealogical philosophy behind attaining this building can be incorporated into our policies for achieving liberation. To support that demand would cause division among our people who will not understand or accept any justification offered regarding your tactics or your goal. They would view it, and understandably so, as the Third World Alliance placing minority peoples (both at University of Massachusetts and in Vietnam) at the disposal of whites for the benefit of whites. We hope that you understand that this position is not articulated with any animosity in our minds. But rather with a clear analytical view of the development of certain political postures as they relate to struggling peoples throughout the world and with the love of our people at heart.

Once again we emphasize our strong and continuing support for the call to remove ROTC from the campus of the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. In this we are in concert and agreement with the Coalition Against Oppression and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War.

Only Clear Political Analysis can overcome Contradictions and define our interest.

Grad Sen Approves Review Commission

By CHRISTINE OLTHOFF

The Graduate Student Senate gave its approval last night to the establishment of a proposed Civilian Advisory and Review Commission. The philosophy and practical applications of the Commission were explained by Eric Walgren, and was sponsored in the Graduate Senate by its president, Veda Ross.

If established, the Commission would serve three purposes-(1) Advise and assist the Security Director on matters of policy for the Security Department. (2) Perform an emergency advisory function for the Security Director and the Chancellor during a disturbance. (3) Review any complaint alleging official misconduct by a member of the Security Department.

To perform these functions, the Commission would be given the power to investigate complaints, and try to provide a means of conciliation by holding hearings with witnesses and testimony from each side of the issue. The proposal also states that the Commission would have the power to retain an attorney. Walgren explained that he feels that the Commission could find "a civic-minded lawyer" who would be willing to give legal assistance to the Commission for no fee.

This proposal must now be approved by the undergraduate Student Senate, the Faculty Senate, and Chancellor Bromery to be put into effect.

The Senate also gave its approval to a motion presented by Senator Mike Zisser to make the Graduate Council a sub-committee of the Faculty Senate on the condition that it remain semi-autonomous and that membership of the committee remain at the present level of a minimum of five graduate students or 20% graduate students.

The Graduate Council is now an autonomous body composed of faculty members and graduate students, and determines graduate policies. Feelings expressed at the meeting were thatin its present capacity, the Council sometimes overlaps with the Faculty Senate. If the proposal is given final approval, the Faculty Senate would be given veto power but not amendment power over the Committee.

Other business included approval of a motion proposed by Mike Zisser to allot funds for the purpose of paying students on an hourly basis for publicizing Graduate Senate elections, and organizing departments in the university who now have no representation on the Senate.

Next year's budget was discussed briefly and nominations for next year's officers were taken. Decisions on both these issues will be made at the meeting on May 1.

School Of Education Negotiations Today

By MDC STAFF

Negotiations between the School of Education and the Third World Caucus are slated to resume this morning at 10:30 a.m. One major topic of discussion is expected to be the administration of the on-campus COP (Career Opportunities Program) program.

The talks opened last Wednesday. The negotiating parties have agreed that there will be no "premature" releases of information to the public. This morning's negotiating session will be the second of the talks.

The COP Program is a federally funded project that is assisting about 32 minority students attending UMass. It has been sharply criticized recently by the Third World Caucus.

Regularly scheduled classes were held at the School of Education yesterday for the first time since last Monday. They had been cancelled due to the Marathon, which was itself cancelled.

The School of Ed Non-Minority Caucus met yesterday and reportedly decided to conduct research in four different areas in an effort to help the negotiations reach more constructive goals.

The School of Ed Non-Minority Caucus consists of "concerned" white graduate students and faculty members.

The School of Ed faculty also met yesterday in an informal session. Unverified reports indicate that the composition of the School of Ed negotiating team was discussed.

That team consists of Deans Norma Jean Anderson (Student Affairs), Bob Suzuki (Administration), Atron Gentry (Special Programs), Earl Seidman (Academic Affairs), Dick Clark (Assistant), and Dwight Allen (School of Ed); Donald Carew (Chairman of the Center Directors); and Barbara Love, Robert Siuclair, Tom Hutchinson and Michael Minor (all of the Executive Committee of the School Council).

The members of the Caucus Steering Committee, negotiators for the Third World Caucus, are Preston Bruce, Gloria Joseph, William Tutman (all three are faculty), Rochelle Chandler, Jean Moss, Mariano Trujillo (graduate students); Rhonda Bolling, Paul Chandler, Linda Trujillo (undergraduates), and Joe Samuelson (a staff member).

South Vietnamese troops from the 21st ARVN Division move up Highway 13 behind a rolling barrage of artillery. Troopers are trying to clear Highway 13 of North Vietnamese forces who are ambushing the highway which leads to An Loc, the provincial capital. North Vietnamese forces launched a heavy shelling attack Sunday morning on An Loc and assaulted it on the ground from four directions, field reports stated. (AP)

S. Vietnamese Struggle To Regroup Defenses

SAIGON (AP) - Battered by enemy tank assaults, South Vietnamese forces in the central highlands scrambled to regroup Monday night and throw up new defense positions north of the key city of Kontum.

The main thrust of the Communist command's offensive appeared to be switching to the central highlands in an effort to cut major highways and seize the cities of three highlands provinces.

At U.S. Command headquarters in Saigon a surface calm prevailed but an officer presented at a top-level briefing reported the word "catastrophic" was used to describe the situation in the highlands.

Kontum, a provincial capital of about 30,000 people, was seen as the key highlands' target in the 26-day-old offensive.

Five government bases or positions fell Monday as the tankled North Vietnamese forces drove toward Kontum. There was no count of casualties on either side in the swirl of the scattered battles, but senior U.S. officers said the South Vietnamese 22nd Division lost 17 of its 22 to enemy tanks and missiles.

While the fighting built up in the highlands, the front in the northern provinces below the demilitarized zone was described as static, but enemy rockets hit Da Nang for the second time in a day.

Four rockets were fired into the city shortly before midnight. There was no immediate word on casualties or damage. Earlier Monday, 13 rockets hit the big air base at Da Nang, wounding nine persons and damaging three buildings.

One of the U.S. Air Force B52 bombers that hit Thanh Hoa in North Vietnam had landed earlier in the day at the Da Nang base with its fuselage peppered with shrapnel holes from a North Vietnamese surface-to-air missile. The B52 strike was aimed at supply targets 80 miles south of Hanoi.

Hanoi claimed a B52 and two other planes were shot down in Thanh Hoa province Monday and that a U.S. warship was set afire.

At sea, two U.S. destroyers were hit by enemy shore guns off the coast but there were no casualties and damage was termed minor.

In other ground action, the embattled provincial capital of An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon, still was under heavy pressure but it was resupplied by air and 80 wounded men were lifted out.

Most of the activity, however, centered in the highlands, where it had been expected that the North Vietnamese would launch a major drive.

Since the enemy offensive began, roads have been cut and passes blocked in the highlands in an effort to isolate towns and military bases. It now is believed government defenders may fall back from more remote positions in order to consolidate and make stands around the populated centers.

Even before the offensive, some U.S. advisers were saying the North Vietnamese would try to take the three central highlands provinces, Kontum, Pleiku and Binh Dinh. When the offensive began, the Saigon command concentrated, however, on meeting the enemy in force below the demilitarized zone and at An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon.

Government forces in the highlands were spread thin and despite recent efforts to rush in supplies some Americans expressed the belief it is all too late and too little.

In Brief...

Price Rollbacks Ordered

NEW YORK (AP) — Price Commission Chairman C. Jackson Grayson, Jr., said Monday some of the nation's largest companies will be ordered in the next few weeks to make price rollbacks and customer refunds totaling "hundreds of millions of dollars."

The action will serve as "a lock, a second line of defense" in an attempt to hold down profit-margin increases.

Pollution Heard At Local Levels

WASHINGTON (AP) — A unanimous Supreme Court has concluded that air-pollution problems generally are so varied it is often best to have suits heard first at the local level.

The decision Monday blunts a drive by 18 states to require the nation's four biggest automakers to install control devices on some 85 million old cars.

Primary Predictions

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Sen. George S. McGovern, predicting he will score "a clean sweep" in the Massachusetts Democratic primary, joined his two top presidential rivals Monday in a last-day drive for Pennsylvania's big block of convention votes.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, saying he will run first in the Pennsylvania preference poll and capture more of the 135 delegates than anyone else Tuesday, swung through southwestern Pennsylvania by helicopter in a bid to score his first major primary victory.

War Protests Continue

NEW HAVEN (AP) — War protests continued in a lower key in New Haven Monday with 800 Yale students saying they were fasting for 24 hours and donating the money from their college meals to antiwar groups.

Apollo Coming Home

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) - Apollo 16's astronauts rocketed out of lunar orbit Monday night aboard their command ship, Casper, and started a 240,000-mile voyage home with a record cargo of rocks.

Astronauts John W. Young, charles M. Duke Jr. and Thomas K. Mattingly II fired Casper's main rocket-a once-bothersome engine which delayed the moon landing last Thursday-to break away from the moon's gravity and sped toward a South Pacific splashdown on Thursday.

The lunar module, Orion, was discarded in orbit Monday afternoon. It broke away from the command ship and went into a tumble that could not be controlled by radio signals from earth. This tumbling, which could not be immediately explained, cancelled plans to crash the module into the moon to excite seismometers at the Apollo landing sites.

"That Orion was a mighty good spacecraft," said Young as the lander spun away. "Real beautiful flying machine. And a real great lunar base, too. We'll miss her."

Tax Simplification Sought

NORWICH, Conn. (AP) - The commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service said Monday night he would like to see tax laws simplified so that "more people can fill out their own tax forms."

"The reform we need is simplification of tax laws," said Commissioner Johnnie M. Walters, rather than the closing of what some people consider "loopholes."

Walters made the comment in reply to a reporter's question at a news conference prior to the mid-year meeting of the Connecticut Bar Association.

He said he did not define loopholes as quirks of the tax laws that allow certain individuals to avoid paying certain taxes.

A loophole, he said, is an instance in which taxes are not paid even though Congress did not intend to permit such nonpayment.

Thus, he said, he considers deduction of the expense of hiring a yacht several times in one year to be legitimate if it is for "business" rather than "pleasure."

Walters also characterized as "inaccurate" recent reports that 112 individuals in the nation will pay no taxes this year. He contended that many of these individuals eventually will pay some taxes. Walters did not elaborate.

As an example of the kind of person who will avoid taxes altogether, he cited an individual who had a gross income in 1970 of $1 million, but who carried over a $4 million "business loss" from 1969.

"This is quite legitimate," he said.

In his prepared text, Walters reiterated the previously announced plans of the IRS to investigate and monitor the practices of commercial tax-return preparers.

"We have no axe to grind with those who prepare tax returns adequately and responsibly," he said. "Our worry is about the incompetent and unscrupulous preparer."

Some of the practices Walters said the IRS is investigating are:
—use of "false or misleading" advertising to attract customers.
—encouraging clients to "inflate the number of dependents."
—altering addresses on returns so refunds go to the tax return preparer rather than directly to the taxpayer.

Convention Site Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) - The man handling arrangements for the Republican National Convention said Monday problems in San Diego are almost insurmountable and called a meeting of the national committee to settle the convention site problem.

R.L. Herman, vice chairman of the Committee on Arrangements, said party chairman Robert Dole called the meeting for May 5 and 6 in Washington.

Miami Beach, which was eliminated from the convention bidding last summer, reportedly is considering submitting a new offer for consideration by the committee.

Sales and Sales Management Training Program

This Program is designed to develop young college graduates for careers in life insurance sales and sales management. It provides an initial training period of 3 months (including 2 weeks at a Home Office School) before moving into full sales work.

Those trainees who are interested in and who are found qualified for management responsibility are assured of ample opportunity to move on to such work in either our field offices or in the Home Office after an initial period in sales.

Aggressive expansion plans provide unusual opportunities for those accepted.

Chancellor Brandt's Govt. Faces Strong Opposition

BONN, GERMANY (AP) — The opposition Christian Democrats, seeking to exploit Chancellor Willy Brandt's weakened political position, announced Monday they will try to unseat him this week by parliamentary vote on his unpopular economic policies.

Ousting Brandt's Social Democratic-Free Democratic coalition could jeopardize ratification of his non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw, risk renewed Soviet cold war hostility and damage the atmosphere for President Nixon's Moscow visit.

Brandt lost the support of a Free Democrat lawmaker Sunday night, bringing his lower house count down to the bare minimum of 24 votes he needs to stay in power. The loss of only one of these votes would bring down his government.

The Christian Democrats announced after a meeting of the party's leadership that they will use a tactic called a "constructive vote of no confidence." This means they will try to win an absolute majority in the lower house in favor of ousting Brandt and replacing him with their leader, Barzel.

The Christian Democrats have indicated they would not seek ratification of the non-aggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw as they now stand, trying instead to negotiate better terms.

In the budget debate scheduled to start Wednesday and spread over three days, the government will seek approval for a budget providing an 1.4 per cent state expenditure rise to $31.5 billion next year.

The Christian Democrats are expected to launch a slashing attack on the budget and on the issue of long-promised social reforms which have not materialized.

Winning a no-confidence vote against Brandt in parliament would enable the Christian Democrats to take over the government without having to call a general election.

Brandt's already shaky coalition was battered by a double blow Sunday night the defection of Free Democrat lawmaker Wilhelm Helms and the failure of Brandt's men to win a state election in Baden-Wuerttemberg, West Germany's third largest state.

The opposition, by timing its no-confidence motion to the debate on economic policy, seeks to hit Brandt politically where he is weakest. His economic policies are much less popular than his treaties with Moscow and Warsaw renouncing the use of force and recognizing World War II territorial losses.

In the election, the Christian Democrats retained control of Baden-Wuerttemberg's votes in the federal upper house, maintaining a 21-20 majority in the chamber, where it can delay if not block ratification of the treaties if Brandt's government survives the no-confidence vote.

The treaties were to have been the go-ahead signal for Soviet implementation of the four-power accord, relaxing an East German stranglehold on the Autobahn through Communist territory to West Berlin and permitting West Berliners to visit across the city's dividing wall.

And this would have been the go-ahead signal the West has awaited for a Moscow-proposed European security conference.

ITT Case Continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential aide Peter Flanigan said Monday that shortly before settlement of antitrust suits against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. he told Richard G. Kleindienst that the company would make a last-ditch fight in the Supreme Court.

Kleindienst, then deputy attorney general, has testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee that he had no contact with the White House on the ITT affair settled out of court in the summer of 1971.

But Flanigan said in a letter to the committee chairman that he carried to Kleindienst a message of desperation from ITT director Felix G. Rohatyn saying the company would reject a settlement proposed by Richard W. McLaren, then assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's Antitrust Division.

Flanigan wrote that on June 29, 1971, he met with Rohatyn who "indicated his belief that the proposal was so tough as to be unacceptable to the company that the company intended to continue to fight the suits in court."

Researcher Finds Fault With F.D.A.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Stanford University researcher said Monday that secret food-safety files opened by his lawsuit show the Food and Drug Administration "has consistently and routinely countenanced violations of the law which have endangered the public health."

"Both scientifically and legally, bureaucratic secrecy has made actions possible which could never stand the light of public review," said Dale B. Hattis, a graduate student in genetics.

FDA officials were not immediately available for comment.

Hattis' 78-page report lists a series of actions culminating, he said, in smoked-fish processors being allowed to add sodium nitrite, a preservative, after the FDA learned many firms were ignoring federal regulations and using additive illegally.

The FDA's safety date on nitrite were opened for public inspection after Hattis and the Environmental Defense Fund filed a federal court suit under the Freedom of Information Act.

Nitrite has been shown to combine with secondary amines in the stomach to produce nitrosamine, a potent cancer-causing substance which has produced tumors in a wide variety of laboratory animals. "It is highly unlikely that man will prove to be the only species resistant to their action," Hattis said.

Sodium nitrite is used to preserve color and extend the shelf-life of a wide range of foods including smoked fish, cured ham, bacon, frankfurters, luncheon meats and some sausage.

The FDA long has classified the chemical as a "poisonous and deleterious substance" banned by federal law as a food additive, Hattis said.

Following the deaths from botulism poisoning of at least nine prsons who consumed Great Lakes smoked fish in the early 1960s the FDA adopted emergency measures in October 1963 advising destruction of all smoked-fish products from the region that had not been heated to at least 180 degrees fahrenheit for at least 30 minutes.

Two years later, Hattis said, the National Fisheries Institute sought permission to use nitrite because, according to an FDA memo, it would provide an additional margin of safety against botulism "when the FDA-recommended processing time and temperature are not followed...Many firms are already using the chemical on fish without permission and...-nearly all of the smoking and curing firms are not treating Great Lakes fish" according to FDA guidelines.

The FDA by that time had already granted petitions by four firms to use nitrite, including three "which had been using nitrite illegally in their products," Hattis said.

"None of these petitions contains any original scientific research by the firms into the question of whether the proposes uses are safe," he said. "In two of the four, the petitions simply expressed their belief that nitrite is safe."

After approved use of nitrite was expanded, Hattis said, "It is clear that the choice made by the FDA in allowing this new use of nitrite was not...between nitrite and botulism. It was between, nitrite, botulism, and enforcing reasonable sanitation and good manufacturing practices in the industry."

The 37th annual Bay State Livestock Classic will be held Friday and Saturday this week. Judging and special contests will set the stage for all types of livestock.

Livestock Classic

This year the 37th annual Bay State Livestock Classic will be held at Grinnell Arena Friday night April 28 from 7 to 10 and Saturday, April 29 from 8:30 AM to 4 PM. One hundred UMass and Stockbridge students will be competing in fitting and showing classes for beef, dairy, dairy goats, horses, oxen, sheep and swine. Judging will be based on the entrants' preparation of the animals and showmanship ability in the ring.

Speciality events Friday night include riding the infamous bucking barrel and a milk-maid contest. (Have you ever milked a cow?!) Saturday, in addition to livestock and dairy classes, there will be a dog obedience demonstration given by the Northampton and Belchertown Dog Training School, an oxen pull, baby animal parade, faculty harnessing contest, and many more events. Schedules are posted in the barns and room 319 Stockbridge. Admission is free-All are welcome!

Signs Of The Times

By TONY GRANITE

HEADLINE OF THE WEEK comes from the US-Fla-Tampa Oracle: "Dance to Escape Physical Boundaries."

Irresistible,eh?

CRUSADE TO COMMUNICATE is being mounted by the editors of Louisiana State's Daily Reveille, who are protesting the decision of the university comptroller to keep secret the LSU budget.

Even though the administrators admit the action is legally questionable, they justify it by pointing to an incident of several years ago when the budget was "improperly reproduced."

The campus newspaper was seeking a copy of the budget to use as a working document to report on it.

An editorial challenges "the school's right to classify public information. Perhaps it will then be required to open its books or perhaps it will evade state laws as it has in the past and keep them closed."

The Reveille has had crusading editors in recent years who have explored conditions in the state's jails and mental institutions. Their recent expose of violations of state fire laws resulted in citation of the University for 65 violations by the State Fire Marshal.

ALTERNATIVE TO GRADES is being suggested at Georgia State College-Atlanta as a "Statement of Competencies," according to a story in The Signal there.

Seems that a member of the School of Education faculty is saying that statements of trained faculty judgments are better than "A's" in telling employers exactly what a prospective employee can do.

ANOTHER HEADLINE OF THE WEEK appears in the UCal-Santa Barbara Daily Nexus: "Home Ec Burned-UCSB Drops Dept."

And that's the truth.

Use It Well

Although it is too early to say how well such a place will work, a Center for Social Change has been promised by the administration. We are glad that the administration has enough faith in students to allow us a chance at ending the malfunctions of society such as racism, sexism, and war.

Doctor Bromery, Chancellor, who has not yet shown any reasons for being mistrusted by students, has endorsed the end of R.O.T.C. at this campus. This is a positive step in ending this institution's programs designed to help people oppress others.

Hopefully, the whole incident of the strike and the takeover of the R.O.T.C. building have served at least so far to raise the consciousness of the students and faculty here.

The basic program of the Center for Social Change includes educational workshops on war, racism and sexism and their interrelationships, development of programs to deal with these, creation of day care, veterans, and women's centers, and establishment of a center for ongoing community action.

We hope all students will join in support for the Center.

Oops!

The Democratic ballot which will be used in today's presidential primary may be very confusing. We urge those of you who will vote today to be very careful. Read the instructions on the ballots carefully. If you make a mistake, like voting for too many candidates, your ballot will not count.

What Does It Matter?

By JOHN LANGWORTHY

Amherst, 24 April.—This morning would have been a typical, foggy Monday morning at the University of Massachusetts, except that by the time the warm spring sun dissipated the haze, Colonel George I. Connolly, a Middle East expert, was entering his Reserve Officers Training Corps offices in Dickinson Hall with apprehension. Because of President Nixon's intensified bombing of North Vietnam, the Five-College Student Community of approximately 35,000 had decided last week to go on strike. Events have been fast and furious.

Monday, 17 April, the University was closed for Patriots' Day. Tuesday morning the Minority Caucus blocked access to the internationally acclaimed School of Education. A Council Meeting of faculty and students met in Marks Meadow Auditorium that night. The mood was chaotic, intense, unpredictable, explosive, sometimes paranoid. After a fisticuff in Dean Dwight Allen's office and five hour's deliberation, the Council voted to cancel the internationally advertised "Marathon" thereby avoiding a violent confrontation. The Minority Caucus unnegotiably opposed the week-long Marathon because it represented the School of Education's lack of issue with institutional racism. Secret negotiations are underway.

Wednesday night, University police occupied the ROTC building for security reasons: Holy Cross's ROTC building had been bombed. Thursday morning, the Women's Caucus and Vietnam Veterans Against the War "liberated" Dickinson Hall, unnegotiably demanding University Administration to remove ROTC from campus. Chancellor Bromery responded by having the police withdrawn and rescheduling classes to other buildings.

Thursday night, the Mass Strike Rally met in the Student Union Ballroom. Original Strike demands were

(1) An immediate end to all bombings and withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia;
(2) Freedom for all political prisoners;
(3) An end to racism, sexism and oppression on this University campus.

Because of "several unmistakably racist and sexist comments", the Third World Alliance and then the Women's Caucus in support walked out of the Meeting.

The Meeting fell into utter chaos. An hour later the two groups and their spokespersons returned to announce a policy of noncooperation with the remaining Strike Body. Hours later the original crowd of at least 2,000 had dwindled into a weary few and the meeting adjourned.

Friday morning one hundred persons were arrested for civil disobedience when they blockaded Westover A.F.B. Gates. About 3,000 demonstrated at the same gates later that afternoon. There was no violence.

At midnight the Five-College Strike was over. In UMass's Strike Referendum, 5000 students voted to end the Strike by a 64 vote margin. But strike work continued.

By Saturday the Center for Social Change, established in Dickinson Hall, was well underway. The concept is to communicate pertinence, to deal with top-priority issues and to end oppression. The proposed program consists of workshops on war, racism, sexism, and community action. The University Strike and its spasmotic dissolution raised issues of immediate and utmost concern to our nation. The Center for Social Change is busily dedicated to finding solutions.

The problem is that Dickinson Hall has been designated as ROTC headquarters by the University Administration. The Center for Social Change people are determined to stay. Since education in "military science and tactics" is stipulated in all land-grant colleges by the Morrill Act of 1863 and since the University Board of Trustees must ultimately designate policy and use of Dickinson's 25 rooms and offices, red tape is inevitable. Chancellor Bromery has three options:

(1) Remove occupants and allow ROTC to remain;
(2) Find ROTC or else the Center another building;
(3) Remove ROTC from campus.

A predictable forecast is that the Center, which has even been announced over the Italian press, will be allocated the building and that ROTC will probably remain on campus. If the University of Massachusetts does dismiss ROTC from its campus, it will be the first federal land-grant college to do so. But what does it matter? Dickinson Hall is scheduled to become University Police Headquarters next fall.

The Tragedy Of Belchertown

by Representative JOHN W. Olver
(D—Amherst)

The controversy that has swirled around Belchertown State School has brought great attention to the situation of the mentally retarded in this state. I have been part of the effort to improve Belchertown for several years and have served since its creation, on the Special Commission to Investigate Conditions at Belchertown State School. This Commission has received much publicity. I believe a short discussion here of where Belchertown was, and where it is now would be helpful in clearing up any misconceptions that may have arisen.

Next week, in this column, I will write of where we must go beyond Belchertown in providing new types of care for the retarded.

Early in this century, Massachusetts was a national leader in providing care for its retarded. Our institutions such as Belchertown were considered models of what good care could be.

By the 1960's, we were among the most backward states. We had failed to adopt new techniques and tried to rest comfortably on earlier laurels. Belchertown State School, which serves basically the Western four counties, had become overcrowded and understaffed. 1,500 residents lived in space designed for 1,000. Residents did much of the work because too few staff had been provided. Residents were forced to crawl over each other's beds to get to their own. Privacy was totally lost. The food budget in 1969 was just over 60 cents per person per day. Mental and dental care was totally inadequate.

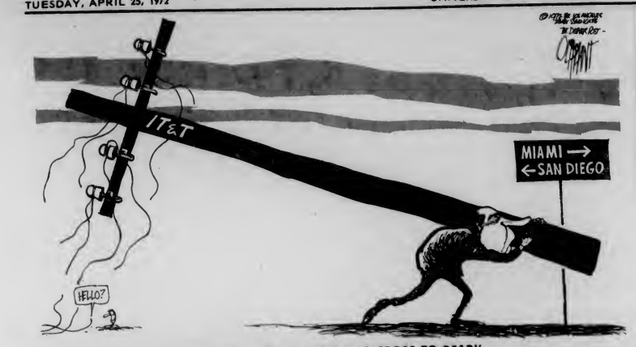
These conditions were exposed in 1970 and things began to change. The investigative commission was formed and many improvements have begun. New administrators along with new focus by the Department of Mental Health have joined with the commission in providing better care for residents at Belchertown. The executive branch, though reluctantly at times, has begun a reduction of population and an almost 50% increase in staff over the past three years. The budget rose from 4.3 million in 1969 to over 6 million in 1971.

Unfortunately, this has not been enough. While the dorms are physically brighter, and educational, medical, dental, and rehabilitation services are better now, care is still difficult, and employee morale remains low.

A large cause of this problem is the over 400 persons who have left. They were capable individuals, many of whom probably never needed institutionalization, and who were part of the work force in a very real sense. Therefore, the official increases in staff, of whom many were untrained, has been offset by the loss of these more capable inmates. Thus the living areas may be brighter, but privacy is still as fleeting as before. Inmates are still seen walking around with no attendents and nothing to do.

Community focus on the tragedy at Belchertown has resulted in several actions. The legal action of parents of children at Belchertown has been well publicized in its efforts to insure proper care, and in its provisions for a revamping of existing conditions.

A group of concerned students, many of whom were volunteer workers at the school, have formed SOS (Students Offering Support) to aid the parents in their legal costs. Community and civic leaders have formed Community Offering Support, which has been in the process of expanding its aid to Belchertown, beyond the legal costs of the parents.



Yet for all this help Belchertown is now getting, it has become apparent that alternative methods of care, of retardation detection, of new sources of financial support, new physical structures for the actual care of the retarded, new structures for the residence of the retarded are needed.

These things are being actively worked on, and next week I will present some of these alternatives that I have been active in. For, we must learn our lessons from Belchertown and strive now to insure in the future, that our retarded will be treated with the dignity and compassion that is their right.

Letters To The Editor

Citizen Vs. Administrator

To the Editor:

Unlike the reed of the fable (in wind, "it bends without breaking") I prefer not to wait until the current gusts of campus protest blow over. I wish to register a protest against the forms the protest movement is, once more, assuming.

Briefly, to preserve universities as academic institutions of learning, it is inadmissible for holders of any particular political view to use universities as instruments for the pursuit of their particular objectives. Not as long as normal forms of political organization and action, freedom of petitioning, etc., are freely available. (In countries where they are not available to use of any social organization as a vehicle of political action might be justified.)

The appropriation of university facilities for the promotion of particular political views by particular groups, no matter what their size, breaks a basic gentlemen's agreement of the democratic order, of which so many seem to be innocently unaware: "Do not let your actions interfere with symmetrical rights of others." Disrupting the normal course of university activities in order to promote political demands of particular groups will always violate the right of those who wish to use the university for the specialized purpose for which it was consituted, i.e., for academic study and teaching. Therefore, civil decency demands of all of us to resist the temptation of converting the place of our professional activity—workshops, barbershops, hospitals, factories, post offices, buses, or universities—into a means of political pressure.

The breach of the rules by some puts those who obey them at a serious political disadvantage. By their civil discipline, they are restricted to the appropriate channels for the promotion of their views and wishes, while their place of work is expropriated for political action by the unscrupulous. To protect the university against such unfair expropriation many opponents of the Vietnam war have joined the FACULTY GROUP FOR ACADEMIC FREEDOM, of which I am a member; they have understood that no subjectively felt nobility of purpose or validity of opinion can justify the violation of the basic rules of conduct.

It will not do to say: "But you are free to do the same thing." Basic rules of democratic conduct – which is only a special application of the morality of considerateness – are not negotiable. Let me explain with the help of Paul Samuelson's anecdote: "A gay young blade is blithely swinging his umbrella and is told off by an irate oldster. GAY YOUNG BLADE: What's the matter, this is a free country, isn't it? IRATE OLDSTER: Yes, young man, but your freedom ends where my nose begins." To clinch the point, the issue is not solved by telling the oldster: "Why, you may swing your umbrella too!"

In this connection, it would be desirable if the top administrators of our universities, making political declarations, made clear that they act as private citizens, and not in their official capacity.

Confusing

To the Editor:

There seems to be some confusion concerning the Strike of last week as evidenced in the letters to the editor. Developing ties with the Black community and with the working class as a whole are at a low ebb. As a whole it seemed evident to me that we white students are concerned about peace and justice yet we are deeply confused in ways of implementing those demands.

The failure of the Strike lies in two basic criticisms: a failure in clarity of purpose and a failure of white radicals in leading the struggle of understanding racism. Only two of the demands had any sort of clarity. They were mainly: "an immediate end to all bombing and withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia: and "Support of the Minority Caucus in negotiating with the school of Education. The other demands were extremely vague and as such were hard to explain. This led to a lack of direction, evident on Thursday when groups were organizing actions without first coming to grips with the four demands. There was no central point of attack, only the society and community as a whole. If the Strike had continued ths would have led to frustration.

In one sense we realized the need to support our Black sisters and brothers, yet by the Thursday night meeting this realization was still on an intellectual level. When Ms. Cole was shouted down, white radicals across the room should have stood up in defense of her and the Black liberation movement. For the most part this was not done. Not one of us white radicals stood up and attacked the Mobe member during his racist speech. we sat idly by.

Out of this strike should develop an ongoing independent department to deal with racism and sexism in the society. A definite lack of historical understanding of racism is obvious. The need to have ongoing research into racism, how it is used, and who uses it is clear. Also, this department should develop an analysis for changing the social system which breeds off of this racism.

In conclusion, this past week must not be another spring Woodstock, but rather must take on the characterization of an ongoing functioning organization. Full support must be given to the Center for Social Change which has the best possibilities in meeting this need.

Making It Known

To the Editor:

On this day the students from the five Institutions of learning gathered outside the Institutions of destruction, the Institute of destruction being "Westover A.F.B.".

It was known by all that this was to be a non-violent movement. The Institute of destruction was also very aware of that fact. But they still had their armed security guards strategically positioned within a building not far from the point of the demonstration. Let it be known, the security guards within that structure were in fact armed with M-16 rifles.

Upon my notification that there was to be a non-violent movement directly focused upon Westover to protest the air war and the killings of human beings, I thought this was going to be an egotistical trip for many. But once there, my forethought immediately changed. "The people were for real and sincere."

For myself and in behalf of all G.I.'s oppressed by the air war and the death of human beings in Indochina, I would like to bestow my deepest thanks and gratitude to all that participated, directly or indirectly.

To protest simply because of an increase in bombings is not enough. If we are ever to change this society, "the people of this country must make it known constantly that we will no longer accept the killings of other human beings." "We must and we will Unite as a people."

Outrageous

To the Editor and Chancellor Bromery:

The actions of the Women's Caucus and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War cast considerable doubt on their avowed motives of equality and peace. How can these ends be achieved if any group can, at will, seize a building and use it for their own purpose? Their action is even more outrageous in the light of the student referendum which favored an end to strike activities.

I feel we should stop treating these groups like some spoiled child who must have its way. It is time for those groups who say they are dedicated to the will of the people to begin to listen to what the people are saying, especially about them. I would ask the Chancellor to return Dickinson Hall to the students.

Recognized Need

To the Editor:

On Thursday night, the striking groups were presented with a proposal for an organization that would reflect an understanding of the interrelated issues of war, racism and sexism. An objection was raised to the proposed structure for the Steering Committee of this organization. A spokesperson from an on-campus Anti-War Organization thought the movement was not being appropriately represented. Certain comments judged to be racist and sexist were addressed to Johnetta Cole of the The Third World Alliance and were applauded by numerous members of the audience. At this point, a split in the strike coalition developed as it became apparent that the issues we were addressing ourselves to were present in our own community.

The takeover of Dickinson Hall and the demands tied to this takeover were an outgrowth of a pervasive feeling on campus that a conserted effort be made to promote and develop a viable social alternative. A university's function is to promote life and understanding, not to perpetuate death and destruction. This is why we are demanding that ROTC be asked to leave this campus and that The Center for Social Change be recognized as a legitimate collective organization.

Many groups both on and off campus have supported us and recognized the need for our center. It is a broad-based coalition including faculty, students, and community workers, leaving no room for partisan politics, just the desire and commitment to non-violent social change. We have been called radical and we may well be in our commitment to altering the dehumanizing direction our society has taken. We need your help and understanding in this growing venture and encourage your participation and support. Feel free to drop by any hour of the day or night.

Civil Disobedience

To the Editor:

"One has to speak out and stand up for one's convictions. Inaction at a time of conflagration is inexcusable. Those who are attracted to non-violence should, according to their ability and opportunity, join the experiment."

—Mahatma Gandhi

At Westover we came to bear witness against the war and killing which we cannot tolerate. The small crimes we committed, the arrests we willingly submitted to, grew out of an extreme and hurting moral outrage against the larger crimes governments commit when they wage war. In engaging in non-violent action we reaffirmed the humanity of those who arrested us, as well as our own humanity and that of the people inside the base. Non-violence is a very beautiful thing, because saving lives, and life, is a very beautiful thing.

We realized that the leniency of the judge was due mainly to our status of being white, middle-class college students, and, that while the concept of civil disobedience is important, what is also important is expressing solidarity with the enlisted men inside Westover. And we also realize that Westover, while being linked directly with the antiwar issue, is in the last analysis part of a larger economic and social system whose violence and oppression is directed against Third World people, black people and women in this country, and the worker-whether black or white, male or female.

PASSIVE RESISTANCE ACTIONS

1. Civil Disobedience and Memorial Service at Westover Air Force Base Monday morning. C.D. is also planned for Tuesday and Wednesday A.M. We need your participation. Please attend the non-violence, civil disobedience workshops, emphasizing role playing scheduled at UMass Campus Center Ninth Floor Lounge 7:30 p.m. Monday and Tuesday night.
2. Candle-light Vigil at Westover Air Force Base * Main Gate 9 p.m. Monday through Tuesday morning April 24, 1972

The administration has dramatically increased the bombing of North Vietnam. In these past three weeks, Westover has been tragically hit. 1600 men have been flown to Indo-China, very often on only six hour notice. Twenty-seven Westover-based airmen have been killed. The men at Westover are enraged, saddened and confused. At 2 a.m. on Tuesday April 25th, 450 G.I.'s will leave for Vietnam.

We will hold a candlelight vigil for both Asians and Americans killed in Indo-China, and for the 450 GIs who will be flown out during our vigil. Please join us.

3. We would also like to propose a workshop to co-ordinate the effort of GI activists, veterans, and students in setting up future actions of civil disobedience. Further, the ultimate goal of the workshop would be the formation of a true sense of solidarity with the GIs at Westover Air Force Base, supporting them in dealing with their oppression.

The Monday Westover Bust

By GILBERT J. SALK

I was arrested Monday morning, with about 35 brothers and sisters, at the Main Gate of Westover Air Force Base. I'm sure you've all read about busts before, but I'd like to share a subjective view of the experience with you.

We met on the Amherst Common at 6:15 a.m. It was a clear, quiet, calm morning--Amherst was not yet awake--and it stood in stark contrast to the war we were about to act against. At first, there were only five of us, but others drifted in and the group swelled to over fifty. At 6:30 we piled into cars and drove to the Base.

Somehow, by the time we got there, the size of the group had swelled to nearly 100, and there was a strong sense of unity and anticipation shared among us. For a few moments we watched as cars drove to the guardhouse, were stopped briefly by APs, and then drove onto the base. Then we stepped into the road and crossed to the grassy island immediately in front of the guardhouse.

Several of us had small wooden crosses, symbolizing the american and vietnamese lives which had been destroyed by the war. We implanted them in the ground nearest the guardhouse, then formed a semicircle for a brief memorial ceremony led by Frank Dorman and Sam Johnson. Some of us made verbal offerings to the group as part of the ceremony. I shared the sense of sorrow at the human cost of the war, and expressed my joy at the expression of humanity which our witness was about to represent. In addition, I noted a new sense that freedom requires that we not imprison ourselves with a fear of prison. ("Freedom's just another word for nothin' left to lose...")

There was a moment of silence as we stood in a circle holding hands, then we slowly moved toward the gates, breaking into two smaller circles in order to block both gates. We sat in the road in front of the gates, in puddles, on wet pavement, on coats. We sang Kumbaya.

There's a kind of strength which grows between people who share an ideal and take some risk in order to express that ideal. That strength flowed around the circle as we song, and grew stronger as we used it to express the love which motivated us to seek arrest as a vehicle for displaying our repugnance with the war.

As the police advised us through a bullhorn that we were breaking the law and that we would be given two minutes to disperse, the bond between us firmed as each of us summoned up our own resolve to stay. We saw our supporters, many of whom had been arrested Friday, moving up the line of blocked cars and offering the drivers leaflets explaining who we were and why we were there.

Then the two minutes were up and we were declared under arrest. The police came and lifted us toward the bus. Some of us walked; others went limp and had to be carried. And the singing went on.

On the bus, as we were being driven to the Chicopee courthouse, we rapped with each other and the police who had arrested us. We explained that we had not come out to hassle them, and that we hoped that they dug what we were doing. They did. And the vibes were fine.

Inside the courthouse, we were first placed in a large holding cell, where we shared our love and concern for each other, sang some more, and talked about our perceptions and feeling from the bust.

We were taken from the cell, booked and searched, and put into a different holding cell. To our dismay, our sisters were separated from us, and we were unable to continue the close sharing/supporting which had been going on with them.

Our new cell was like a zoo. It was a large room, with small barred rooms off of it. Each of the smaller cells was isolated from the adjoining cells by a metal wall. Each had a bare metal cot and a combination sink-and-toilet. No windows. Heavy iron doors. We were allowed to move freely about in the larger room, but it was impossible to avoid projecting myself into one of those cells, with the door locked, and the thought was horrifying. There is no way to pretend that jails are rehabilitative; the name of the game is not even punishment; the only word is revenge.

Some of the brothers and sisters who had been in the support group managed to smuggle some donuts in to us, and we discovered a tool box with a hacksaw in it. My hunch is that we were not in a maximum security situation.

After about an hour, Bill Norris, an attorney who is donating his time to us, arrived and rapped with us about what to do in court. The charges wer disturbing the peace, disorderly conduct, and preventing people from reaching their place of gainful employment. It seemed clear that a guilty plea would bring sentences of ten days each for the first two charges, and a ten dollar fine for the third. On Friday, all were suspended for six months. Some of us, however, felt that it was more important to plead not guilty and try to make a statement of conscience at the trial.

Shortly after Bill left we were led into the courtroom. The judge, it turned out, was still sympathetic to our cause and understanding of our actions, but he felt constrained by the fact that we were costing the city of Chicopee a great deal of money because they had to call in auxiliary police to deal with us. As a result he would not suspend the fines on those of us who chose to plead guilty. However, he permitted each of those pleading guilty to make a statement.

Some took the opportunity to state their moral objections to the war. Others built on this and added that the city could ease the tax burden caused by the need to arrest demonstrators at Westover by charging the Base Commander for maintaining a public nuisance, or by writing to Congress and asking them to close the base. The statements were brief but eloquent.

After those pleading guilty had been disposed of (and given a month to pay their ten dollar fine), the names of those remaining were read and each of us were asked how we plead. Some chose to stand mute, and the judge ordered not guilty pleas entered in their behalf. Others strongly stated not guilty as their opportunity arose.

I chose to respond to each of the charges separately. I stated that according to the news, the president, and the death tolls, there is no peace which I could have been disturbing, so that I was not guilty of that charge. I responded to the disorderly conduct change by commenting that I had come to protest the disorder in Vietnam, and that creating a new disorder would have been contradictory to my goals, so that I not guilty of that charge. To the final charge I answered that I had come to Westover to be arrested as

ANY AIRLINE CAN TAKE YOU TO EUROPE FOR A LOW FARE.
BUT ONLY TWA CAN OFFER YOU ALL THIS:

TWA's STUTELPASS.*

A coupon booklet that gets you a room and Continental breakfast in either a guesthouse or student hotel in any of 52 European cities for only $4.80 a night.
No advance reservations needed.
And, as a bonus, we throw in free coupons good for bullfights, concerts, the use of a bicycle, theater tickets, sightseeing and more.

A higher grade of reserved accommodations, in any of 52 European cities.
They range in price from $6 to $18 a day, and include a room and Continental breakfast in either a guesthouse or economy hotel, taxes and all service charges.
As a free bonus, we also throw in sightseeing tours, parties, theater tickets, local transportation and TWA guide books.

TWA's GETAWAY GUIDES.*

They not only describe the regular sightseeing attractions, but the offbeat places as well.
And have discount coupons good for hotels, restaurants, shops, cars, tours, etc.
They're available at all TWA ticket offices or from your TWA travel agent.

TWA's FREE GETAWAY CARD.*

With it, you can charge youth airfare, Stutelpass, Bed and Breakfast Adventures, car rentals and more, in the United States and Europe.
And then, if you want, you can also take up to two years to pay.

TWA's CONVENIENT DEPARTURES.
TWA offers over 150 Ambassador flights daily to Europe. And over 40 flights a day across the United States.

TWA CHARGES THE LOWEST SCHEDULED FARE.
TWA guarantees that the fare you pay is the lowest fare charged by any scheduled non-stop airline.
And should the airfare be lowered, we'll refund the difference.
So, call your travel agent or TWA. And this summer get more than just a low fare to Europe.

Students Attempt To Storm B.U.

BOSTON (AP - Some 500-600 students and other young people attempted to storm into the administration building or Boston University Monday but were turned back at the door by three uniformed campus police officers.

A spokesman for the university said some stones were thrown during the incident and the glass window on the door to the building was broken. He said no one was injured.

Approximately 300 students gathered in front of Marsh Chapel at about noon and went into the student union building in the evening for a meeting to discuss action they might take.

The crowd of several hundred students spread out into the street in front of the chapel and by 4:30 p.m. had blocked all traffic in the outbound lane of Commonwealth Avenue.

Police diverted outbound traffic off the avenue at Kenmore Square to the east of the university, and most motorists were able to bypass the blockade.

The police then moved up the avenue and dispersed the crowd, clearing the street. Two students were taken into custody after some stones were thrown, but later were released.

The demonstration was part of a continuing round of antiwar demonstrations in Boston and New England for the past week.

The university spokesman said the demonstrators decided to take over a university building and decided upon one which houses offices and contains the school's computer center.

The demonstrators were turned back by the unarmed campus police and returned to the campus area when Boston Police arrived to break up a massive traffic jam developing on Commonwealth Ave., a major artery running through the campus.

By about 4 p.m. the group, which numbered close to 60 persons in front of the computer center building, had broken up into small groups.

Prison Inmates Protest

NORFOLK, Mass. (AP) Six to 10 inmates continued a protest in the yard of the state Correctional Institution at Norfolk Monday after other inmates returned to their quarters and about 75 riot-equipped state police stood by outside the prison.

The medium security institution has 741 inmates, said Mel Bernstein, assistant to Corrections commissioner John O. Boone.

Bernstein, who was at the prison, said the protest began at 8 a.m. when inmates are scheduled to report to work. He said six inmates continued walking in the yard rather than report to jobs.

He said that when 5 officers tried to remove the six prisoners from the yard to their unit in the prison, the six were joined by two other inmates who freed the six from the guards.

He said that state police were called as a precaution. A state trooper at the nearby Foxboro state police barracks said the troopers were standing by in a field near the prison.

Bernstein said that all but six or 10 prisoners returned to their units and that George Bohlinger, superintendent of the prison, was going to each unit to talk to the inmates.

The six protesting inmates, he said, had a list of 25 grievances, headed by a demand for better medical facilities and treatment. Another was for better food, he said.

Bernstein said Bohlinger had discussed medical facilities and treatment with inmates Sunday, and that prisoners in 5 of the institution's 6 units agreed not to participate in a 'sick-in' protest.

a vehicle for protesting the war, that I knew that I would be moved immediately, and that as a result it was impossible for me to have, intentionally or otherwise, prevented people from going to their places of employment, so that I was not guilty of that charge.

We were all released on personal recognizance to appear in court on May 10. At this time, I would like to invite the entire University community to come celebrate my trial with me. I plan to base my defense on the laws of life, brotherhood, and christian and human morality, which I believe are of a higher authority than the laws of the state. There is, of course, no way that a "justice" enmeshed in law can respond to a defense based on morality, and I fully expect to be found guilty. But, with good fortune, some lessons will be learned and taught, and other people will be moved to take similar action to show that the war is totally unacceptable to them.

In the meantime, I trained more people to do civil disobedience Monday night for Wednesday morning.

There will be another training session tonight in the lounge on the 9th floor of the Campus Center at 7:30. Similar training sessions will take place each evening this week at the same time and location. People going to Westover, either to do civil disobedience or as support, should meet on the Amherst Common at 6:15 a.m. each morning. We feel that it is important that this action continue for as long as possible, so please come as soon as you feel moved to do so, and spread the word to your friends. Bring cars, please!

To you, and to the world, PEACE.

Chess Team Defeats Springfield

UMass won the yearly match with the Springfield Chess Club last week, 10-6. Springfield hosted the event this year. Because this was a club-versus-club match, the UMass team included several club members not from the University. Winning for the victors were Bob Corwin, Mike Stankiewicz, Ron Charbonneau, Jay Goguen, Paul Sarrazin, Robert Crease (Amherst College), Jan Sobiech (Frontier Regional High School), and Jon Samit and Richard Jennings (both of Amherst Regional High School). Mark Ordung and Martin Laine secured draws. Stephen Jones, Dave Palmer, Jim Lane, Ed Robert, and Warren Shepard (ARHS) lost their games.

The club's next match, against Harvard, will be held this Tuesday night. Those playing in this match should be in front of Newman Center at 6:00 p.m. Tuesday night. Only ten people can go, so if you're unsure whether or not you're playing, contact Bob Corwin, 665-8415.

WMUA Radical Politics Discussed

Tonight on WMUA's "Focus" program, radical politics at the local level will be the main subject of conversation. Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests for the program will be Eric Walgren and other members of the newly-formed Amherst "Tea Party."

Tonight's live program will also provide some early results of both the Massachusetts and Pennsylvania Presidential primaries.

—Weather—

By STEPHEN MARK FINE

It will be very comfortable and cool today with a high (if the sun gets high enough) in the low 50's. It ought to be quite fair and tepid tomorrow and tomorrow night with the chance of it getting wet at 1/5 the chances it normally is. Of course, this is presuming the major thesis of this axiom is that the weather is O.K. Eat well.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Libra persons can adjust without diminishing their own individuality. Libra can be a force which brings opposing factions together; the classical Libran advocates peace but will fight when the cause is right. Many born under this zodiacal sign will find their lives undergoing sudden changes. This is a period of publicity for some, notoriety for others. Libra harmonizes with Leo, Sagittarius, Gemini and Aquarius, but should be wary in dealings with Capricorn and Cancer. There is attraction to Aries, but it could be a case of opposites being drawn to each other.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Questions concerning partnership, marriage, legal rights are apt to dominate. What was planned could be upset. Play waiting game. Don't force issues or attempt to be your own attorney. Be thorough, conservative.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Persons you took for granted may act in rebellious manner. Be ready for changes, especially where employment picture is concerned. Gemini and Virgo individuals figure prominently. Be analytical.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Family members, with accent on youngsters, are temperamental. Your viewpoint may be modified. Where opposite sex is concerned, you could be puzzled or frustrated. In long run, however, you emerge victorious.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Avoid speculating. What appears solid could be subject to radical revision, change. Home, apartment, office is due for shakeup. Ride with tide. Be diplomatic. Don't reveal all you know. Let others talk.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take special care in traffic. Avoid unnecessary journeys. Relatives who make requests may merely be bored. Know it and respond accordingly. Stick to familiar ground. Discard rumors. Study factual information.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't throw good money after bad; conserve energy and funds. Finish what you start. Aries individual could be involved. What you gain comes from surprise source. One who makes many claims could be exposed.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are shaken from any rut. There is plenty of action. Be ready for quick moves. Be independent and original. Don't procrastinate. Set sights on goal and get going. Welcome contacts, change and challenge.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What was supposed to be confidential could come to light in unorthodox manner. Follow through on hunch. Refuse to be intimidated. You have allies, even though they may prefer to remain under cover.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friends may drain time and energy. Protect interests, especially in professional area. Forces tend to be scattered. Get facts. Plan on program of expansion. Social contact could now prove meaningful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Maintain balance, aplomb. Some tend now to make accusations. Source could be surprise. Realize you have recently attracted envy. Start building bridges of goodwill. One who was indifferent will make friendly overture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Long-range plans are subject to change. Check reservations. Place orders in advance that are connected with vacation, travel. Guarantee reservations. Open lines of communication. Some messages could go astray.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): One who advises on investments may inadvertently steer you along dead end. In actuality, you get legitimate guidance now from family member. Do entertaining at home. Remember birthdays, anniversaries.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are able to size up persons, situations accurately. You usually can perceive when something of importance is to occur. Learn to follow your own hunches. Social life accelerates. May could be your most significant month in 1972.

Celts Sold Again

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics, one of the National Basketball Association's most successful franchises, have been sold for the third time in the past seven years.

The Celtics, eliminated Sunday in the playoff for the NBA's Eastern Conference title, were sold to a syndicate headed by an unnamed New York attorney. Announcement of the agreement was made in New York Monday by Investors Funding Corp. which holds controlling stock.

No details of the sale were revealed and it was not immediately known if the club would stay in Boston or if the organization's personnel would be affected. The sale would be subject to approval of the NBA.

Wesley Wood, a spokesman for Investors Funding Corp. said details of the sale would be made public "when the transaction is complete."

News of the state caught club employees by surprise.

Howie McHugh, a publicity man for the team, said he had "no indication" that the sale was imminent. He said he knew no details of the sale.

"Boston's the fourth best drawing team in the league, in terms of money," McHugh said. "We're all quite worried that the Celtics might leave Boston."

He said he had understood that two groups, one based in Boston and the other in New York, had been negotiating for the club but knew no names of the people involved.

The sale of the Celtics comes less than five years after they were sold to P. Ballantine Sons Brewery of Newark, N.J., for a reported $3.5 million. Ballantine was later acquired by Investors Funding.

Ballantine bought the club from National Equities Inc., a holding company which bought the club in 1965.

There was speculation that Marvin Kratter, chairman of the board of National Equities and former president of the Celtics, was involved in the latest transaction.

DAVE COWENS hasn't been around long enough to remember all the times the Celtics have changed hands, but if he's around much longer he'll probably feel like a basketball, too. (AP Wirephoto)

Williams Tabs Bromberg For Stardom

ARLINGTON, Tex. (AP) — Peter Broberg makes the gals coo, the rival managers mumble, and Ted Williams so happy the Hall of Famer just might hang around several more years.

Broberg, a 22-year-old blue-eyed blonde with a crackling fast ball and a whipping curve, is one of the aces on Manager Williams' Texas Ranger pitching staff that has to rate as one of the better ones in the American League.

"He's getting confidence and he's going more to the slider and the curve," said Williams of the Ivy Leaguer from Dartmouth. "You can just see him getting better and better."

"That will be the fun part-if any-in this job seeing the improvement in those young fellows," Williams said.

Broberg put the Angels down on four hits Saturday in a 4-0 victory-the righthander's second against no losses.

"That guy can hum the ball," said Angel Manager Del Rice. "The Rangers have a pretty darn good pitching staff."

Broberg said Range, pitcher Dick Bosman and pitching coach Sid Hudson "have been patient with me while I developed my breaking pitch. I'm starting to get it over now. I bet I throw it 50 per cent of the time against California."

The 6-foot-3, 205-pound bachelor came off the Dartmouth campus last June and compiled a 5-9 record with the old Washington Senators. He had a no-hitter at Dartmouth.

"I tell you the difference between Dartmouth and the Majors," Broberg said, "is it's mastery of the breaking pitch. I really think I threw harder in college than I do right now."

Broberg, who rejected a $175,000 offer from Oakland when he graduated from high school, is a favorite of the young ladies as major league baseball begins its long-awaited stand in North Texas.

"He's the cute one on the team," one said.

Jinx Doesn't Worry Unser

NEW YORK (AP) — "The first five or ten laps are the hardest," said Mrs. Al Unser, throwing a look of endearment at her baby-faced husband. "And the finish-when he's leading, it seems the last ten laps will never end."

Otherwise, the red-haired wife of one of auto racing's top drivers manages to remain cool and relaxed while the man of her life is whirling around a track at better than 200 miles an hour.

"Certainly, there is a certain amount of fear," Mrs. Unser added. "You don't think about it. You don't talk about it. You just push it out of your mind."

"If you worried," said Unser, "...If you went into a race thinking you might be killed, you couldn't perform properly. So you just concentrate on getting the machine around the track as fast as you can."

Thus, neither Al nor his wife is haunted by the jinx Unser faces in the Indianapolis 500 May 27 when he seeks an unprecedented third straight victory in the historic event. Three men before him have had a shot at it and failed-Wilbur Shaw, Mauri Rose and Bill Vukovich. Vukovich died in his attempt.

"Al always says you make your own jinxes," said Mrs. Unser.

"Jinxes and superstitions-they're a lot of foolishness," Al added. "In 1970, when I won my first Indy, they said I couldn't win because I had the pole position-the pole hadn't won in seven years. In 1971, they told me I'd be jinxed by my number-No. 1."

The Unsers were guests at a luncheon Monday along with Mario Andretti and Joe Leonard, the other members of the so-called "Superteam" which will drive cars of a revolutionary new design in the 500 this year.

The cars, sleek winged jobs that appear ready to take off into space, are called "Parnellis" after Parnelli Jones, who with Vel Miletich is co-owner of the team.

"These cars are really racy," said Unser. "They're sleek, low in front and have these wings on the side. They're different. Auto racing is totally a team job-the machine, the driver, the pit crew. None should get more credit than the other."

Redmen Go For 13

By BILL BALLOU

So here it is, April 25, and the UMass baseball team has a record of 12 wins and no defeats. The UMass JV baseball team has a record of five wins and no defeats. This adds up to a pretty impressive record on all fronts for the Redmen baseballers.

That undefeated JV record is nice, and, of course, bodes well for the future. But that isn't the main area of concern in the UMass world of bats and balls. The big thing is–Just how long can the varsity undefeated skein continue?

The answer lies somewhere in the maze consisting of luck, the weather, continued good pitching and batting, and the hope that some hot pitcher doesn't come along and pitch the game of his life against UMass.

The farther along you get in a streak, the harder it gets to win, and UMass is pretty far along in its string. The weather has been very cooperative to them, with assorted rain-outs serving to postpone away single contests and turn them into home doubleheaders. With pitching depth being on the side of the Redmen, the closer the games are spaced, the better things are.

But, all you need in baseball is one strong arm to have one good day, and any streak can be over. That's what UMass must worry about in the next couple of weeks.

The Lord Jeffs, at first glance, would seem to be easy pickings. After all, every time a UMass team in any sport meets a counterpart from downtown, the result is usually lopsidedly in favor of the Redmen. But this could be an entirely different story.

This Amherst team has a good record, a 6-1 mark. The most recent of their victories came this weekend when they dumped the Springfield Chiefs twice, 4-3 and 6-1.

The Lord Jeffs could have the arm that will give the Redmen fits. His name is Don Douglas and he had a good day against Springfield, both batting and pitching wise. Douglas only gave up four hits and ran his record to 4-0 with the victory.

Sophomore Bill Severini also pitched well in that twin bill, so in a solo game like this Amherst might be able to throw smoke in the UMass direction.

That game is this afternoon at 3:30 and will be played at Earl Lorden Field.

And before Monday next rolls around, UMass will have faced an equally stern test in the Maine Black Bears. Friday and Saturday, the Redmen head up to Orono for a back to back series with Maine. And anytime you play up in God's country, you start off with one foot in the grave.

The record is now 12-0 overall, 6-0 in the Yankee Conference. It is quite conceivable that before April, with all its showers, is over, the Redmen will still be undefeated.

Tough Day Ahead For Track Team

By EARLE BARROLL

"We won't be able to get away with it on Tuesday against Dartmouth." - Ken O'Brien.

Well stated and most of all well documented.

Unless the UMass track team comes up with its best performance of the season this afternoon, it could be a long one for the Redmen as they host powerful Dartmouth College beginning at 3 p.m. at the Llewelyn Derby Track.

The Indians have lost only one meet–to Northeastern–but they stand far from alone in this category. The Redmen lost to the Huskies in their first meet this spring.

Dartmouth is coming off a total demolition of little Colby College, 104-51, and the results of this meet tell something about the team itself.

The Indians swept the four weight throws (36 points). The distance men dominated (9:04 to 9:11 in the two-mile). And the rest of the team filled in here or there with probably better than average performances.

The quarter milers (Steve Levine and Peter Trow) have to score heavily, there has to be a majority of places in the middle distances and the jumpers will have to pick up their share in the triple and broad jumps and the pole vault.

Dartmouth has always been a monster in the weight events (literally). Fred Radke (javelin) and Ted Moody (shotput) made up half of the football team's defensive line. Moody and his brother, Bill, are untouchable in the shot, but Radke will be in for a tough afternoon against Redman Gil Sylvia (214'10").

If the weather is good (a toss of the coin at this writing), the distance events (mile and deuce) could produce the fastest times in New England this spring with Doug O'Connell, Randy Thomas, Bill Gillin and Mike McCusker running against the Indian delegation of John Shiland, Peter Krol and Eric Potter.

An added event will be the steeple chase run for the first time ever on the new track. Like the six-mile run against Northeastern, this event is held in the New England's and has been relatively untouched in dual and tri-meets.

This all makes for one o.. the best track meets in the six-state region this outdoor season. It also gives both teams a chance to exert themselves on each other with the New England's closing in.

And as O'Brien stated after Saturday's meet: "We won't be able to get away with it on Tuesday against Dartmouth."

Bruins Favored Over Blues

ST. LOUIS (AP) - "There's no question about it," said Mike Walton. "What happened to us last year has made us a far better team."

Still burning with a 1971 embarrassment, Walton and his Boston Bruins teammates Tuesday night will attempt to sweep into Stanley Cup finals against the New York Rangers.

Their opposition, the St. Louis Blues, have offered but token resistance in losing all three games in the best-of-seven National Hockey League semi-final.

"I'm just disappointed we haven't been able to play them any closer," said Coach Al Arbour, whose Blues were overrun 7-2 in the third game Sunday.

Walton, traded to the Bruins last year from Toronto, remembers only too painfully adversity that overtook them a year ago.

Favored to repeat as Cup champions in 1971, Boston stumbled in the quarter-finals against the eventual champion Montreal Canadiens. The ranger disposed of the Canadiens in the quarter finals earlier this month.

McGovern Sweeps Primary

Above-They lowered the voting age this time around, but not quite low enough to enable the person in the middle of this picture to vote in Amherst yesterday.

BOSTON (AP)-Sen. George S. McGovern won a "victory for peace" in Massachusetts' Democratic presidential primary Tuesday, picking up an early lead over chief rival Sen. Edmund S. Muskie and soon widening the gap to a more than two-to-one margin.

"My heart is filled with love and gratitude to all those young people who slept on floors and survived on peanut butter and jelly sandwiches" during the campaign, McGovern said in terming his victory one for "peace, not war."

"Now let's go to Ohio," he told his Massachusetts campaign workers.

McGovern picked up the lead in most of the state's 12 congressional districts early in the counting.

Although in the contest for delegates Muskie maintained a lead in one district, virtually all of the state's 102 delegates to the national convention will be committed to McGovern because of his smashing victory.

With 6 per cent of the individual delegate vote counted, 63 of McGovern's pledged candidates held leads while Muskie candidates were leading in 22 other races.

Even if Muskie were to win the delegates, they would be committed to McGovern on the first ballot of the convention if he won the popularity vote in that district.

McGovern maintained a better than two-to-one margin in most districts located in the eastern part of the state, and he did better than that in Boston.

With 25 per cent of the vote counted, McGovern was leading Muskie, 63,546 to 27,482, giving McGovern 48 per cent of the total and Muskie 21 per cent at that point.

McGovern threatened in his victory statement to send the President to a retirement "he so richly deserves."

Gov. George Wallace of Alabama made a surprisingly strong showing, commanding 10 per cent of the early vote to jump into third place ahead of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, who had eight per cent.

Other Democrats on the ballot: Mayor John V. Lindsay of New York, one per cent; Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington, one per cent; Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York, five per cent; former Sen. Eugene McCarthy of Minnesota, two per cent; Rep. Wilbur Mills of Arkansas, four per cent, and Mayor Sam Yorty of Los Angeles and social worker Edward Coll of Hartford, Conn, no per cent.

"Maybe we counted too much on the fact that we have old friends in Massachusetts and we spent lots of time here in Pennsylvania," Muskie said in a telephone call to his Massachusetts workers.

Many of his "old friends," pledged to the Maine senator on delegate slates, apparently were going to have to sit out the Democratic National Convention this year.

Muskie showed early strength in the western part of the state, where he was expected to do relatively well.

But McGovern took over a commanding lead as returns from Boston and districts in the eastern part of the state began reporting.

Although the delegate slate pledged to Muskie in the state's 1st Congressional District-the western part of Massachusetts-was leading, early returns showed delegates pledged to McGovern well ahead of Muskie's candidates.

This was especially true on the at-large statewide ballot, where Democratic Party leaders pledged to Muskie trailed slates pledged to McGovern by nearly a three-to-one margin.

Voting during much of the day was reported to be light in Massachusetts, with long lines waiting at the polling booths because of the complex ballot.

Muskie, who said at a fund raising dinner in Boston last Wednesday that he had "not abandoned Massachusetts, certainly not to a South Dakotan," never made it back to the Bay State-the site of tireless barnstorming by the favorite of the political polls and pundits, George McGovern.

McGovern was the only major candidate to remain in Massachusetts Tuesday night.

The South Dakotan's organization, overcoming Muskie's endorsement by most of the state's party regulars and swelling with the polls which saw McGovern rise from a 2-1 underdog to a 2-1 favorite, set up election night headquarters in Boston.

The regulars on Muskie's at-large delegate slate, headed by Boston Mayor Kevin H. White, were hopeful that their names would win them election as delegates even if Muskie lost the popularity contest.

On the Republican ballot with Nixon were Reps. John Ashbrook of Ohio and Paul N. McCloskey of California.

Humphrey Wins In Pennsylvania

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. George McGovern won the Massachusetts presidential primary Tuesday night and, in Pennsylvania, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey swept to his first victory as Democratic voters dealt a crippling double defeat to the White House quests of Sen. Edmund S. Muskie.

Muskie lost twice in a day, and by wide margins. Further more, he was running a virtual dead heat with McGovern for second place in Pennsylvania after a campaign concentrated on that state.

For Humphrey, who bypassed Massachusetts, Pennsylvania delivered the first major primary in a career of presidential campaigning that dates back 12 years.

The presidential preference poll in Pennsylvania was not binding on national convention delegates. In separate competition for nominating votes, Humphrey led for 35, Muskie for 32, McGovern for 12 with 7 per cent of the vote counted.

In Pennsylvania, 43 of the 9,565 precincts had been tallied, and this was the situation:

Humphrey 204,109 or 35 per cent.
McGovern 130,175 or 22 per cent.
Muskie 128,313, or 22 per cent.
Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace 103,486, or 13 per cent.
Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington 20,595, or 3 per cent.

Pennsylvania was electing 137 of its 182 delegates to the convention.

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama was running fourth in Pennsylvania, second in Massachusetts.

Humphrey's Pennsylvania victory was sure to resound in the campaign for the Ohio primary, which will pick 153 convention votes next Tuesday.

McGovern appeared likely to emerge as a formidable foe and perhaps the chief rival to Humphrey in Ohio.

President Nixon was a runaway victor in the Republican preference poll in Massachusetts, where he was gaining 79 per cent of the vote.

Rep. Paul N. McCloskey Jr. of California, who urged votes for himself in the GOP balloting and for McGovern in the Democratic primary as protests against administration war policy, was picking up a 15 per cent Republican share. McCloskey had withdrawn as an official candidate.

Bromberg At Folklore Centre

David Bromberg, known to many as one of the best stuido guitarists in modern music, will play Thursday and Friday nights at the Amherst Folklore Centre. There will be two shows each night at 7:30 and 10:00 p.m. at a cost of $2 per show. The Folklore Centre is at 16 Spring St., across from the Lord Jeffrey Inn, in the center of Amherst.

David has been playing out of the spotlights for a few years now, accompanying such diverse artists as Chubby Checker, Jay and the Americans, Tom Paxton, Doug Kershaw, Jerry Jeff Walker, and Bob Dylan. He attracted Dylan's notice while touring with Jerry Jeff Walker, and played on both "Self Portrait" and "New Morning."

On Thursday night, a band called Sunyata will open the show, with Takoma recording artist Peter Aceves starting Friday's concert. Tickets are available in advance at Mizaur's Mercantile and the Folklore Centre; also at the door.

Dr. Huntington To Lecture On The American Military

The American Military: Present Crises and Future Challenges will be the topic of a lecture by Dr. Samuel P. Huntington on this Thursday, April 27, 1972, at 8:15 p.m., in Thompson 104.

Dr. Huntington is a Professor of Government at Harvard University. He received his B.A. at Yale in 1946, his M.A. from the University of Chicago in 1948, and his Ph.D. from Harvard in 1951. He has been at Harvard since that time and has been outstanding in his field.

Dr. Huntington has conducted extensive research and writing on political and military relationships, and has been involved in numerous organizations and research groups. He chaired the Council on Vietnamese Studies, Southeast Asia Advisory Group in 1967-1969.

Some of his works in the military field include The Soldier and the State and The Common Defense; he edited Changing Patterns of Military Politics.

Human Dev. Major Open

Todd Rundgren Concert Sunday

Students who signed up to major in Human Development who are in the Class of 1974 may now apply for a transfer of their major into Human Development. However, the Department cannot guarantee that those who are interested in the Student Teaching Sequence will be able to get into the sequence.

Students of the Class of 1974 who are not now on the waiting list may apply to be put on the list, but may have to wait before they can be admitted.

Please come to Room 219 Hampshire House Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, between the hours of 2:00 to 4:30 P.M.

Reprise Recording artist Todd Rundgren will be presented in a free outdoor concert this Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. Sponsored by The Southwest Assembly, the event will take place at the South End of the stadium. Rundgren will appear with his own eight-piece band and will also be accompanied by two Boston area groups, 'Keady, Smithline and Baltimore' and 'Brother Ralph'.

There will be a meeting Wednesday evening in Hampden Dining Commons for all those who are interested in helping out as a marshal at the concert at 7:30 P.M.

—The Weather—

By AL JAGODA

The weather, according to our good heating man friends in Sunderland and Amherst is as follows: Today will be mild and sunny with scattered clouds floating by now and then. Temperatures will range from the high fifties to the low sixties, much like yesterday was. The good ol' North wind will be blowing as it usually does this time of year. Probability of precipitation is zero today and tonight. This evening when you see the sun go down look closer, and you will realize that it is the horizon moving up. Temperatures tonight will be going down to the twenties, so.....make sure you find a friend to keep warm with.

The Town

Selectmen "Stand" Against War

By PAM HYJEK

Last night the Amherst Board of Selectmen agreed to allow a group of petitioners to send telegrams to Nixon, Sargent, Laird, Brooke, Kennedy, and Conte, informing them that the Amherst Selectmen voted 3 to 2 in favor of taking a public stand in protest of the war.

David Magnani, of UMass, and Jerome King, of Amherst, were primary spokesmen for the group which represents students of UMass and Amherst College and the Valley Peace Center.

Along with the petition, which was comprised predominately of signatures of Amherst residents, as opposed to just students, the group presented prepared telegrams stating that the Town of Amherst supports an end to U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia and an end to the bombing. It was pointed out that the telegrams were only a suggested mode of public stand, and wording could be altered at the discretion of the Board.

Leo Bouchard expressed his support of the petition first, and said the Selectmen should take a moral stand on such an issue.

Nancy Eddy, speaking as an individual in support of the petition, disagreed with taking a public stand as selectmen on a national issue. She said there are other avenues of protest for individuals which destroyed any analogy of Vietnam and the atrocities of the Nazis in Germany where such democratic avenues were not open.

Merle Howes basically supported Mrs. Eddy's position and commented that he believed it necessary to protect remaining troops at all costs, and to bomb Haiphong, if necessary. He said such decisions were best left to the judgment of the military.

Also supporting the issue personally, Bob Garvey agreed, however, with Mrs. Eddy that the petition was not directed to the right agency, and that the Selectmen should be concerned with local affairs.

At this point, Jerome King, pleading for the petitioners, said it was important for the Board as an institution to protest because in this extraordinary situation the slower avenues had obviously failed. He stressed the connection between local and national affairs, asserting that the Town of Amherst was hurt by the war.

Magnani added that the response from the townspeople petitioned was very favorable, citing that 23 out of 26 families he visited signed quite willingly.

Leo Bouchard again moved in favor of the petition supporting the end of U.S. involvement and the bombing.

Sullivan queried if it could serve the petitioners for the Board to accept the petition but not send the telegrams.

King then asked what actually was the Board voting on.

Garvey read a statement calling for an end to U.S. involvement and bombing, including the reasoning that taxes are being drained because of the war.

Sullivan seconded the motion. Eddy then interjected that she "ran on local issues".

Garvey replied, "You should vote accordingly."

Eddy: "I will."

Sullivan said he ran supporting revenue sharing.

Bouchard responded to this saying that the war in Vietnam is an issue demonstrating the moral breakdown of our society, not merely the economic.

Garvey again read a statement that took a stand to end the bombing and U.S. involvement because our problems are not being solved in this country.

The vote was two opposed--Eddy and Howes, with Bouchard, Sullivan and Garvey in favor; the motion carried. The method of public stance was left to Selectmen who supported the petition.

Bouchard moved to send the telegrams with change from "Town of Amherst" to "Selectmen of the Town of Amherst", but the motion was not seconded, and, therefore, lost.

Sullivan then suggested that the petitioners send telegrams stating what the vote of the Selectmen was. This was agreed upon by all.

Other business handled was the appointment of a Jones LIbrary Trustee to fill the vacancy due to the death of Isabel Gonon. A report of recommendations for improving the pedestrian and vehicle traffic in Amherst was presented by representatives from the Chamber of Commerce. Selectman Sullivan had reported on the ad hoc Committee re Policy and Procedures, and a transferral of land from the Town of Amherst to the Amherst Housing Authority was passed.

Humphrey Takes Pennsylvania

Rep. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio had 5 per cent.

There was no GOP preference contest in Pennsylvania.

Alabama's Wallace, who was in Indianapolis, said the share of the votes he got in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts indicates "we are going to win in Indiana." The primary there is next Tuesday.

Humphrey's campaign game plan made Pennsylvania a pivotal state in his third bid for presidential nomination. He was the 1968 nominee and was an unsuccessful candidate for the nomination in 1960.

The strategy was devised when Muskie was the Democratic frontrunner, and was based on a maximum Humphrey push, backed by organized labor, to overtake him in Pennsylvania.

But Muskie ran into trouble as soon as the primaries began, scoring a minority victory in New Hampshire where McGovern gained a 37.1 per cent share of the vote, and slumping to fourth place in Florida's March 14 election. Humphrey finished second to Wallace in that one.

McGovern lost to Muskie, 60 to 13, in a contest for delegates in the Illinois primary, but soared to victory in Wisconsin on April 4 as Muskie once again ran a lagging fourth.

The senator from Maine decided after that battering to focus his campaign in Pennsylvania. He denied that he had abandoned Massachusetts, "certainly not to a South Dakotan," but he cut back his campaign and his budget there to put his push in Pennsylvania.

In that contest, he had the support of Gov. Milton J. Shapp and Democratic organization leaders, notably in Philadelphia. But the organization backing showed signs of coming unglued after his Wisconsin defeat.

Humphrey criticized the efforts of Shapp and Philadelphia Democratic chairman Peter J. Camiel in Muskie's behalf. He acknowledged that he had organizational backing four years ago, when he won the nomination without entering a primary. But he said the party has been reformed since then, and that he helped bring that reform.

Under the Pennsylvania system, the 137 delegates elected in the primary will choose another 27, and the state committee will elect the other 18.

Wallace campaigned in Pennsylvania and, briefly, in Boston on Monday, where he accused McGovern of "stealing my thunder" by casting himself as a candidate running against the establishment.

McGovern pushed hard in Massachusetts, and a poll commissioned by the Boston Globe rated his support at 43 per cent, Muskie's at 19, and the absent Humphrey at 14 per cent.

In Massachusetts, Muskie was allied with an array of party leaders headed by Mayor Kevin H. White of Boston and Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, the House Democratic whip.

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Stressing more cooperation between the various areas of the Student Government Association, SGA President Larry Ladd last night convened the first meeting of the newly formed President's Council.

The Council, composed of the SGA President, all Area Government Presidents, and the Speaker of the Student Senate, focused on the present and future situation with the various areas at last night's meeting. Also discussed was the situation with the takeover at Dickinson Hall and the possibilities for appointments within the SG next year.

Some of the Area Governments are experiencing difficulties at this time. Most notable among these are the Northeast and Sylvan Areas, which are having financial difficulties and some problems within the governments themselves.

At this time the Area Governments are in the process of putting things together for next year, and possibly initiating some new projects with the money given them in the recently passed Student Activities Tax budget. One of the purposes of the Council is to keep lines of communication open between the various areas with the intent of keeping ideas circulating.

President Ladd stressed that the matter of the Dickinson Hall takeover should be a subject of discussion among the Area Governments in the future. Dickinson, the University's ROTC building, was taken over during last week's strike by members of the Women's Caucus and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War. It has been cleared now, with the women and veterans agreeing to an Administration proposal to use Munson Hall as the base for their proposed Center for Social Change.

On next year's appointments to SGA positions, Neil Kerstein, who is working with President Ladd on the appointments, asked for the cooperation of the Area Government Presidents on them. The appointments will be discussed during the remainder of this year and early next year.

WMPIRG Seeks Structure

By HUGH OWEN

Still in the planning stage, the Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) is attempting to set up a definite structure before the fall semester.

WMPIRG is currently composed of three areas, the northern Mass. area, the Five College area, and the Springfield area.

These schools will elect one member per school, with UMass electing four, to a regional board which will coordinate all activity in WMPIRG. This board will also approve all projects and money to be used for the projects.

Each area will also have a local board. This board will be comprised of one member from each college in the area. The purpose of this board will be to initiate communications between schools on all projects and coordinate these projects.

Other boards established will be an academic board, an action board, and a professional staff. The academic board will consist of faculty members and students who are involved in the WMPIRG courses. These people will research projects and then present them to the action board.

The action board will contain legal counselors, science students and economic majors. Once a project has been researched this group will initiate alllegal action needed to enact the proposed reforms.

Experienced researchers will comprise the professional staff. They will be available to the action board to offer any professional help needed.

WMPIRG is still in the planning stage. More help is needed to establish a concrete, working organization.

Center Move To Munson

By DON BISHOP

Having completed their move from Dickinson Hall to Munson Hall, early yesterday afternoon, the Center for Social Change is busy setting up both immediate and long-range goals programs. Munson Hall will be the Center's permanent home until the Administration comes up with an alternative building. This is expected eventually.

The plan to allow for the use of Munson Hall by the Center was worked out Monday night between negotiators for the Administration and the two groups holding Dickinson: the VVAW and the Coalition Against Oppression. Those using the Center agreed to vacate Dickinson by 5:00 PM yesterday. According to Center spokesman John O'Keefe, the move was completed in about three hours, early Tuesday afternoon. O'Keefe also indicated the use of the Colonial Lounge in the Union would be given up by this morning.

A meeting in Munson last night, dealt with some of the immediate aims of the Center. Primary is the demand for the removal of the ROTC Program on campus. A petition drive calling for this action was initiated yesterday, and will continue today.

In this regard, plans were also discussed last night for presenting the ROTC removal demand to the special session of the Board of Trustees today, in Boston. Organizational details and a reply to a Third World Alliance statement of Tuesday were also discussed. The Center also gave their support to the holding of Mass. Hall at Harvard.

Spokesman O'Keefe felt that there had been a "good response" from the campus community to yesterday's petitioning. He feels that the questioning of petitioners by many students was a good thing, and that for people to understand the rationale for removing ROTC from campus is more important than merely signing the petition.

In response to the most frequent questions, the Center feels that ROTC does not lend itself to an atmosphere of Academic freedom on campus because the program is dictated by the State Department.

Also the Center does not feel that ROTC is necessary for the national defense due to the cutback in the number of officers in the army, or do they feel that the liberalizing effects of ROTC on the general corp of officers is appreciable, due to the decisional hierarchy of the army.

The Center stresses the fact that they are not attempting to have the program removed before those students currently enrolled in the program have finished

Workshops will be held in the Center today and they are being planned to continue through the academic year and this summer.

O'Keefe said that in addition to being held in the Center itself, there will be traveling workshops to dorms. Also any dorm wanting a speaker on ROTC can request one.

As a final note, the Center for Social Change will be open 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. All are invited to stop in.

Wood Impressed By Sincerity

By MDC STAFF

"I'm fairly sure that the Trustee's meeting today will deal solely with the issues of military recruitment and the ROTC program." This was the principal statement of UMass President Robert Wood in a telephone interview last night.

Wood indicated that he had been working during the day yesterday to "develop a forum so that the various issues raised at the Boston and Amherst campuses (regarding ROTC and Military recruitment) during the last few days can be dealt with in a responsibie way."

Wood feels that by making today's meeting a special session, dealing solely with these questions, the Trustees will be made aware of the "sincerity and seriousness" of student opinion on these issues.

Pres. Wood stated that he himself had been impressed by the sincerity of the students he has talked to for the last two days, when discussing these issues.

Monday afternoon, Wood was confronted in his office by approximately 100 people demanding he talk about ROTC and recruitment, whereupon he went to the UMass-Boston campus and talked to a larger group of about 400 about military recruitment on the Boston campus and the Dickinson Hall situation here in Amherst.

Wood will be at the Trustee's special session today, along with Chancellors Bromery and Broderick. He plans to state his own opinions on ROTC and military recruitment at the meeting, but this will be after he has listened to some of the opinions of others in attendance.

Wood feels that the question of military recruitment on campus should probably be the one of primary concern to UMass-Boston students, while the question of ROTC will be more related to students here.

The meeting should prove to be well attended and eventful. Paul Tooher of the Mass Media in Boston feels there is a good likelihood of a disturbance occuring.

A.P. Chief Here Today

Jim Ragsdale, New England bureau chief at Boston for The Associated Press, will be at UMass tonight to show a film and speak with students interested in newswriting careers and discussing AP policies.

He will be at Campus Center Room 917 at 7 o'clock, opening with the sound-color film produced by the world's largest wire service to explain its new computerized system of story dispatching.

Ragsdale's appearance is sponsored by Alpha Phi Gamma, the national honorary journalism society's chapter at UMass. He was originally scheduled to appear at last week's Communications Careers Convocation, which attracted more than 50 students and 10 professionals under APG sponsorship.

During the afternoon, Ragsdale and Jeff Bradley, AP's reporter in Springfield, will meet with Collegian editors. The MDC is an AP member. The 7 o'clock meeting is open to the entire campus community.

S.Viets Advancing To The Rear

SAIGON (AP)-With South Vietnamese troops falling back before an enemy talk-led onslaught in the central highlands, President Nguyen Van Thieu was said Tuesday to have ordered a counter-attack to recapture two key bases lost the day before.

U.S. officials reported 10 Americans were killed in the fiery crash of helicopter Monday during the evacuation of the two bases, Tan Canh and Dak To, that Thieu ordered recaptured.

Six U.S. advisers had been lifted by helicopter from Tan Canh, 26 miles north of Kontum, but because South Vietnamese soldiers were clinging to the skids, the craft landed at nearby Dak To. Another helicopter picked them up at Dak To but enemy ground fire shot it down, killing the advisers and four crewmen.

South Vietnamese troops abandoned two more bases, Fire Bases 5 and 6 north of Kontum. But a U.S. air strike wrecked a bridge behind the main force of North Vietnamese advancing down Highway 14 toward Kontum, believed the first objective of their offensive.

The main force of enemy troops was moving slowly southward 21 miles north of Kontum when the fighter-bombers knocked out the bridge over the Dak Psi River, several miles behind them.

"That is enough to halt the enemy's armor and slow down their advance," one U.S. officer said. "They'll have a hell of a time dragging artillery though the mountains if they can't get it down the highway.

The main thrust of the North Vietnamese advance reached Dien Binh, 11 road miles north of Vo Dinh. With ground fog hampering air attacks, it appeared unlikely that counter-offensive moves ordered by Thieu could be mounted soon to push toward the border area already in enemy hands.

Attention centered on the growing threat to Kontum, a city of some 30,000 already being swollen by streams of refugees fleeing the war zone.

Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett reported that South Korean troops finally captured a key hill dominating the blocked An Khe Pass on Highway 19.

The highway had fed supplies from coastal bases to the central highlands city of Pleiku, 25 miles south of Kontum. It was the main road into the highlands and before the North Vietnamese closed it early this month about 200 trucks had been ferrying men and supplies daily to Pleiku.

Highway 19 still was blocked. The North Vietnamese control four miles of the highway snaking through the An Khe Mountains. At least three more days of hard fighting lay ahead, Arnett reported.

PROTEST IN CONN.

GROTON, Conn. (AP) — About 18 antiwar demonstrators sat down in the path of cars and trucks entering the main gate of the U.S. Navy's nuclear submarine base Tuesday, forcing the traffic to detour three miles.

They vowed to stay all night if necessary for a confrontation with base officials.

The group said they were at the base to close it down because of the Navy's involvement in shelling North Vietnam. A Navy spokesman said the base commander was unavailable to talk with the demonstrators.

DOCTOR GETS SIX

FALL RIVER (AP)-The State Supreme Court has upheld a six-year jail sentence given Dr. Ruth M. Miller, a Somerset, Mass., physician, for illegally giving drugs to a state police undercover agent.

Dr. Miller was sentenced to consecutive one-year terms on each of six indictments last April by Superior Court Judge Frank E. Smith.

The court reversed her conviction on four other indictments charging illegal possession of drugs.

Smith had placed these indictments on file.

Kissinger Sneaks To Moscow

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon secretly dispatched Henry Kissinger to Moscow last week for four days of talks with Soviet leaders on Vietnam, disarmament and Nixon's coming summit conference there.

Kissinger's clandestine journey, the latest in a series of secret foreign missions he has undertaken for Nixon, was disclosed by the White House and the Kremlin in a terse joint announcement Tuesday-24 hours after he returned to the United States.

The Thursday-to-Monday visit to the Soviet capital was made while White House officials were falsely reporting that Kissinger was at the Camp David presidential retreat in Maryland conferring with Nixon.

The secrecy was necessary, Kissinger told newsmen Tuesday, because "we are at the moment in a very delicate phase of international relations."

The joint announcement said Kissinger's talks with Communist party head Leonid I. Brezhnov and Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko "dealt with important international problems as well as with bilateral matters preparatory to talks between President Nixon and Soviet leaders in May."

Kissinger described the sessions as "useful...frank...satisfactory," and said they resulted from extensive exchanges between Nixon and Brezhnev during the past two years.

He would no divulge the specific issues discussed in Moscow, saying "We have agreed that neither side would go into the details of the talks."

There were clear signs, however, that Kissinger relayed Nixon's unhappiness over Soviet shipment to North Vietnam of arms being used in the current North Vietnamese thrust into South Vietnam-a flow of weapons which Nixon has twice obliquely criticized.

Asked specifically whether the talks included Vietnam, Kissinger repeated that he had agreed not to reveal the subjects discussed.

"But," he continued, "I think you can draw your conclusions from an announcement which says that important international problems were discussed."

Just as Nixon is unhappy about Soviet arms shipments to North Vietnam, Soviet leaders were upset when, they claimed, four Russian ships were damaged in a U.S. air raid on Haiphong.

There were indications that the Kissinger mission, arranged within a week after Nixon sent U.S. war planes against Haiphong and Hanoi targets, was intended to prevent further deterioration of U.S.-Soviet relations because of Vietnam.

These talks resumed Tuesday in Helsinski after a brief suspension last week while the chief Soviet negotiator reportedly returned to Moscow-a trip roughly coinciding with Kissinger's arrival there.

Kissinger said the decision to go to Moscow was made early last week and "was based on a long meeting between the President, the secretary of State and myself, based on the exchanges that the President has been conducting with General Secretary Brezhnev."

Asked for more details on the Nixon-Brezhnev exchanges, Kissinger said, "They have been conducted on the whole by correspondence."

Nixon To Address Nation On Vietnam Tonight

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon will make a nationwide address Wednesday night by radio and television to discuss the situation in South Vietnam and to announce his decision on U.S. troop levels there after May 1.

The White House announced Tuesday the broadcast will be carried at 10 p.m. EST Wednesday.

The President made his decision on the address after meeting with his top national security adviser, Henry A. Kissinger following Kissinger's return from a secret trip to Moscow.

But Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler told reporters: "I wouldn't draw a linkage between Henry Kissinger's visit to the Soviet Union and the President's decision regarding what troop levels will be in South Vietnam after May 1."

Nixon has consulted with South Vietnam president Thieu and top U.S. advisers and received their concurrence in his decision, Ziegler said.

Nixon has been systematically reducing the level of U.S. forces in South Vietnam since the summer of 1969 when America had 543,400 members of its armed forces in South Vietnam. He had set a withdrawal rate that would bring the level to 69,000 by May 1 and Ziegler said that target would be met.

Harvard Demonstration Today

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)-Two Harvard University-Radcliffe College groups say they will hold a march and rally Wednesday to support the 40 demonstrators who occupy Massachusetts Hall in Harvard Yard.

The groups said the demonstrators will leave Massachusetts Institute of Technology at noon and march to Harvard for the rally.

They distributed flyers saying the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference would address the rally.

Mattingley Walks Through Space

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP)-Speeding ever faster homeward, Apollo 16 astronaut Thomas K. Mattingly II stepped though the hatch of his command module Tuesday and walked in deep space to recover two canisters of film and expose millions of bugs to the harsh environment.

As John W. Young and Charles M. Duke, Jr., watched, Mattingly edged down the side of the spacecraft-about 200,000 miles from earth-to the attached cylindrical service module housing the moon-mapping cameras.

He stepped into space at 3:47 p.m. EST with the words:

"I'll pull this tail down to hold on to. Then I'll play ride 'em cowboy." He was safely back in the cabin hatch 20 minutes later.

Mattingly looked, on television, like a gray apparition as he floated above the side of Casper, the command ship he named for a ghost.

"Oh, man," said Mattingly. "The old moon's out there."

After making two round trips to the cameras-recovering a canister of film each time-Mattingly then exposed some 60 million microbes to the effects of the vacuum and radiation in space.

Scientists hope the bug experiment will help determine how the harsh environment of deep space affects the growth and mutation of micro-organisms and thus also help learn whether man can travel to Mars and beyond.

Dr. R.E. Benson, a Manned Spacecraft Center scientist, said the microbial experiment was the start of a series of investigations to be continued in coming years aboard other spacecraft, to determine whether man can live in deep space for the months and years required for such travel.

During his space walk Mattingly mounted a container outside the ship and opened the lid to allow the ultraviolet rays to pepper the microbes, still inside clear glass trays. Another 20 million bacteria, fungi and viruses were exposed to the near vacuum of space but not to the rays, and 20 million more experienced only cold and weightlessness.

The effects of the 10-minute experiment will be studied when the bugs are returned to earth.

If there are mutations, the bugs would not be turned into science fiction monsters. But Benson said, "If there are effects, I would expect them to be detrimental-to retard growth and development."

The future experiments will be conducted on Skylab, an earth orbiting science laboratory to be launched next year. Rats and mice go next.

Apollo 16 is scheduled to splash down at 2:44 p.m. EST Thursday in the South Pacific, about 170 miles southeast of Christmas Island. The astronauts fired Casper's small rocket thrusters for eight seconds Tuesday morning to put them precisely on target.

Apollo 16 is bringing to earth a record 245 pounds of rock, the first ever gathered from the mountains of the moon.

Duke expressed doubts that he and Young found the volcanic material that scientists had predicted.

"I really don't think we got any volcanic rock to speak of," said Duke. "It really wasn't what I thought we'd find up there. Maybe some of those little black glass rocks were volcanics, but otherwise I don't think we got any."

Dr. Tony England, a scientist astronaut, told Duke from Mission Control that some of the rocks which seemed to have been formed by meteorite impacts could actually be volcanic rocks which had been shattered by meteorites.

Scientists at Mission Control who watched the moon surface excursions on television are convinced that the astronauts will bring home some evidence of volcanic activity on the moon. They said, however, that volcanic processes on the moon, where conditions are greatly different, could take a form not seen on earth.

In a briefing during the day, the scientists said an instrument left on the moon by Duke and Young was measuring magnetic fields on the moon which were 100 times stronger than expected from satellite studies.

Dr. Palmer Dyal, an Ames Research Center scientist, said the high magnetic field in the Descartes Mountains where Apollo 16 landed "indicates to us that there might have been an earth-like dynamo on the moon."

Sen. Gravel Tries To Release Report

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Mike Gravel was blocked Tuesday from spreading on the public record a 1969 government study critical of Vietnam policies now being followed by President Nixon.

The Senate recessed until Thursday after Republican Whip Robert Griffin refused to accede to a unanimous consent resolution that would have allowed the Alaska Democrat to put into The Congressional Record a 500-page memorandum prepared for Nixon as he was taking over the presidency.

The study already has been published, in part, by some newspapers and magazines. It challenges the efficacy of massive bombing in checking the enemy, and questions the overall promise of the Vietnamization program to which Nixon is committed.

Gravel said he will continue his efforts to place the full document in the Record, and he arranged to be recognized for 15 minutes when the Senate resumes business Thursday.

Meanwhile, he said, he has distributed excerpts from the still classified papers to fellow senators, including some Democratic presidential candidates. And he said he would continue to do so even at the risk of a censure motion for disclosing official secrets.

"When President Nixon adopted his Vietnam policy in 1969, he knew it could not extricate the nation from the Indochina quagmire," Gravel told the Senate.

"His highest advisers told him days after he took office that Vietnamization supported by massive American air power had not worked in the past and was not likely to succeed in the future," Gravel said.

Gravel said he may move to have the record-question put to a full floor vote, which he believes will require each senator to make a moral decision on the question.

In a news conference a few minutes later, the senator, who had read the Pentagon papers into the record, said Griffin must have objected for partisan reasons, adding the White House is against them being made public.

The papers apparently consist of National Security Council Memorandum No. 1 prepared at the order of Henry Kissinger to determine the status and effectiveness of Vietnam operations as the President took office.

The memorandum consists of 27 questions. The bulk of the papers is made up of responses to these questions from the Central Intelligence Agency, the State Department, the Pentagon, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other agencies.

House Turns Down MBTA Deficit-And More

BOSTON (AP) — Both houses of the Massachusetts legislature were to meet informally Tuesday because of state's presidential preference primary.

By agreement no controversial matters are taken up during informal sessions. The legislature was to resume normal activity today.

Monday's Action

The Massachusetts Senate gave final approval Monday to a bill requiring all cities and towns in the state to keep polls open 10 hours during primary elections.

The measure, which has already passed the House, cleared on a voice vote.

Under existing law towns with less than 2,000 population need only keep polling places open for six hours in primaries. The measure would affect 81 Massachusetts towns.

MBTA Deficit

The Massachusetts House killed Monday a bill to have the state assume the entire deficit of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority (MBTA), estimated currently at $76 million.

The bill, which received an unfavorable report from the Ways and Means Committee, went down to defeat on a close 109-102 roll call vote following extended debate.

Supporters said a state takeover of the deficit was essential to ease the financial plight of the 144 cities and towns in the MBTA district. Opponents seconded the charge by Rep. Raymond F. Rourke, D-Lowell, that the bill was "a brazen attempt to raid the state treasury."

Rep. Thomas F. Bussone, R-Beverly, recalled that the deficit legislation received a favorable report from the Transportation Committee before it went to Ways and Means. He called it "a chance to give relief to the taxpayers" in the MBTA district.

Another supporter, Rep. Peter C. Murphy, D-Peabody, charged that the MBTA "exercises absolutely no fiscal responsibility" saying property taxpayers are "blackjacked" by the authority's deficit spending.

Rep. Charles F. Flaherty, D-Cambridge, said users of the transit system should pay a larger share of the costs, but suggested that the state increase its share of the costs to one-fifth. Currently he said, the state pays only one-eighth of the MBTA expenses.

"How are you going to raise the $76 million for the state to pay the deficit?" Rourke asked. He said the deficit was expected to swell to $100 million by 1975, adding that a state takeover of the deficit would force taxpayers in communities not served by the MBTA to pay for it without having a voice in its operation.

Rep. Arthur L. Desrocher, R-Nantucket, predicted the state would need $300 to $400 million in new taxes next year and "this would be $70 million more. The MBTA ought to straighten out its own house before coming crying to us."

A motion to reconsider the vote was scheduled for Tuesday.

Revenue Sharing

The Massachusetts Senate urged Monday that Congress pass the federal-state revenue sharing program proposed by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Arkansas, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

The resolution filed by Sen. Joseph J.C. DiCarlo, D-Revere, passed on a voice vote.

Vietnam

A resolution asking President Nixon and the Congress to set a final date for complete United States withdrawal from Southeast Asia was filed in the Massachusetts Senate Monday.

The resolution urges Congress to set "at once a date for the immediate and complete withdrawal of all material and armed forces-land, sea and air-in and over all of Indochina."

Judges

A bill to make it necessary for three judges instead of one to act in labor disputes involving public employees was defeated in the Massachusetts Senate Monday.

The House-passed measure providing that only a three-judge panel of Superior Court justices could act in such cases was defeated on a 1-7 standing vote.

Minority Leader Sen. John F. Parker, R-Taunton, opposed the measure, saying the law clearly prohibits work stoppages by public employees.

"You won't be doing any good if you pass this and have a delay of several days in order to get three judges to decide a matter that one could decide," Parker said.

Another Republican, Sen. David H. Locke of Wellesley, said the measure would place even greater pressure on the overburdened courts.

Sen. James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, supporting the bill, said it would produce no "real slowdown" in the courts and no additional expense to the state.

Appellate Court

The Massachusetts legislature's Judiciary Committee gave a favorable report Monday to a bill creating an intermediate appellate court to relieve the burden on the state Supreme Court.

The measure, filed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent, was referred to the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

The Judiciary Committee also gave a favorable report to a bill providing state reimbursement to the counties for the expenses of the Superior Courts. Under the legislation court employees would be considered state employees.

Educators Pay

The legislature's Committee on Education gave an unfriendly reception Monday to proposals by Gov. Francis W. Sargent that would allow the State Department of Education to vary the salaries of its professional employees.

Committee Chairman Sen. Mary L. Fonseca, D-Fall River, charged the proposal would lead to budget increases in the future despite claims by supporters that no additional money would be needed.

The legislation to give "salary flexibility" to the department drew support top education officals and spokesmen for teachers and local school officials.

Dr. Joseph N. Cronin, Secretary of Educational Affairs in the Governor's cabinet, said the flexibility was necessary because the Department of Education is "losing top professionals to other states and local school systems that offer more pay."

State Education Commissioner Neil V. Sullivan said "we are not asking for any new money."

"Not this year but next," was the reply from Sen. Fonseca.

Boston Imbalance Could End

BOSTON (AP) — More than 13,000 non-white pupils now attending racially imbalanced public schools in Boston could be attending racially balanced schools by adoption of district changes, the State Department of Education said today in a report to the Board of Education.

Charles L. Glenn, director of the department's bureau of equal educational opportunity, made public a draft of the department's recommendations to relieve racial imbalance in Boston.

Under a 1965 school balance law, a school with more than 50 per cent non-white enrollment is deemed to be racially imbalanced and in violation of the statute. State aid-to-education funds may be withheld in that case.

New England Protests Continue

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Antiwar protests and strikes continued today at several New England colleges, but in at least two of the schools the students appeared ready to return to classes.

At Tufts University, an estimated 1,500 students voted Monday to end their boycott of classes and to center their antiwar activities on "the April 29 demonstration in Boston and the May 4 moratorium and strike."

The boycott had begun Thursday.

At Berkshire Community College, both students and faculty voted against proposals that would have suspended classes today to free people to bring out the vote for antiwar candidates in today's Massachusetts presidential primary.

The most noise of the day was made by some 500-600 students and other young people who attempted to storm an administration building at Boston University in an antiwar protest.

The students were prevented from entering the building by three uniformed Boston University campus guards, but they managed to tie up traffic in the area and in front of the Marsh Chapel plaza in the heart of the University.

Police cleared the streets for traffic and arrested one person. He was identified as Kenneth N. Shure, 20, of Boston, charged with being a disorderly person.

No injuries were reported even though some bricks and stones were thrown and the window was smashed on the door of the building the young people attempted to storm.

In Cambridge, Mass., about 300 young people, many of them from Harvard University, staged a sit-in in the hall outside the Selective Service offices at City Hall.

There was no attempt by the students to prevent people from entering City Hall and no arrests were made.

Meanwhile, a group of about 40 black students continued their occupation of the administration building on the Harvard University campus in a demonstration unrelated to the antiwar movement.

These students want Harvard to sell its $19 million in Gulf Oil Corp. stock, charging that Gulf's activities in the Portuguese African nation of Angola helps oppress black people.

They took over the building Thursday and have rejected all pleas to move. Late Monday night, they announced they would go on a hunger strike.

Westover Actions Planned

By MDC STAFF

The nonviolent civil disobedience at Westover Air Force Base, which has resulted in the arrests of over 125 people since last Friday morning, was scheduled to continue this morning, with over 25 more people expected to submit to arrest.

The participants in the action are using the arrests as a way of dramatizing their repugnance over the war against Vietnam, and as a means of bearing witness to their beliefs in the brotherhood of man.

According to organizers of the continuing action, plans call for more civil disobedience and arrests on Thursday and Friday mornings. They are calling for more participants, either to join in the civil disobedience or to act as a support group by distributing leaflets to passersby. There is also a continuing need for cars to carry demonstrators to the air base.

Groups of demonstrators have been gathering each morning at 6:15 on the Amherst Common, and depart for Westover at 6:30. Those who wish to participate, or to offer transportation to participants, have been asked to assemble at that time.

For those who desire some idea of what to expect at the site of the demonstration, organizers have scheduled training workshops each evening prior to the action. The training sessions include discussion of what has happened in court to earlier participants, and role playing of the planned action for the next day. The workshops are held at 7:30 each evening in the 9th floor lounge of the Campus Center.

Organizers point out that the arrests generally take place before 8:00 a.m., so supporters could leave in time to get to work or to classes. The sense of those previously submitting to arrest has been that a great deal of strength has been drawn from the presence of the supporters, and that they are therefore an important part of the life of the action.

People desiring more information should attend on of the workshops or call 253-3683, or contact Gil Salk in the Draft Counseling office in 923 CC (phone 545-0813).

Faculty, Staff To Plan For May 4

A faculty-staff committee here plans a meeting Wednesday to formulate UMass participation in a May 4 moratorium urging an end to the war in Vietnam.

The meeting will be at 12:15 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

The newly-formed Faculty and Staff Committee to Stop the War will be participating in a nationwide effort marking May 4, the second anniversary of the shooting of anti-war students at Kent State University.

The committee was formed over the past weekend. It now has 33 members from eight departments. Committee members said the Wednesday meeting is open to the entire campus.

Professor William Connolly of the political science department chaired the first meeting of the group, but stressed that no formal committee structure had yet been established.

Representatives of a number of campus groups have been invited to speak and participate during the Wednesday meeting, he said.

U.S. Would Not Benefit From Fall Of Chinese Gov't.-Seyd

By ETHEL HARRIS

It would make little sense, claimed Russia and the United States to ally against China, as only Russia could benefit from the collapse of the Chinese government. Thus, the United States concerned itself more with the threat of the Soviet Union and less with the influence of China.

Seyd was discussing the relations between the United States and India, Pakistan and Bangladesh in the third of the "America and Asia: 1972" series. The program, sponsored by the Department of Asian Studies and the Division of Continuing Education, was held last night in Herter Hall.

Moderator was John M. Maki of the UMass Political Science Department, while the feature speaker was Seyd of the UMass Political Science Department. Seyd is a specialist in South Asian government and politics.

Professor Seyd traced the development of the Hindu-Moslem conflict on the Indian subcontinent prior to 1947. The British exploited these differences to their advantage before leaving India. The Hindu majority, who had regarded the Moslems as "invaders", were put in a better position under British rule, Seyd claimed.

After the division of the subcontinent into India and Pakistan, there were numerous conflicts over assets and territories. Many wars were fought in this area, the last of which resulted in the partition of Pakistan and the establishment of Bangladesh.

According to Seyd, American foreign policy in this area was strongly influenced by tensions between East and West. The U.S., concerned with the spreading of Communism and devoted to the "containment policy", helped to form the defense alliances of SEATO and NATO. In addition, assistance to India increased to nine million dollars yearly.

The late 1950's and early 1960's were marked by border clashes on the northern border of India. In the fall of 1962, both the U.S. and the Soviet Union took India's side in one of these border conflicts. This action, claimed Seyd, led to increased tensions between the U.S.S.R. and Communist China. Britain and the United States continued to aid India in order to defend herself against China. Pakistan, meanwhile, "began to look elsewhere" for protection, and allied herself with China.

India, according to Seyd, was to be "a showplace of democracy" for the U.S. to display to other Asian nations. For the Soviet Union, India served as a "counterpoint" against China during the early 1960's.

With the election of President Nixon, who Seyd described as a "conservative" and "a realist in the Machievellian school", U.S. policy toward India changed drastically.

"India is too big to be a Communist satellite," Seyd claimed. "Mrs. Gandhi will not go Communist just to spite Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Nixon." Thus, the United States will not provide massive military assistance to India in order to contain Russia.

In the past, said Seyd, the United States has acted as an "overlord" in Asia. Now, realizing that the United States cannot afford to remain in this role, she will provide some economic aid to China in order to contain Russia.

In relation to Bangladesh, Seyd feels that the U.S. will not get herself involved with the political situation there, but will provide economic aid for "purely humanitarian reasons."

As regards Pakistan, Seyd claims that the U.S. may provide some economic aid to her so she does not fall into the Soviet sphere of influence. If Nixon is re-elected he may even send weapons to Pakistan.

Questions from the audience followed Seyd's lecture.

The fourth in the lecture series, to be held May 2, will be on the topic of "America and Asia: Problems of Trade".

Former Trustee Head Frank L. Boyden Dies

UMass President Robert Wood, in a statement issued yesterday, mourned the loss as a loss of one of UMass' "most distinguished elder statesmen".

From 1959 to 1969 Boyden served first as acting chairman, then as chairman of the Board of Trustees. Since 1969 he continued as an active member of the Board and as honorary chairman. He was present at the special meeting earlier this month which elected Randolph Bromery as Chancellor of UMass-Amherst.

President Wood's statement also eulogized Boyden as a "grace to his epoch. His vitality and energy on behalf of UMass were legend. We shall miss him, but his endeavors are monument and he will not be forgotten."

Boyden leaves behind his wife, the former Helen Childs to whom he was married in 1907, and three children.

When We Have Won...

Student Mobilization Committee

The Sunday, April 16 newspapers carried headlines of the bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong harbor. A meeting was quickly called to decide on a response. On just a few hours notice, women and men from the Student Mobe, YWLL, YSA, Clergy and Laymen Concerned, United Christian Foundation, Students for McGovern, Spark, and the Student Government Assn., got together to call Tuesday's mass meeting. There was, for good reason, no representation at that meeting from either the Third World Alliance or the Women's Caucus. The Third World Alliance had its hands full shutting down the School of Education Marathon which absorbed all of their forces. The Women's Caucus had not yet been formed.

At the Tuesday night meeting, a vote was taken to strike on the four demands–Stop the Bombing; Immediate, Total, and Unconditional Withdrawal of All U.S. Forces from Southeast Asia; Free All Political Prisoners; and for an End to Racism and Sexism, especially on the UMass campus. A temporary chair was formed out of that meeting consisting of one member of the Third World Alliance, one member of the Women's Caucus, and Larry Ladd.

On Wednesday, a mass meeting was held to organize specific strike actions. A fifteen member coordinating committee was formed at that meeting.

At the Thursday night meeting, a proposal was presented by the coordinating committee that said, in part, that an executive committee of fifteen members be established with one third representation from the Women's Caucus, one third from the Third World Alliance, and one third from the Steering Committee at large. There were also to be three co-chairpersons, one each chosen from the Women's Caucus, Third World Alliance, and the Steering Committee at large.

An amendment was proposed to allow for one-fourth representation on those bodies from the organized antiwar movement. Given the fact that the recent escalation of the war is what precipitated the strike, and that two of the strike demands dealt specifically with the war, the amendment seemed to be fair. The favorable vote that followed indicated that the body thought so as well. Opposition to the amendment was what seemed to surprise everyone.

Johnetta Cole, speaking for the Third World Alliance, began her remarks by asking who was the most oppressed by war. She was, unfortunately, interrupted by a member of the Student Mobe who, shouting two or three times from the floor, said that the Vietnamese were the most oppressed by the war. Johnetta then asked that he take the microphone and address his remarks to the body. Angrily, but nonetheless correctly, he stated that the oppression of war took the form of bombing, death and mutilation in Southeast Asia, and it was this that had brought us together originally. The now famous remark regarding people "crawling out of the woodwork", which was taken to be racist, was grossly misunderstood, as is clear from the WTOY videotape of the meeting. The remark stemmed from the seeming exclusion of the antiwar movement by the Steering Committee's original proposal. Unfortunately, the Women's Caucus and the Third World Alliance walked out of the meeting before further discussion could clarify the issue.

The fact that the Women's Caucus and the Third World Alliance are opposed to the war was never questioned. Infact, nearly everyone on this campus and most of the country are opposed to the war. What is needed at this point is the implementation of that sentiment into action. In as much as the organized antiwar movement sees that task as its main function, we felt that it representation on the Executive Committee was in line with the strike demands.

The focus and activities of the Third World Alliance and the Women's Caucus were never denigrated. The importance of those struggles was never belittled. But it is obvious that the major orientation of those two groups, their time and their effort, would be put toward the fight against racism and sexism, and not specifically toward ending the war in Southeast Asia. It was on this basis that we felt the need of having antiwar representation. When the mass meeting voted in favor of our proposal the Third World Alliance and the Women's Caucus walked out.

Racism and sexism at home are undeniably tied to the war in Southeast Asia. This fact was not refuted. The issue at hand stemmed from a question of emphasis and tactics.

A poorly structured proposal; an angry statement made by an individual on the spur of the moment; the misunderstanding of that statement; and the overreaction of two groups, left the strike in shambles. That strike was at once a political statement, and a rarely occurring tool with which to wage our struggles. For now, it is gone. We have a lot to learn.

The only victors on Thursday night were the forces of racism, sexism, and war.

We in the Student Mobilization Committee will continue to fight against the war. If there is one thing we have learned from the Vietnamese people, it is an indominable spirit of struggle in the face of adversity. We will stop fighting when we have won.

The Bars Inside Our Minds

By MRS. MARTHA POMEROY

I am not a member of your University community, but I have been very upset by the events there in the past week, in general. As they affected me personally, I would like to ask you if I may use a part of your letters column to express my views on these events.

I am a black schoolteacher. I have taught and worked in child psychology for 20 years. I have worked in the civil rights movement for 15 years, but my whole life has been devoted to helping my people get up off our knees and stand up tall. The principal way I have chosen to do this is through education.

Tuesday, I got up at 6 A.M. on one of my few free days to drive two hours to Amherst for the School of Education Marathon. There were quite a few events scheduled which I thought would be interesting and which would help me improve my abilities as a teacher. I arrived to find a number of black students walking around, holding signs and blocking access to the building and parking lot. The Marathon had been "cancelled" without so much as an announcement or an apology to those who worked so hard to prepare their presentations or those who came–sometimes at considerable inconvenience–to see them. I could not even find a place to park in order to find out what was going on.

Finally, at the house of a friend, I was able to find out what had happened. She has also enabled me to follow the events of the past week. The Marathon was wrecked by a group of rude, immature children who can express their self-hatred only by taking revenge on the world. They claim they stopped the Marathon because of "institutionalized" racism in the School of Education," because the Marathon "is a racist experience as presently structured", and because of the racist policies of Dean Allen." What patent nonsense!

There are many kinds of racism in this world. There's the open hatred and fear of the redneck, northern or southern; I have seen no trace of this kind of racism a the School of Education. There's the "institutionalized racism" so beloved by your manifesto writers, where the institution's policies discriminate against people on the basis of their race; if the School of Education discriminates it is in favor of minority groups, in an honest effort to correct past injustice. There is also the kind of racism made up of the largely unconscious prejudices, fears, and past conditioning of even the best-intentioned persons; I think this is evident in the words and actions of nearly every person, black and white, that I have met or listened to in the school. But this kind of racism takes years, maybe even generations, to eliminate; you can't force people to change their hidden preconceptions overnight.

But none of this explains why these students interfered with the Marathon. There are hundreds of thousands of black children in this state whose most desperate need is for whole, strong, mature black men and women to use as role models, as people to identify with. The primary objective of the black faculty and students at the School of Education should be to become, and to help others to become, worthy of being such role-models. Their behavior this past week does not encourage me. It is childish to think that one's own concerns are the most important things in the world, that one's own problems are more important than other people's problems; rudeness and thoughtlessness for others are just the little bully's desperate attempts to make himself feel important, because he's really afraid that he isn't. This is also true for hysterical ranting, grandiose posturing, and generally abusive verbal coercion.

I guess this brings me to what upsets me the most. The movement has always had a choice between moral force and raw coercion. Moral force can be more or less forceful, but it must have a moral basis, a goal that is fair and just. Raw coercion does not, and the difference is that either might work to change a law or a policy, but only moral force can change people's minds. When you put someone down just to get even, when you destroy something useful just to make yourselves feel big, you are helping to perpetuate racism and making it harder for the rest of us.

Prejudice, racism, and discrimination are rooted in fear. If you try to play on the white liberal's guilt feelings to make him give you everything you want, whether you have a just claim to it or not, he is sooner or later going to remember that he didn't cause this situation; his father or grandfather may have caused it, but he's stuck in it almost as much as you are–he's willing to help you out but he won't trade places with you. (The front page of your Daily Collegian on Friday was good evidence of how far you can push them, wallowing in their guilt. The letters page of the same paper was even better evidence of the natural response to such amoral coercion.)

The people at the School of Education have established 50% minority admission quotas, have supported minority faculty recruitment, have made large quantities of resources available to urban education and other minority-related programs, and have shared authority freely and fairly (at least I think so, especially compared to other places). But they can't give you what you need, which is to free yourselves. The reason you can't get rid of the bars, no matter how hard you fight, is because the bars are inside your heads.

Oh, you can prove your point. Accuse every white man of being a racist and keep on demanding more and more and needling them harder and harder, no matter how hard they try to rise above their own conditioning. Eventually they'll turn around and say, "Enough!" Then you can say, "See! I told you they were all a bunch of racists!" and go off and enjoy being a martyr. Meanwhile, we need you to help raise our children up strong and whole, and you can't help because you won't heal yourselves of your own racism and hatred.

I just get so mad! There's so much work to do for our people, and if you put half as much energy into helping as you put into squabbling, and disrupting, and playing King of the Hill to feed your own poor egos, just think what you might accomplish!

'. . . HOWEVER, WHILE REMAINING TRULY THANKFUL, I HAVE BEEN ASKED TO DRAW YOUR ATTENTION TO THE RIDICULOUS PRICE HERE OF!'

Letters To The Editor

Convenient And Comfortable

To the Editor:

I would like to address two questions to the community: 1. What did the University lose when the vets, women and men took over the ROTC building? and 2. For all the people in this university who mentally support or agree with removing ROTC and who react against the issues of sexism, racism, and the war...How do you combat these things? Not how do you make a statement about them? How do you combat them?

1. As regards the takeover and the insistent viewpoint that academic freedom was curtailed, and the democratic process bastardized: Classes were not disrupted. I do not think anyone is so naive as to think that they could be rescheduled, but since they were not rescheduled, let's deal with the reality. In reality, no classes were forced or demanded to leave the building; all classes were asked. Most classes did in fact leave to meet in other places, and those faculty members in sympathy with the occupation offered to switch locations with the classes scheduled for the building. The ROTC classes in the building have no special facilities that necessitate use of that particular building, if a non-ROTC class desired to stay they would be requested to deal with the issues of the center; there would be no coercion; and if they desired, they would be allowed to continue as they were.

So how was academic freedom curtailed, who was being forced, what was bastardized? The building was open to everyone; even the ROTC officers were allowed to use their rooms. In fact, the outcome did not limit a thing, but added to the number of classes at the university, added to the issues being dealt with, and tried to establish a permanent center for such activities.

2. How did we deal with the issues of racism, sexism, and war other than through lip service?

From birth we are taught how to fit into systems. There is nothing subversive about it, that's just the way it is. If the economy and government is to run smoothly (not necessarily well or morally, just without waves) then we have to work within the structure and as a result are trained to fit into these existing structures. (Remember grammar school and high school, when the constitution was dragged out for discussion, we were not expected to deal with the merits and values of these documents but instead limited ourselves to dealing with the options that the system presents.) In this way we were/are continually conditioned to accept all structures and devices as being unquestionable and to deal with the options presented by these structures instead–Do not question the structure, question the options. So that if we encounter an oppressive restrictive structure we are conditioned to accept its existence and work within that structure.

I cannot accept this sort of conditioning as being good since it prepares us to accept everything without question and this is where the value of a center for social change becomes evident. There are at present many groups working on the possibilities for change at this university but (as you might suspect) they are unrecognized and split into different locations. A center would establish a recognized location. In effect it would be a sanctioning of the fact that indeed we can and must question and deal with structures instead of options within structures. It is the first step of breaking us out of our conditioning.

While it may be convenient and comfortable to view the takeover of Dickinson as a brutal invasion of democratic rights and academic freedom such an explanation evolves not from dealing with the facts but from a conditioned reaction not to question structures and an uncomfortableness with the issues presented since these issues deal with us and not them.

The takeover obstructed nothing, the building was open to everyone, classes were added to the university, and a center was established to continue such creative education, exposure, and action concerning those oppressive systems we are conditioned to accept. Support the Center For Social Change.

Myopia

To the Editor:

A perennial demand of the American Left has been the removal of ROTC from college campuses. On the UMass campus, the prolocutor for this view is now the Center for Social Change which has been distributing a leaflet explaining the demand.

The leaflet explains that the Army's hierarchy is one that "enforces racism, sexism, and imperialism". So what? Is this not also true of most major corporations and of the society at large? In banishing ROTC from the campus we merely insulate some students from one small source of such evil influence and thus appoint ourselves to be their moral guardians.

It is also explained that ROTC is allowable by the University power structure because it is "Legitimate" whereas a program like the "Che Guevara School of Latin American Freedom Fighters" would not be offered even if a substantial portion of the student body requested it. Conceded. But instead of fighting for true academic freedom which would allow student choice of courses, the Center in effect says, "If we can't have academic freedom right now, nobody can have it" and they close off Dickinson Hall to everyone who has classes there.

The above examples help to illustrate a peculiar malady with which the American Student Left is afflicted. The entire movement seems infected with a desire to make brief, redundant gestures, in lieu of any realistic commitment to social change. Witness the strikes, sit-ins, ROTC takeovers, and mass demonstrations of recent weeks. Such behavior is little more than political masturbation. It makes the demonstrators feel good but it only serves to reinforce the general population's image of the college student as a radical activist. Persuasion to certain social ideals does not take place through alienation but rather through rational discourse and hard work. The racism, sexism, and imperialism of the military establishment exist because they are dyed into the fabric of American society and no elimination of ROTC can affect that. The society itself must be changed and that will only happen when the movement disburdens itself of political rhetoric and starts to relate to the people who make up the core of American society. This has been the tragic failure of the Liberation movement. The white working class, regardless of its views on the war, has yet to cease its scorn of those elements in the country who fight racism, sexism, and imperialism. Until realistic alterations are attempted in that area, the Center for Social Change will only be an ironic title for a myopic and useless organization.

It Ain't Me

To the Editor:

As a student leader in both the Southwest Assembly and the Southwest Internal Planning Conference (S.W.I.P.), I can personally vouch for the fact that neither group has "issued letters of recognition and support of the Center (for Social Action) to us and to Chancellor Bromery" as stated in the letter that the Center for Social Action is handing out. It is indeed true that individual students of these organizations support the Center, but neither group has at the present time discussed supporting the Center as a group.

Personal Touch

To the Editor:

Dear Mr. Nixon,

I know this letter will never get to you personally, but I'm sure the secretaries have secretaries who will have a nice reply. I have a suggestion to ending the war which will turn the spotlights on you for saving so many lives.

Remember the Dunkirk episode in World War II where the Americans and Englishmen were pushed to the sea and were picked up by small sailing craft for fishing and the like? Well, just imagine if those men were South Vietnamese soldiers and the Americans were still in there fighting as always. Just let the Viet Cong keep pushing the ground forces to the sea. You can have there waiting for them those amphi boats which so proudly deliver the soldiers to the battle scene, let them play a reverse role and take them away. The fog, to be analogous with the fog of Dunkirk, can be delivered by your superior B-52's equipped with fog bombs. (I'm not quite sure what fog bombs are but I have faith in our wonderful military to come up with a bomb, which when exploded, produces artificial fog). That fog would be terrific cover for the getaway boats.

And don't worry about your reputation, Mr. Nixon. You will be honored all around the world, especially in your own country (remember the one west of China and east of Moscow). "Try us you'll like us". Anyway, sir, people will bow down to your wishes since you have proven yourself to be an incredible life saver. I bet you won't let one single, solitary man drown in the South China Sea.

Well, Mr. Nixon, what do you think? Should we start launching those amphiboats and raise up the storm?

In case there is any affirmative answer to this proposal and more information is needed, you can contact....

Try To Understand

To the Editor:

I guess my main purpose of this letter is to express my dissatisfaction with a great number of students at this university, as well as other schools, but particularly the UMass campus.

I've been keeping pretty much up to date on the activities concerning the strike, the war, R.O.T.C., etc. and have found the attitudes of some people enough to turn a stomach. Using an example: two students were speaking between themselves of issues concerning ROTC abolishment. When one Cadet asked if he might sit and listen to their views, or one of the students emphasized that the Cadet was not welcome, and replied, "I have nothing to say to you!" The "I have my own opinions, which are the right ones, and everyone else is wrong, so I don't want to listen to you because I'm right" attitude makes me sick!

What exactly is trying to be accomplished at these so-called "workshops"? From what I understand, the workshops are supposed to acquaint people with the reasons for opposition to the war, its policies, and reasons to abolish ROTC from campus. These workshops expose the horrors of the war, the results of the bombings, death, violence, hatred, ROTC.....

But have they exposed the reasons behind the bombings, the purpose of such programs as the ROTC program? Have they REALLY exposed both sides? I think not. The first word that comes to my mind is Propaganda, one-sided news meant to sway people towards another's belief.

Has anyone really tried to understand the ROTC program BEFORE they spoke or acted against it? FACTS!? I'm afraid many haven't. Too trivial to bother with. The big thing is to demonstrate and take away the privileges of fellow students, right?

Sure, you say, ROTC produces killers. In what way? ROTC trains young men (and women), interested in becoming leaders, to cope with situations which might occur in handling soldiers, so to prevent tragedies such as My Lai. Many people complain about the military and suggest such things as a volunteer service. May I ask what can be closer to a volunteer service than ROTC? Every country needs a military force as protection; every military force needs leaders. ROTC produces leaders-not killers. (And I doubt if ROTC promotes racism and sexism.) The Cadets have never bothered anyone on campus or off, but have been hassled severely by others. Remember "Constitutional Rights"? That seems to be a popular phrase lately. The Cadets are separated from other students during training (which is only 2 hours a week for most) to prevent hassles. Does that sound murderous?

Another argument against ROTC is: "Men are being paid to enter the military!" This is far from the truth. The only way a Cadet receives pay is through scholarship, and even that means exams, requirements, red tape and pressures upon the student. It's not as easy as it sounds. Withdrawal from the program after the scholarship has started, means an automatic 2 years in the service. No one gets instant cash upon joining the ROTC program.

And now about Dickinson Hall. Sure, a Social Change Center and a Day Care Center would greatly benefit the community. But why does it have to be in Dickinson? Dickinson was alloted through federal funds, which means to remove ROTC from campus. One must go through Congress, and I doubt if Congress will buy the idea.

One last remark concerning the war. Just how long, with withdrawals and all, do you expect the remaining ground troops overseas could last without air support from the bombers? I'm sure everyone's familiar with the word "slaughter". I believe as long as there is a single soldier left in Vietnam, he should have air support for protection until he can come home.

I wonder how many people, particularly my fellow students, really take the time to learn both sides of the story and to understand them. Not many, I'm afraid.

ITT Builds Apartheid 12 Different Ways

NEW YORK (LNS) - First San Diego, then Chile, tomorrow the world. Actually, for ITT there's no need to wait. The world's been their oyster for over 50 years and they currently rank as one of the nation's largest multinational conglomerates. But following the exposure of ITT's attempts to buy a favorable anti-trust ruling from the Republicans and a coup in Chile from the CIA, some of their other holdings are coming under careful scrutiny. For instance, there are their operations in white-ruled southern Africa, where they have been raking in the profits off apartheid in South Africa, the repressive white minority regime in Rhodesia, and Portuguese colonial control of Angola and Mozambique.

(LNS)

Through several wholly-owned subsidiaries, ITT has been operating in Southern Africa for a number of years with most of their money invested in precisely those sectors South African money men see as most crucial--"pipelines to advanced technology, innovation, and know-how."

ITT's biggest investment in Africa is Standard Telephone and Cables (STC) which is one of South Africa's largest electrical manufacturing concerns. As major contributors to South Africa's rapidly growing telecommunications industry, STC has been thriving. During 1970, their assets are said to have jumped from $16 million to $23 million. And in the five-year period between 1966 and 1971, their sales trebled and annual turnover reached $42 million.

Other of ITT's enterprises in South Africa include a wholesale distributor of electrical equipment, manufacture of electric wire and telephone cables and two secretarial schools (for whites only).

In Rhodesia, ITT-owned Supersonic Radio Manufacturing Company makes radios, televisions, and other electrical apparatus. In Mozambique, ITT purchases Grup Oliva, comprising four metallurgical and metal mechanical companies, for a total of close to $15 million. They have also supplied much of the equipment for expanding telephone systems in both Mozambique and Angola.

Arguing in defense of ITT's expanding involvement in Southern Africa, Louis Wildman, Chairman of Standard Telephone and Cables, an ITT subsidiary, resorts to the usual claim of U.S. corporations who collaborate with apartheid--"Industry works for the people," he says.

The reasoning goes that a booming economy will mean a rapid growth in the number of jobs and will force the government to relax the strict job classification system that reserves skilled and high-paying work exclusively for whites. Left out of such calculations is the fact that in the few instances where blacks have been given jobs formerly reserved for whites, the government has simply downgraded the classification of the job to "semi-skilled" and cut the wages accordingly.

In addition, ITT has jumped wholeheartedly into the South African government's "border areas" scheme for developing industries near the borders of the "bantustans" (or reservations).

This project aims to increase the convenience and profitability of apartheid while even further reducing the interaction between races--all by putting industries just outside the borders of the reserves where the 68% of the population who are black are crowded onto 13% of the worst land. One of the first companies to actually start construction on such a plant was ITT.

That's just one of the ways ITT is working to make Southern African safe for apartheid, Portuguese colonialism, and U.S. profits. To begin with, South Africa's white minority regime depends on investment from the U.S. and western Europe to keep its economy afloat.

A South African economist predicts "it's clear we cannot continue developing at the necessary rate without an increasing inflow of foreign money." With companies like ITT flocking to capitalize on cheap black labor and prosperous white consumers, they don't really have to worry.

A South But just to help them feel secure, ITT also lends a hand to South Africa's military preparations. Although they insist that it does not violate the letter of the UN "embargo on any arms deliveries to South Africa," ITT has a contract with the Simonstown Naval Base, providing telecommunications equipment.

And back on February 18, 1969, they announced the completion of a direct cable link between Lisbon and Cape Town, South Africa Prime Minister Johaanes Vorster promptly dubbed this new link between the capitals of white supremacy in Africa "the Cable of Good Hope."

Women's Strike for Peace and Women's International League for Peace and Freedom have called for a boycott of ITT for its role in providing military systems and equipment used in the air war and automated battlefield in Southeast Asia. Their role in South Africa makes another good reason to keep it in mind. The kinds of consumer products ITT is into, primarily plastic foods, should make it easy anyway--like Wonder Bread, Hostess cakes, Morton TV Dinners, Avis Rent-A-Car and Sheraton Hotels. Those you can do without.

Report Suppressed By E.P.A.

WASHINGTON (LNS) — The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), the Federal agency in charge of watch-dogging the environment, has withheld from the public a 123-page report on the mercury menace.

In his column, of April 15, Jack Anderson, who recently achieved nationwide fame for his ITT expose, revealed the suppression of the document.

The report, which has been pocketed for almost three months, charges that the government has misled the public on the seriousness of the mercury threat. "The assumption has been made that fish is the only significant source of human intake of mercury," the report states.

In fact, it is true that fish represents the major source of "voluntary" intake of mercury. Many may recall headlines of last year when it was discovered that much of the tuna and swordfish consumed by Americans contained mercury levels far above the safety level set by the government.

However, Americans consume far greater amounts of mercury unknowingly--and unwillingly--via the air they breathe and the water they drink.

Major sources of mercury pollution include: electric generation--(U.S. power plants may be putting as much as 150 tons of mercury into the air each year); use in agriculture as a fungicide for seeds; in the plastic industries, and the manufacturing of electrical equipment like batteries. It has been calculated that the U.S. has increased its industrial use of mercury 20 times since 1945 and the greatest part of that does not appear in the food we eat.

The damage that mercury can do is enormous--and also difficult to measure. Since it seems to seek out "nervous tissues, especially the brain," causing "rather bizarre nervous symptoms," including tremors, retardation, brain damage, blindness, chromosome damage, ataxia and, sometimes, even death.

The most infamous case of mercury damage here in the U.S. occurred when a New Mexico farmer fed his family on pork which had been fed mercury-treated seeds before butchering. One by one, each member of the family, including five children were stricken with symptoms of mercury poisoning. In a similar case nearly 300 Iraqui people died after eating seed contributed by the U.S. that had been treated with mercury.

The suppressed report calls for severe controls to be placed on industries who pollute with mercury and this may give a clue as to why it was never released.

Parents Can't Name Son 'Che'

BONN, West Germany (LNS) — A two-year-old boy may go through life known officially as "73-30" because Bavarian courts will not allow his parents to name him Che after the late Ernesto (Che) Guevara.

His father, Hein-George Treyz, a technical clerk in Bavaria, told the news magazine Der Spiegel that the boy is still officially unnamed. Instead, registry officials wrote the figure "73-30" on his birth certificate--the designation for a boy who has not received a first name.

Treyz said the name Che--the nickname given to the slain Latin American guerrilla leader by fellow combatants in the Cuban Revolution--is not regarded as suitable in West Germany.

A local Bavarian court upheld the registry decision and a state court confirmed the lower court.

Sales and Sales Management Training Program

This Program is designed to develop young college graduates for careers in life insurance sales and sales management. It provides an initial training period of 3 months (including 2 weeks at a Home Office School) before moving into full sales work.

Those trainees who are interested in and who are found qualified for management responsibility are assured of ample opportunity to move on to such work in either our field offices or in the Home Office after an initial period in sales.

Aggressive expansion plans provide unusual opportunities for those accepted.

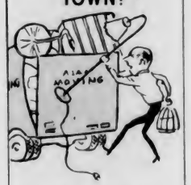
Archie Shepp

Archie Shepp To Play Here



Jazz saxophonist, Archie Shepp, and his Quintet, will be featured in Concert Friday, April 28, at 7:30 p.m. in the UMass Student Union Ballroom.

Archie Shepp, composer and educator, who plays tenor saxophone, will bring with him Beaver Harris, Drums; Jimmy Merritt, Bass; Dave Burrell, piano and Charles McGhee, Trumpet.

Imamu Baraka, writing in Downbeat, says of Mr. Shepp, "Quite a few people hear 'a new-wave Ben Webster' when listening to Shepp. Others hear a strong Sonny Rollins influence; still others hear John Coltrane's presence in the Shepp approach to tenor saxophone. But it seems certain that what these listeners really hear is a musician whose emotional registrations are so broad that he is able to make reference to anybody's 'style' even though finally all the ideas and images that make up his playing are completely his own...Shepp has moved into the front line of tenor saxophonists of any persuasion."

There will be no admission charge for this concert, sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council in cooperation with the UMass New Africa House. Because of limited seating, UMass undergrads with I.D.'s will be seated before the general public.

How To Adjust To The War

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

HOW TO ADJUST TO THE WAR

Many of our patients demonstrate acute difficulties in adjusting to the reality of the war in Indo-China. In some cases these difficulties manifest themselves in concerns about the draft; concerns resulting at times in confusion and self-doubt, and at times in panic and outrage. Returned veterans often find it almost impossible to readjust to life in a county which seems at a loss to provide them jobs, much less personal support and respect. Even more disturbing to us, however, are the sometimes subtle yet profound changes in almost everyone's consciousness.

We have lived with this war for a decade, and lived with it in a peculiarly intimate way. Many of us even eat dinner with it each evening as we watch Walter Cronkite's war reports, interspersed with political denials of war-like intentions. But chronic indigestion would appear to be the least of our problems. The defensive capacity of the humany psyche is, after all, not without its limitations. And for good reason! Most of us cannot deny the horrors of murder and torture, and maiming. We have to eventually acknowledge our part in these most primitive and barbaric of human behaviors. How then does a well-balanced, emotionally stable individual incorporate these realities without protest and indignation? He doesn't. A healthy person cannot (in our opinion) psychologically integrate the war.

We would also like to note that we are beginning to see people who are struggling with the heightened anxiety and depression that often accompanies the end of the school year. This is particularly acute among seniors. There are various reasons for the discomfort. People become anxious in anticipation of the completion of their courses, particularly when there are exams involved While it's obvious that some fear poor performance, others for complex reasons fear success. In the interpersonal area the summer often interrupts significant relationships which causes people to experience separation anxiety and loss leading sometimes to depression. There is often ambivalence about returning home to uncomfortable family situations where parents may be demanding and controlling. Finally there is sometimes confusion about summer plans. While the summer affords a tremendous opportunity to pursue one's interests in political activity, travelling or by working, making decisions and dealing with uncertainty arouses anxiety. If you do find yourself uncomfortable at this time of year, it is important that you be aware of the situational, and transitory nature of these stresses.

Learn to be a pilot. Fly in your spare time.

Flying...what a great way to spend your spare time. Undergraduate Pilot Training (UPT) is the Air Force Reserve's program that trains those who qualify to become Air Force pilots with a minimum of interruption from job, home life, etc. Qualifications include: being between 20½ and 26½ years of age; in top physical condition; hold a bachelor's degree (or in your last semester); and satisfactory scores on the Air Force Officer's Qualification Test.

The program begins when you go to Lackland AFB, Texas, to attend Officer Training for 12 weeks.

Upon being commissioned a 2nd lieutenant in the Air Force Reserve, you go directly to an Air Force flying school for classroom and flying instruction. After one year of training, you will return to your own hometown, follow the civilian career you've chosen, and fly with your local Air Force Reserve unit, during your spare time and on weekends. For all the facts about the Reserve's Undergraduate Pilot Training Program mail in the following coupon.

Bartender Expects New Law To Change Habits

By ROBERT TOUAKE

"People won't come down to have a beer in the afternoon and do their homework," Cindy explained to this inquiring reporter recently.

Cindy enjoys working at the Blue Wall more than at a place like the Hatch. She attributes this to the different kind of atmosphere. She explained that Blue Wall people are, "older than freshman and sophomores," and more responsible and quieter than those in the Hatch.

To many, in this age of social reform, the idea of Cindy tending bar might be insignificant. Perhaps there are still a few people who believe a woman's place is in the home, under an apron, behind a stove. These souls might take a second or even a third glance at a female drawing draft behind a bar.

After all, a bartender's lot has been traditionally a male occupation. As a result, any female employed mixing Tom Collins or Bloody Marys might expect a catcall along with an order of beers. According to Cindy, comments other than an occasional, "hey chicky," are very rare. "Most people hardly ever seem to notice the person behind the bar is female," she told this reporter.

Actually, other than what meets the eye, there isn't any difference between male or female bartenders. The only duty Cindy doesn't perform, "are the tapping of the kegs which weight 175 pounds and must be brought out to the bar to be tapped." Otherwise, Cindy mixes drinks, draws beer and performs all the other activities male bartenders do.

On an average day, Cindy might open the bar, unlock the liquor cabinets and unlock the taps. Cindy explained the taps are locked as a precautionary measure, "before the taps were locked the janitors would drink a keg of beer among themselves during the night."

Cindy had no prior experience as a bartender, but was trained at the Campus Center. She learned how to mix drinks on the job, working alongside a more experienced bartender. Cindy explained, "mixing isn't difficult since the Blue Wall is not a full service bar and only serves a limited number of mixed drinks."

Watts To Lead Workshop

Alan Watts has been invited by the New England Center of Personal and Organizational Development to the Amherst area this weekend April 29-30 to run a workshop entitled, "THE LAWS OF ENERGY: THE IMPLICATIONS OF THE BOOK OF CHANGES FOR WESTERN COMMON SENSE." The workshop will begin at 10 A.M. in the Blue Room of the Howard Johnson Motor Inn at the intersection of Highway 9 and 116 in Hadley. The fee has been reduced to $35 in order to allow more people to attend. If you would like to participate, notify the Center at 584-0240 or register at the door Saturday morning.

Through books, articles, and lectures, Alan Watts has become know throughout the United States and abroad as one of the most stimulating and unconventional philosophers of our time. Although his special interest has been the interpretation of Eastern thought, especially Zen Buddhism, to the West, he is one of the new style of "generalists," concerned as much with philosophy and religion as with psychology, anthropology, and the philosophy of science--although this is to use the old-fashioned language of boxed disciplines.

His visit is being arranged and sponsored by the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development which is a group of graduate students and professors interested in educating the greater U. of Mass community in the new humanistic methods for enchancing personal relationships.

"Amphitryon" In CC Aud. Thurs.

A modernized version of the "Amphitryon" by Plautus will be presented tomorrow, April 27, in the UMass Campus Center Auditorium.

The Classics Society, a student organization, will sponsor the musical comedy which will begin at 8 p.m.

Admission will be free, but preferential seating will be reserved for ticket-holders. Tickets may be obtained from the Classics department office, Herter Hall, room 407, UMass. Telephone is 545-0512.

Two of the three acts in the "Amphitryon" will be produced in the original Latin. One act will be produced in English translation. Actors, singers, and dancers will include John Carideo, William Schumacher, and Joyce Wagner of the University; William Gleason of South Hadley High School; and Lorraine Teller of Williston Academy in Easthampton. Assoc. Prof. Edward Phinney of the UMass Classics Department will direct.

The Classics Society will also present the "Amphitryon" before about 1,000 members at the Convention of the Massachusetts Junior Classical League, Saturday, April 29, at 12:30 p.m., at Marblehead Senior High School in Marblehead.

The "Amphitryon," which was first produced more than 2,100 years ago, is a comedy of errors based on the myth of an adulterous wife, Alcmena, and her husband Amphitryon, who were both duped by the god Jupiter. While Amphitryon was away fighting a battle, Jupiter disguised himself as Amphitryon and very easily persuaded Alcmena--who thought Jupiter was her husband--to commit adultery. The fun began when the real husband returned home from battle, expecting a hero's welcome. Amphitryon discovered not only that his wife had been unfaithful, but also that she was pregnant. The product of the liaison, however, turned out to be the mighty baby, Hercules.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Aries can be attractive, persuasive and domineering. Natives of this zodiacal sign seldom take "no" for an answer. Personality sparkles in Aries persons. They are individualists and imprint their own style on efforts, projects. Possibly the most ardent publicist for the growing feminist movement in the United States is Gloria Steinem, an Aries. She is articulate and attractive, as well as direct, original and independent. That all adds up to the classical qualities of her sign, the natural first of the zodiac, which is Aries.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Don't affix signature to documents unless authorized to do so. One in authority could be resentful, suspicious. Check papers, especially where legal matters are involved. Mate, partner could act in egocentric manner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Low-key approach is best; be diplomatic and receptive. Family security is involved. Personal services are emphasized. Don't expect the usual. Changes occur. Rapid pace is fine now for others. For you, go slow.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): In love, you find where you stand. In other areas, you are tempted to take unnecessary chances, important to know difference between one who is sincere or otherwise. Element of deception is present. Be wary.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rely on experience. Stick to familiar ground. Resist one who attempts to sell get-rich-quick scheme. Don't skirt law. Capricorn is in picture. What appeared basic may prove to be transitory.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Relatives, neighbors may act in confused manner. Key is to check messages, calls. Finish now rather than attempting to begin projects. Cooperate with Aries. Don't break health resolutions. Let go of past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Gains come from unorthodox source. Change of routine should be welcomed. Take a more independent stance. Guard valuables. When others know you care and are aware, they will cooperate. Trust Leo.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Differentiate between publicity and notoriety. Your inner feeling will serve as reliable guide. Aquarian could play prominent role. Grandiose proposal should be carefully examined. No one is giving you something for nothing.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): One you think much of could have proverbial feet of clay. Accent is on getting puzzle pieces together. Bizarre situation is about to be concluded. You can and will land on your feet. Flash your smile.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are drawn in two directions. Gain is shown if you choose course that requires steady determination. Otherwise, you have fun but results will be empty. Choice is your own. Don't play second fiddle.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You require additional information. Costs have not been analyzed or revealed. Know this and take appropriate action. Dig deep. Reject superficial indications. Those who care the most may be the most subdued.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid self-deception. Financial commitment needs examination. Policies, documents may require changes. Correct past mistakes. Don't take situations, persons for granted. Perfect techniques. Key wish may yet be fulfilled.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are determined, an individual who enjoys batting the odds, who can drive home messages and can win grudging admiration even from adversaries. By October many obstacles will be removed. You will enjoy greater freedom and will be more flexible.

Today, tomorrow and Friday, April 26, 27, and 28, the UMass Concert Dance Group will present its annual spring concert under the direction of Daniel Peterson, assisted by Leone McEnroe and Candice Morse.

Dances in the concert this year will feature a variety of styles and techniques...ballet, modern, song-dance and jazz.

Three works by dance department faculty members will be presented: "Limitations", a modern piece in three parts, choreographed by Leone McEnroe; "Le Reve du Jour", a modern ballet with music by Stravinsky, choreographed by Candice Morse; and "Ur-Song", a song-dance work for sixteen dancers, choreographed by Daniel Peterson.

Student choreography includes "Triangle", a modern ballet on pointe by Judi Olson and Janice Ross; "Jamming on Soul", a jazz piece to the music of Isaac Hayes' "Shaft Theme", choreographed by Louise Lane; and "TranscenDance", a solo choreographed and performed by Barbara Bell. Other choreography is by Susan Amenworth and Marcia Clement, Ginny Bistany, Dorothy Donovan, and Carol Flechner.

The concert will be April 26, 27, and 28, today, tomorrow and Friday, at 8:15 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets will be sold at the door on the night of performance; at the Bowker Box Office; in the Campus Center Mall, today thru Friday, April 28, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m..

Commentary:

Gorillas To Take N.E. Title Today

By MARTY KELLEY

Titles don't grow on trees, they don't happen every day, and if you think they're worth their weight in gold, spend a few hours at the upper Boyden Field this afternoon and you'll see one in the making as the Gorillas entertain powerful Brown University for the top spot in New England lacrosse circles.

The perfect matchup is presented. The Bruins are at present the number one rated cookie in the six-state region with a 7-2 mark. On the other side of the ledger, Massachusetts is ranked second with a 6-2 log and the singular joy of having compiled a four-game win streak.

This type of situation matchup brings to mind just a host of odd parodies that can be applied to this particular pairing and to the actors that will be on stage performing this afternoon. If you take the time to examine a few of the facts that describe Coach Garber and his present group of performers, then you'll probably pause in your tracks and admit that their product that is to be actualized this day against the Bruins is a service so well constructed that in some small way you as a fan, or as a spectator, want to be part of that championship game.

The Gorillas are a funny lot. They're as individual as any sport experience presently on this campus. And in their own unselfish, dedicated, at times not appreciated, and very humble way, the Gorillas have silently become, under the auspices of Coach Garber, the most successful athletic story in the history of UMass sports. In 17 previous years, Garber has amassed an uncomparable 120-59-2 mark, national focus, and 3 straight N.E. titles, with last spring's club rated 14th in the country--the current standing of this edition.

Concerning the actors on stage today selling their product, well, there may be no finer in all New England. Take for instance Paul Ritch, a Little-All-American attackman from Huntington, N.Y. Paul seeks no fame or fortune from his salesmanship. He goes about his task with a quiet confidence that offsets his nonchalance. Ritch feels right when his dad sits on the bank but he, perhaps as much as everyone, feels he must do well this day against the powerful Bruins because 40 other guys look to the All-American for results.

The faces of success are humbly hidden under the rather outdated looking cages that the Gorillas wear. Underneath, can be seen the daily grimaces of the Dana Stones, the John Nagles, or even the small but tactful Eugene Hardiman, who as a frosh, should get a third midfield run against the pompous Bruin.

And what about a guy like goalie Bruce Crawford, the pesky field general of whose athletic livelihood is daily defined by stopping a little orange ball slung at his slim body near 60-80 miles per hour. Crawford's frame is tattoed from shoulder blade to kneecap with rude bruises. But to Bruce the scars are accepted, running 2 miles a day in the February snow is in the past, picking himself out of the mud at Wesleyan now seems well worth the while. For this day, goalie Crawford will lead his proud group of Gorillas against the Bruins for the New England championship and a possible bid to the national tournament.

This type of event will be self-actualized only once. Only today will the Gorillas be on stage offering their precious product to the University community. Next week when you're quoted as saying you wished you had been there, well, you only have yourself to blame. This sporting experience will be actualized once and only once in your backyard.

The Gorillas, confident as actors, would love to share a bit of their sporting subculture, a bit of their uniqueness, a bit of their togetherness, and a bit of their pride with you as the Gorillas meet the Brown Bruins for an unprecedented fourth straight New England title.

The Hardy's, the Ritchie's, the Bosworth's, Carpenger's; Blomquist's, Leuder's, Lindsay's, and Crimmin's, will soon be names out of the past. Will you remember Bruce Crawford as an All-American goalie? Today these athletes will be obscured beneath their garb trying to bring a championship right before your eyes. The Gorillas aren't proud; they'd love to share their triumph with you. It's going to be a duel all the way to upstage the mighty Bruin but the Gorillas, being humble as they are, would like to see you there as they begin their self-actualizing process for the title hopefully in front of your eyes.

Sox Ca-rrreeamed

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Steve Braun and Steve Brye, supporting Jim Perry's four-hitter combined to drive in seven runs as the Minnesota Twins crushed Boston 12-0 Tuesday.

Braun, an infielder in his second season, drove home four runs in the first two innings with a single and double, later adding a second two-bagger.

Brye, a rookie left fielder, collected four straight hits and drove in three runs as the Twins collected 6 hits and benefitted from four Red Sox errors.

The Twins sent eight men to bat in a four-run first and nine in a five-run second that drove out Boston starter Marty Pattin, who pulled a muscle in his lower back and saw his record fall to 0-3.

Perry, 1-1, gave up first-inning singles to Carl Yastrzemski and Reggie Smith, worked out of a two-out jam and breezed to Minnesota's third straight victory.

It was Boston's worst defeat in more than two seasons.

Boston, 000 000 000- 0 4 4; Minnesota, 451 001 10x- 12 16 0.

Sharman Named NBA Coach Of The Year

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Sharman admits he was worried seven months ago when he took over as coach of the Los Angeles Lakers, that such veterans as Wilt Chamberlain and Jerry West might rebel against the idea of extra workouts.

The former University of Southern California and Boston Celtic backcourt star prescribed a brutal regimen. The new system worked, producing 33 victories in a row, a National Basketball Association Western Division title and now coach of the year honors for Sharman.

"Frankly, I was worried. I didn't know if guys like Wilt and Jerry would be willing to accept my concepts, such as getting the outlet pass out quick and using a faster tempo of game," said the 45-year-old Sharman. "That's what pleases me more than anything. The players have all cooperated so much."

"I'm extremely pleased at such an honor and anytime anything like this happens, the first thing you have to do is thank your players. Their hard work and dedication to the system is the only reason I'm getting this honor."

All the Lakers agree that Sharman's key to getting his system across was his communication with them.

Forward Happy Hairston said "he talked to me more than any other coach and that's important."

"Once in awhile he even asked me for my suggestion if something wasn't going right," said the veteran forward.

Now, just prior to the opening of the final NBA playoff series with New York, Sharman is most busy. He knows the Lakers have been in eight of the last 11 NBA final series, winning none. He knows anything can happen in a short series and he discounts the accomplishments of this year's Laker team.

Track Team Tramples Indians

Ed Shaughnessey, shown here broad-jumping, was a big factor in yesterday's easy win over Dartmouth. He finished second in that event, but won first place in the high jump event.

By EARLE BARROLL

It came with unexpected and shocking ease.

Bouyed by a near-perfect performance the UMass track team inserted itself back into the New England title picture yesterday with a stunning 103-60 romp past Dartmouth College at the Llewelyn Derby Track.

As the score itself indicates, the Redmen followed their pre-meet blueprint with more than enough to spare as they evened off Dartmouth's power in the weights in the jumping events and finished them off on the track.

"This will raise some eyebrows around New England," a delighted Coach Ken O'Brien said after the meet. "It came as a complete surprise to me, but it only goes to show that when the guys really want to bear down, they can."

His reference stems from Saturday's near travesty at Central Connecticut when a cinder track (like running on a sandy beach) and horrible weather conditions de-motivated the Redmen to the brink of near Yesterday's effort was quite the opposite.

The Redmen won 13 out of 19 events. Seconds and thirds were almost as abundant and in the dictionary of track and field, this spells destruction anyway you look at it.

Dartmouth, as was anticipated, took 27 out of a possible 36 points in the weight throws. It was a meet pre-requisite for UMass to balance this in the jumping events...and they did with 26 out of 36 points.

"I don't think we could have gotten more out of the jumping events," O'Brien said. "If you look down the results there are one-two finishes in the high, long and triple jumps." (See results below.)

On the track, the sprinters and hurdlers (who saved Saturday's victory) score took 36 out of 41 points which included a victory in the 440-yard relay. Jim Graves was a double winner in the hurdles tying the track record of 14.7 seconds in the 120 high hurdles.

The big question mark prior to the meet was the half mile. You guessed it. When you win by 40 odd points, question marks have a habit of changing to exclamation points and freshman Devin Croft and Arnie Morse saw to it as they ran one-two over a closely bunched group.

Peter Crisci who runs track because as he puts it, "I'm hurt" (he's a marathoner) for the second straight home meet took on one of New England's best in the three-mile in Tom Shiland. Against Holy Cross he lost in the last turn to Gary Peyton, (N.E. Mile Champ), but this time around, he reversed roles as he won going away in a new track record of 14:16.3.

It led O'Brien to jest, "You never know with Crisci."

He just runs with unexpected and shocking ease.

No. 13 For Redmen

By CATHY RYAN

Thirteen may be an unlucky number for most people, but not for Coach Dick Berquist and the UMass baseball team. The Redmen boosted their record to 13-0 yesterday with a 6-1 vicitory over Amherst College.

John Olson, whose record is now 3-0, was the winning pitcher. Olson pitched, allowing only three hits and striking out five men. Tom Austin came on to pitch in the ninth inning to wrap up the game.

Jim McNitt threw for the Amherst Lord Jeffs and gave up four hits. He was replaced by Len Samela in the sixth inning. Samela hurled for the remainder of the game, giving up only two hits.

The third inning saw UMass begin to gather runs. Jim Saracino drew a walk to start off the inning. Dan Kelly got on first base when he was hit by a McNitt pitch. Then Brian Martin promptly doubled to send Saracino home. Ron Beaurivage reached first when Amherst first baseman Fitts bobbled the ball in what would have seemed to be an easy out. This error allowed for Dan Kelly to score. The final run of the inning came on a sacrifice fly to centerfield by Dan Esposito which rescued Brian Martin from third.

Ed McMahon started things off for the Redmen in the fifth inning with a double to centerfield. Tom McDermott then plated the previously injured McMahon with a sharp single. It was UMass 4, Amherst 0.

The Lord Jeffs, however, were not to be handed a shutout by the UMass team. Their only run came in the sixth inning when Dan Kelly had trouble handling shortstop Bob Lavigne's roller. This ended a string of 25 scoreless innings for the Redmen mound corps.

Pete Backstrom, who came in to play centerfield for UMass, singled in the bottom of the sixth inning and was sent home on a sacrifice by Ed McMahon, upping the count to 5-1, UMass. Backstrom singled again in the seventh inning and scored on an Amherst error. That was the way it ended, the Redmen 6, the Lord Jeffs 1.

Amherst College had come into the game with a 6-1 slate, but the Jeffs were no match for the red-hot Redmen who have been playing well both offensively and defensively.

This weekend, UMass travels to Maine for a two-game set with the Yankee Conference Black Bears who hold a Conference mark of 1-2.

When asked about the series Coach Berquist commented, "Maine will be tough. They have always been well- prepared and usually play good baseball."

It looks as if the Redmen have quite a pair of games in store for them; two important games they'd love to sweep.

N.E. Stick Title On Line

By HOWIE BLOOM

This afternoon on the field behind Boyden at 3 o'clock, the UMass lacrosse team faces off against Brown University in a battle between the top two teams in New England. Brown, the number one ranked team in the area, is also the number ten team in the country, and their record shows why they are so highly regarded.

The Bruins, to date, have won six games, lost two with their only losses coming at the hands of Maryland (9-6), the top ranked team in the nation; and Johns Hopkins (11-4), the number two team in the nation. Brown has defeated Adelphia (5-3), a team that beat the Redmen in their first game of the year, Towson State (9-8), Baltimore (11-4), Yale (8-5), C.W. Post (11-5), Dartmouth (10-7), and Harvard (13-7). Yale and Harvard are the only two schools the teams have in common, with the Gorillas defeating both opponents, too.

Brown University boasts a number of outstanding players, with the cream of the crop being starting attackman Stephen Russo (#9). Russo is a former teammate of John Nagle. He's the pivotal point of the Bruin attack, with the job of setting up the offense. With 29 points so far this season, Russo is the visitor's leading scorer.

The remaining two starting attackmen for Brown are John Pearson (#2) who took All-American Bob Scalise' place in the lineup this season, and Joe Dougherty (#15), who is trying to bounce back from an injury which sidelined him all of last season. Doherty broke very Brown scoring record his freshman year, but has not regained his form this year.

The starting midfield for the Bruins will feature Jeff Wagner (#28), the team's face-off man. Wagner will be facing off against Hirsch Seidman, his high school teammate. Also on the line is Dave White (#16), the team's second leading scorer with 13 goals and 4 assists. The primary ballhandler on the first midfield is Paul Harper (#21). Brown runs two, occasionally three midfields, as does UMass.

The defense for the visitors is anchored by two outstanding players, Joe DeDonato (#32), and Bill Kavan (#34), both All-Ivy last year, and co-captains this year. The third defenseman is Tim Robinson (#31).

In goal for the Bruins will be Doug Spiro, who played in last year's 8-4 thrashing of the Redmen in Providence. Spiro has been characterized as a good, but inconsistent goaltender.

Starting for the Redmen will be team high scorer Charlie Hardy, Paul Ritch, and John Nagle, all on attack. The first midfield will be manned by Dwight Blomquist, Seidman, and tri-captain Dana Stone. On defense will be steady Kevin Carpenter and two outstanding freshman, Bill Blaustein and John McCarthy. In goal will be All-American and North-South game candidate Bruce Crawford, a returnee from last year's match, too.

Brown is going to have it hands full this afternoon, as UMass features a very balanced attack which will make it very difficult to defend against the Redmen. The only question mark remains the confidence of the players. The ability is certainly there. If the Gorillas play like they have as of late, they'll be the number one ranked team in New England come about 5:15 this afternoon.

WMUA Sports Special

Sports Director Marty Kelley will present a WMUA sports special today when the UMass lacrosse team meets Brown University in the New England lacrosse title game.

Kelley has arranged special features with JV Coach Russ Kidd, Varsity Assistant Roger Farrar, and the attack. This will serve to explain the game and complement the play-by-play.

Air time is 2:50 p.m. with Kelley bringing you all the action on WMUA, 91.1 FM.

Trustee Meeting Ends In Shouting Match

By DON BISHOP

The Howard Johnson Building in Boston was the scene yesterday for a raucus and unproductive "special session" of Trustees. After essentially turning into a shouting match between students from UMass-Boston and Amherst campuses, the Trustees present and UMass President Robert Wood, the Board meeting abruptly ended at 4:30 p.m. with the scheduling of another meeting for May 11.

About 600 people confronted the Board, mostly students from the UMass-Boston, often chanting and yelling at those Board members present. The UMass-Amherst campus was represented by about 50 individuals: from the VVAW, the Center for Social Change and representatives from ROTC, who presented a petition in favor of allowing ROTC to stay on this campus. A petition against ROTC was also presented.

The shouting match developed over the question of whether the Board should take a "straw vote" in support of student and faculty demands to end the ROTC program in Amherst, military recruitment on the Boston campus, and defense related research on both campuses, and as to whether the next Board meeting should be scheduled before the May 11 date tentatively arrived at. While the anti-war groups from both campuses demanded that the Trustees officially or unofficially commit themselves one way or another to the three demands, and that the Board schedule their next meeting for the early part of next week, the Board refused to do this for a number of reasons.

It was clear at the beginning of the meeting that the majority of individuals there, especially those from the UMass-Boston campus, were expecting that the Board would make some resolution on the issues relating to the war and the University, increasingly expressed in the last week.

That no votes or legally binding decisions could be made by the Board was pointed out at the start of the meeting by Trustee Shaler, who chaired the meeting, because yesterday was a "special session of the Board and not a regular meeting."

This fact proved to be a major point of contention during yesterday's session, due to the fact that many students had come to the meeting feeling that the Trustees would act on the issues of ROTC military recruitment, and defense spending.

The reason given by the Board for the cancelling of the regular meeting of the Board, was the death of famed educator and former Chairman of the UMass Trustees: Frank L. Boyden. Therefore, yesterday's gathering was officially considered a special session of the Board, which would not vote on any of the issues presented them, or make any decision binding on the Board.

The session had largely been arranged by President Wood, to allow the Board to hear student opinion on the issues of ROTC military recruiment and defense related research. The majority of students and faculty there were demanding action on these issues immediately, to deal with what a number of students referred to as an emergency situation in regard to these issues, on both campuses.

Throughout the course of the two and a half hour meeting, various opinions were expressed from the floor, from students, faculty, and veterans: on the war, the Trustees and the University's relationship to the war, and the three specific issues mentioned above.

But throughout the course of the whole meeting, debate always came back to the demand that the Trustees take some form of action on the three issues. Originally people were demanding that they take some kind of binding action on the three demands, but finally the demand became that the Board make some commitment to these issues through the unofficial "straw vote."

It was charged by some students, that the Board was using the death of Dr. Boyden as a reason for not dealing with the issues yesterday, but this was repudiated by the Board. Four of the Board members: Shaler, Gordon, Troy, and Abrams did address themselves personally to the three issues, for the most part expressing support for the demands. The rest of those members in attendance refused to express their own personal views, a fact that irritated the vast majority of the audience. The demand was repeatedly heard, for all members of the Board to express their views.

The results of a referendum held Tuesday on the UMass-Boston campus were announced at the beginning of the meeting. The vote of about2,000 Boston students was three to one against having military recruiters, ROTC, and defense related research on the Boston campus.

The fact that no referendum results could be announced on these questions for this campus proved to be a stumbling block. In general, the Boston students were unaware of the situation with ROTC on this campus, as Amherst students were unaware about the recruitment situation in Boston.

While it appeared that there was a certain solidarity between both campuses on the three issues, no united front could be presented because of the lack of coordination between the two campuses.

Certain of the Trustees stated that they had to wait to hear from the Amherst campus through some sort of a referendum on these issues, before they could sit down and decide their position as a Board. These Trustees also made clear that they would have to hear from the various other constituent bodies on both campuses, including faculty before any final decisions could be made.

Though some people from the audience claimed that the UMass-Boston referendum was a mandate from the students and, therefore, the Trustees should act immediately, this was never done.

About six or seven faculty members from the two campuses spoke on the three issues, expressing support with the demand of the majority of students, while claiming to represent a larger body of support from the general faculty. Some also stated their

Nixon: Bombing Negotiations Withdrawals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Here at a glance is what President Nixon said Wednesday night in a speech on the Vietnam war:

Negotiations-The United States will return to the negotiating table in Paris Thursday "to get on with the constructive business of making peace." The first order of business will be to get the enemy to halt its invasion of South Vietnam and to return American prisoners of war.

Troop Withdrawals-American troops will continue to be withdrawn from South Vietnam at the rate of 20,000 more over the next two months. this will bring the troop level down to 49,000 by July 1.

Bombing-Air and naval attacks on military installations in North Vietnam will continue until North Vietnamese halt their offensive against the South.

Muskie To Quit?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edmund S. Muskie Wednesday cancelled a campaign trip to Ohio and was reported ready to withdraw from the Democratic presidential race.

But Muskie's press secretary, Richard Stewart, flatly contradicted reports by the Mutual Broadcasting System that the Maine senator had decided to get out.

"I categorically deny any statements that he's decided to withdraw," Stewart said.

Muskie himself met with top aides at his home in suburban Washington, and his campaign headquarters said he was "evaluating the political situation" and would hold a news conference Thursday at 10 a.m.

Muskie said Tuesday night, after his defeat in the Massachusetts and Pennsylvania primaries, that he intends to stay in the race for the Democratic nomination.

Top aides have advised him to withdraw from future primary races, where polls show him doing poorly, but stay in the race for the nomination. Under this strategy, he could concentrate on rounding up delegates in nonprimary states, and later could offer himself to the party convention as a compromise candidate.

Muskie had been scheduled to speak Wednesday night in Toledo, Ohio, and the state's governor, John J. Gilligan, was already on the way there to introduce him when word came that the trip was cancelled.

A statement from Muskie's campaign headquarters in Washington issued shortly before 6 p.m. said, "He has been consulting with his family, with friends and his supporters throughout the day. And he will continue to do so throughout the evening."

Some of those supporters in Congress, asked about the report, said they hadn't heard Muskie would get out. Some said they thought it more likely he would merely withdraw from some or all of the remaining primaries, but remain in the race for the nomination.

The Mutual report quoted aides to Muskie as saying he would continue to consult with advisers and family to consider the situation, but had already decided to get completely out of the race.

Reports that Muskie would withdraw have surfaced with increasing frequency since the one-time frontrunner for the nomination finished fourth in the April 4 Wisconsin primary.

Muskie's office has continued to deny the reports and Muskie himself has repeated that he intends to press his campaign all the way to the Miami Beach convention in July.

Should Muskie withdraw from campaigning for the Ohio primary it would leave just three Democratic candidates making an all-out effort there: Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota; Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey of Minnesota and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

Muskie's campaign is reported to be at least $1 million in debt. The staff has been trimmed and the salaries cut on more than one occasion in recent months as contributions dried up.

Muskie was beaten by Sen. George McGovern in Massachusetts and by Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey in Pennsylvania. Those setbacks followed earlier losses in Florida and Washington and a lukewarm victory in his own backyard state of New Hampshire.

Dr. Rodney Lectures On Sino-African Relations

By ROBERT TOUAKE

The W. E. Dubois Conference Series recently continued its series of discussions on China And The African World with Dr. Walter Rodney, visiting lecturer at the University of Michigan in African history.

Dr. Rodney discussed "the manner in which Africa has reacted to China in post World War II and the present." He explained that African suspicions toward China were founded in European invention. "Europeans defined who was White, African or Chinese and invented the vices and virtues of each race," commented Dr. Rodney. The Chinese, Africans and in general the darker races received more vices than virtues. Myths, such as the inability to distinguish Chinese apart from one another appeared.

Dr. Rodney stressed "the manner groups view each other is determined by the oppressor." Myths formulated by the Africans in regards to the Chinese were "directly taken lock, stock and barrel from Europeans," said Dr. Rodney.

"Apart from the racial perspective, the ideological variant" influenced African sentiments toward China explained Dr. Rodney. The 1948 revolution marked a step away from capitalism and the western world on the part of China. The cold war in the middle 1950's caused a greater division between China and the west. Dr. Rodney explained the purpose of the cold war was to prevent the "uncommitted nations from taking a step towards China or the Soviet Union."

As the cold war lessened in the last decade, the United States and Russia moved toward peaceful coexitence. China alone refused to hold hands with capitalism and the split between herself and the west widened. Dr. Rodney explained that Africans on the verge of freedom from European colonialism saw China as a threat. Africans heeded the warnings of the Europeans, not changing one master for another

Dr. Rodney stressed certain factors are weakening the traditional seperation between African and China. Africans reevaluated the attitudes Europeans held toward them and realized it was necessary for them to refashion their own image. As Africans did this, the vision of China given them by the Europeans was also mistaken. A suspicion of Europeans resulted and a new perspective on China was developed.

Dr. Rodney said the new African perspective on China can be seen from the visits to China by Africans. Even pro European Africans, returning from China have been impressed with what Chinese society has achieved in its movements away from capitalism and the western world.

Dr. Rodney stressed, "observing the Chinese at work in their own environment" has also resulted in lessening the distance between Africa and China. He said Chinese sponsored projects, unlike European sponsored ones, are done for the benefit of African people. He explained Chinese build projects in cooperation with Africans and also train Africans for positions in a minimal amount of time.

On a political level Dr. Rodney explained that in the minds of progressive Africans, China surpasses western countries including the Soviet Union. Unlike western countries China does not adopt economic or cultural relations with neo-colonialist countries. Dr. Rodney said the western aid given Nigeria in the war with Biafra was a prime example of western backing of neo-colonialism.

Students Peacefully Protest Raytheon's Military Products

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An estimated 75 persons were arrested Wednesday afternoon after allegedly blocking the entrance drive to the executive offices of The Raytheon Co. in Lexington, Mass., in an antiwar protest.

Also, a group of 40 black students Wednesday afternoon left Massachusetts Hall at Harvard University Wednesday afternoon after occupying it for one week in a protest over Conditions in Angola.

Harvard officials in a statement late Wednesday said the occupation of Massachusetts Hall ended at 2:45 p.m. It added:

"The university is pleased that the people inside the building decided to comply with the court order, and that the occupation ended peacefully. Except for the window used to enter the building last Thursday, the building is undamaged and in good order."

The group at Lexington estimated at 300 to 700 includes students from Brandeis University, Harvard, Tufts University and Boston University were protesting Raytheon's military production.

As the group chanted "U.S. out of southeast Asia", and "Stop the war production", the group of about 75 moved onto the access road and reclined.

The demonstrators were taken from the roadway to two school buses by State Police, and were taken to be booked. Lexington police said they were charged with trespass and disorderly conduct.

A Raytheon spokesman said the protest was orderly and peaceful.

At Harvard Yard, an estimated 1,000 persons at the rally to support the black takeover of the administration building saw the black students leave the building with clinched fists upraised.

The demonstrators surged out of Harvard Yard into Harvard Square, still chanting, "Harvard out of Gulf", stopped briefly at a Gulf gasoline service station, then returned to Harvard Yard where they continued clapping and chanting.

He said the protesters had apparently used a vacuum cleaner and dust mop to tidy up the building, and had brought out their trash earlier.

The Harvard action centered on demands that Harvard sell its $19 million in Gulf Oil Corp. stock, contending that Gulf helps support a repressive Portuguese regime in the African nation of Angola.

Some of the students said they had begun a hunger strike and would continue it after they quit the building.

Blacks Picket Amherst

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

An estimated 60 black students from Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke College set up a picket line around the administration building at Amherst College shortly after noon Wednesday.

The group said they were demonstrating in sympathy with the 40 black students who had occupied Massachusetts Hall at Harvard University since Thursday to protest Harvard's $19 million holdings in Gulf Oil stock.

The Amherst group, using a loud speaker system, contended Amherst also had Gulf Oil holdings.

It is going to be another one of those days like we've been having this week. Sunny and cool, around 60 during the day, but, boy, when that sun goes down, is it ever going to get cold.

Frost warnings are in effect again tonight, since the temperature is expected to be around 30. We go on searching for that glorious warm, summery weather. (Our bias in weather preference may be showing through, but then again, isn't all news at least a little subjective?)

CIC Gets 1400 Anti-War Signatures

By MARILOU BARSAM

The members of the C.I.C., (Community Involvement Committee) met last night to discuss their accomplished business of the last week.

The C.I.C. volunteers succeeded in obtaining approximately 1400 signatures from valley voters for an anti-war petition which was sent to Senator Brooke and Representative Conte.

This week the C.I.C. members met with the Amherst Board of Selectmen. At this meeting the selectmen voted to adhere to an anti-war petition the members of the C.I.C. presented. The petition calls for immediate de-escalation of bombing and withdrawal from Vietnam.

Telegrams from the C.I.C. quoting the anti-war sentiments of the selectmen will be sent to Brooke, Laird, Kennedy, Conte and President Nixon.

The C.I.C. members discussed specific wording of the telegrams last night.

The group also discussed immediate actions to be tackled for the next three weeks.

The C.I.C. members wish primarily to politically educate themselves and in turn educate the voting populace of the valley area. They not only wish to inform the voter of the war but also other specific political spheres which link the voter to the war, such as graduated taxes.

The C.I.C. is seeking work coalition with the Amherst League of Women Voters, Valley Peace Center, (a volunteer political involvement group for the valley area) and private newspapers such as Spark.

The C.I.C. made tentative plans to hold a coffee house at a local Amherst church. The coffee house will be discussion type seminar on the war and related political issues, for the voters of the valley area.

The C.I.C. urges people to attend their next meeting, which will be held tonight, 6:30 p.m., in the colonial lounge Specific plans for the coffee house and for future actions will be discussed.

Trustees Confronted In Boston

belief that the Trustees would ignore the majority opinion of faculty and students as they had done in the past when the issues of ROTC and military recruitment have come up.

Chancellors Bromery and Broderick also spoke, primarily to give their opinions as to when each campus could have a general consensus to give the Board as to the feelings of the two campuses on the issues.

Student Trustee Larry Ladd also addressed the large audience several times as did the student Trustee from the Boston campus. Ladd urged the group not to press the Board for a decision on Tuesday, in the generally hostile manner that it was being done, but instead wait until all opinions had been collected, and then present them to the next regular meeting of the Board.

When President Wood indicated that the next meeting was scheduled for May 25, there was a considerable uproar, and the remainder of the meeting was primarily spent haggling over the moving up of this date.

The majority of the students expressed opinions that the meeting should be scheduled for this Friday or next Monday to deal with the situation immediately.

President Wood and Trustee Gordon indicated the Board would not do this because they did not feel that referendum results from UMass-Amherst students and faculty and from UMass-Boston faculty could be determined by that time. Wood also stated that for a majority of Board members to be able to attend, there would have to be a two-week notice.

Debate on this re-scheduling of the next meeting continued for about 15 minutes, until the Trustees took a sudden vote, tentatively adopting May 11 as their next meeting date, and then quickly adjourning, leaving through a back door.

The crowd remained for some time afterward, not knowing how to proceed next. Most expressed obvious disgust at the inability of the Board to take action on the three demands in a manner they would have approved.

Student Attorney General Appointed

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The Student Senate appointed next year's Student Attorney General, Student Union Governing Board members, and a number of other committee members in a meeting shortened by a loss of quorum after approximately three hours last night.

In other action, the Senate agreed to look into possibilities of a University wide travel agency, passed calendars for academic years 1973 through 1976, and defeated a motion to give the Senate Treasurer and the Speaker of the Senate voting power on certain committees.

Bert Emmons was approved as Student Attorney General after considerable debate. Senator Bruce Bernstein claimed that Bill Spinn, a candidate for the job, had lost the nomination solely on the basis of a poor interview with the Attorney General Search Committee. After refusing to send the nomination back for further consideration, the Senate approved the Emmons nomination.

Other nominations, all approved, were: Patty Asack and John Stevens to the Student Senate Executive Committee, Sheldon Katzman to Finance Committee, Tom Borkowski to Service Committee, Dennis Perry and Neil Kerstein to Governmental Affairs, Paul Doran and Greg Acone to Women's Committee, and 16 appointments to the SUG Board.

The possibilities of a University wide travel agency were discussed, with the Senate recommending that the investigation into the agency continue. The agency, a private enterprise, would be designed to give the students a cheap, reliable way to travel in the face of rising airline costs (special youth fares featured by many major airlines are in danger of being discontinued) and a way to beat frauds perpetrated on students taking charter flights. There would also be the advantage of making about $10 in the form of a kickback with every flight.

Academic calendars for the years 1973-1976 were also passed. The reason behind scheduling for four years now is that it will be possible to plan events for the Campus Center and certain sports organizations well ahead under the plan, with the Campus Center getting some increased revenue from the move. The new scheduling also allows for a much longer intercession period, lasting about 35 days. The calendars passed passed by a vote of 54-2.

The Senate defeated a motion to expand the powers of the Speaker and the Treasurer, giving them votes on many of the Senate's committees. Debate against the measure pointed to the great amount of influence the officers already have, and that their votes could sway the committees on a lot of important issues.

Other business was to be considered at the meeting, but with about an hour's business left the Senate lost its necessary 50% of the voting body, and the meeting was adjourned for the lack of quorum.

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Wednesday night he is withdrawing another 20,000 American troops from Vietnam by July 1. But he vowed to continue U.S. air and naval attacks on North Vietnam until it ends its "naked and unprovoked...invasion" of the South.

"We will not be defeated," Nixon declared in a nationally broadcast report to the nation, "and we will never surrender our friends to Communist aggression."

The chief executive said the United States is returning to the Paris Peace Talks Thursday with the aim of halting the month-old invasion and "with the firm expectation that productive talks leading to rapid progress will follow through all available channels."

The President spoke shortly after dispatches from Saigon told of a renewed North Vietnamese drive againts the city of Quang Tri south of the demilitarized zone, and while the fate of much of the Central Highlands of South Vietnam remained uncertain under heavy offensive pressure.

As he announced over radio and television that U.S. troop levels would be cut in the next two months to 49,000-or 500,000 below the level when he took office three years ago-Nixon solicited public support for his determination to "be steadfast...not falter."

He said:

"The Communists have failed...Their one remaining hope is to win in the Congress of the United States, and among the people of the United States the victory they cannot win among the people of South Vietnam or on the battlefield in South Vietnam."

The speech, delivered in stern tones as he sat behind his desk in his Oval Office, was his first report to the American people on the war since the enemy thrust led him to renew bombing of North Vietnam, including air attacks near Hanoi and Haiphong.

Shortly before Nixon's address, his chief foreign-affairs adviser, Henry Kissinger, breifed newsmen at the White House and, while declining to talk about specific private negotiating, said "Notable diplomatic actions are going on..."

He said the chief Communist negotiator, Le Duc Tho, is returning to Paris and added, "He doesn't return for trivial reasons."

Kissinger while reluctant to talk about the U.S. negotiating posture, said the administration feels North Vietnamese troops "should be withdrawn back across the DMZ," and that the Communists should abide by the 1968 agreement which led to cessation of U.S. bombing of the North.

According to U.S. officials, the understanding called for North Vietnam to respect the demilitarized zone and not shell or rocket major South Vietnamese population areas. But Hanoi never has acknowledged subscribing to such an agreement.

"The gut issues are clearly understood" by the Communist negotiators in Paris, Kissinger said, and "we should be able to learn very rapidly whether progress can be made."

While Nixon said that South Vietnam still needs air and sea support, he added that his Vietnamization program of training and equipping the Saigon government's army "has proved itself sufficiently that we can continue our program of withdrawing American forces...

"The South Vietnamese are fighting courageously and well in their self defense and...have made great progress and are now bearing the brunt of the battle..."

Nixon's three decisions-continued withdrawal, a return to the Paris peace talks, and continued air and naval attacks on North Vietnamese military targets-could have a major impact on the domestic election-year political scene as well as on international relations.

In his prepared address, Nixon did not renew his previous criticism of the Soviet Union for supplying Hanoi with modern weapons used in the current offensive-a diplomatic decision that might have resulted from Kissinger's just-concluded secret mission to Moscow.

And while Nixon did not spell out any specific new private peace initiatives, his statement that the United States expects productive talks leading to rapid progress "through all available channels" was viewed as an indication that some secret maneuvering could be underway.

Nixon said Ambassador William C. Porter was going back into the Paris talks Tuesday "with one very specific purpose in mind."

"We are not resuming the Paris talks simply in order to hear more enemy propaganda and bombast from the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegates," he said, "but to get on with the constructive business of making peace."

The first order of business, the chief executive continued, "will be to get the enemy to halt his invasion of South Vietnam, and to return the American prisoners of war."

He said he is flatly rejecting the proposal that the United States stop the bombing of North Vietnam as a condition for returning to the negotiating table.

"They sold that package to the United States once before," the President said in reference to a 1968 agreement that led then President Lyndon B. Johnson to suspend bombing raids on North Vietnam. "We are not going to buy it again in 1972."

In Brief...

Peace Talks To Resume Thursday

PARIS (AP)-The United States will go back to the Vietnam peace table Thursday presumably because of a Communist pledge of parallel secret talks.

Information indicated Wednesday that a deal for secret talks apparently enabled the United States to swallow its previous statements it would not return to the semipublic sessions while the enemy offensive in South Vietnam was in progress.

Salinger Names Top Two Contenders

CINCINNATI (AP)-Former presidential press secretary Pierre Salinger says Sens. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota and George McGovern of South Dakota will be the final contenders fighting for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Bobby Baker Appeals For Release

WASHINGTON (AP) -Robert G. "Bobby" Baker and Martin Sweig, who became snared in their own carefully woven webs of political power, have appealed for release from prison.

Winning Candidates Lose Financially

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sens. George McGovern and Hubert H. Humphrey had a combined campaign debt of nearly $1 million going into the Massachusetts and Pennsylvania Democratic presidential primaries. But two other leading rivals for the party's nomination, Sens. Henry M. Jackson and Edmund S. Muskie, were solidly in the black.

Apollo Almost Here

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Apollo 16's astronauts said as they hurtled back toward earth today that it would be premature to specualte on what lunar secrets their moon rocks will unlock.

"It ain't good science," commander John W. Young said. "We have to wait until we get back to the laboratory to find out what we've got."

Charles M. Duke, Jr., who explored the Descartes mountain plateau with Young, said "Anything we would say would be pure speculation at this stage."

The exchange came during a 20-minute conversation in which capsule communicator Dr. Tony England, a scientist-astronaut, relayed questions from geologists.

England told them that during a news conference from space later today reporters were expected to press them to draw some conclusions about the rocks and samples they collected during 71 hours on the moon.

In the South Pacific, where the carrier Ticonderoga waits to recover the astronauts, the weather forecast for the 2:44 p.m. EST splashdown time Thursday called for unlimited visibility except for a few thunderheads, seas of 1 to 3 feet, light winds and a temperature of 84 degrees.

N.Viets Strike Quang Tri

SAIGON (AP) — North Vietnamese forces launched attack on South Vietnam's northernmost provincial capital of Quang Tri from three directions early Thursday, moving in with tanks and heavy weapons under leaden skies that limited U.S. air support.

U.S. 7th Fleet destroyers were called in to aid the South Vietnamese from offshore.

Field reports said the North Vietnamese attacked from the northwest, west and southwest. Quang Tri, 19 miles south of the demilitarized zone that separates the two Vietnams, was one of the earliest targets of the 29-day-old enemy offensive.

In the central highlands, the enemy drive slowed Wednesday. South Korean troops to the east cleared the enemy from a vital pass, opening a possible convoy route to the imperiled highland cities.

But another major threat developed in the coastal highlands behind the South Koreans. North Vietnamese swarmed out of the hills into coastal Binh Dinh Province. They seized one base, pushed into three populous districts and opened up with rocket and mortar fire on the district town of Bong Son. It appeared that the long-awaited assault on the district headquarters had begun.

At the Pentagon in Washington:

—Sources said the United States is preparing to send 36 more F4 fighter-bombers to Southeast Asia to strengthen the already heavy U.S. air power massed against the North Vietnamese offensive.

—Spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said South Vietnamese forces have "acquitted themselves very well" so far in the campaign.

In past offensives, the enemy goal has been to seize the highlands and Binh Dinh Province to sever South Vietnam at its waist. The objective in this spring offensive seems to be the same.

A Korean spokesman and John Paul Vann, the senior U.S. adviser in the highlands, announced that An Khe Pass had been cleared aft[illegible]than two weeks of sharp fi[illegible]

[illegible]ated Press correspondent Peter Arnett reported from Qui Nhon that the highway is still closed by destroyed culverts and damage to the roadway.

Unless the North Vietnamese return, repair work can be rushed so that the convoys can roll again. The highway runs from Qui Nhon to Pleiku, one of the two major cities in the highlands threatened by the enemy offensive.

Moving behind armored personnel carriers, a company of Korean infantrymen reached the top of An Khe Pass, met no opposition, and a short time later returned to the main line.

The situation appeared serious in coastal Binh Dinh Province. Landing Zone Delta, a government base on Highway 1, was given up under heavy attack Wednesday afternoon.

Arnett reported that government forces were carrying out no offensive patrols despite the rising peril.

Enemy forces seized bridges on the coastal highway, he said, by merely scattering the militiamen assigned to defend them.

More than 75 miles to the west of Binh Dinh Province in the highlands, it appeared that both sides were regrouping after tank-led North Vietnamese forces thrust to within 21 miles of Kontum, another major objective.

The South Vietnamese command admitted for the first time that most of the bases in the area have been abandoned.

The enemy threat to the provincial capital of Kontum still was considered grave. It was believed that the North Vietnamese might be positioned to launch a new drive toward the city in three or four days.

B52 bombers made 75 strikes in South Vietnam, more than half of them against enemy positions in the highlands.

Vann predicted that the "enemy tide will come rolling in" on Kontum in one or two days and casualties will be high on both sides.

News Analysis

Peace Talks Are Reversal In Strategy

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon's resumption of the Paris peace talks is an abrupt turnabout from the administraton's stand against negotiating with Hanoi while North Vietnam is mounting an all-out drive in the South.

Administration sources suggested that Nixon's policy reversal stems from several factors including:

—Presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger's just-concluded secret talks in Moscow with Soviet leaders, who have been calling for a U.S. return to the conference table.

—Propaganda points scored by the Vietnamese Communists, who have been blaming the United States for the sterility of the Paris proceedings since Nixon suspended them March 23.

The State Department on-the-record reason for Nixon's order to U.S. ambassador William J. Porter to return to the Paris parley is:

"The other side had been pressing very hard over the last few days for a resumption...it was the judgement that it could be useful to explore what lay behind their insistence."

This is a sharp switch from what administration spokesmen had been saying starting with the March 23 announcement of the U.S. suspension of the Paris meetings. Nixon said the Reds were using the parley for propaganda rather than serious negotiations.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee April 18 that it would be the "height of irresponsibility" to negotiate for peace with the North Vietnamese while their invasion of South Vietnam is under way.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers also testified on April 17, that the United States is not prepared to resume the Paris negotiations.

On April 20, a State Department spokesman reaffirmed the position.

Before the Communist military drive, Porter and other U.S. officials had said the United States would resume the Paris talks on a sign from the enemy that it intends to enter into serious discussion, or whenever a resumption of the parley would appear to be useful.

U.S. officials said Wednesday they have no signal of Hanoi intent to get into serious discussions.

As to whether the Paris meeting Thursday will be useful, U.S. diplomats privately left that as a matter of definition. They expected the allies to press for a halt to the invasion and the Communists to demand an end to U.S. bombing.

Neither on the record nor off are administration spokesmen predicting that the new round at Paris will produce a peace deal in the near future.

Candidates Review Victories

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. George S. McGovern, propelled by a Massachusetts landslide, and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, contending he had won "a decisive battle" in Pennsylvania for the Democratic center, carried the marathon presidential campaign to Ohio Wednesday.

Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama said his second-place finish in Pennsylvania indicated he has "a better chance to be the nominee than ever before."

Wallace confronts Humphrey next Tuesday in the Indiana primary, while the Minnesota senator, McGovern, Muskie and Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington compete at the same time for Ohio's 153 delegate votes.

McGovern emerged from Massachusetts with a clear majority, 52 per cent of the vote in a 120name primary, and with 102 first-ballot nominating votes at the Democratic National Convention.

The South Dakota senator picked up a surprise bonus in Pennsylvania, where he ran fourth in the presidential preference vote but nontheless gained 37 more convention delegates.

Humphrey won the Pennsylvania primary with 35 per cent of the vote, and led the others in the separate delegate competition, winning 57.

Wallace won two Pennsylvania delegates, and 12 were uncommitted to any candidate.

He emerged with a total of 234 1/2 delegates, sweeping past Muskie, who wound up with 128 1/2. Humphrey's delegate count after the Tuesday balloting was 81. Wallace had 77.

President Nixon walked away with the Republican preference vote in Massachusetts, gaining 82 per cent over two GOP congressmen. One of them, Rep. Paul N. McCloskey Jr. of California, had asked for GOP ballots to protest Nixon's renewal of the bombing of North Vietnam. He was getting 14 per cent.

Hanoi To Destroy, Not Capture, An Loc

LAI KHE, Vietnam (AP)-North Vietnamese forces have given up trying to capture key embattled An Loc and now are destroying it with artillery barrages of up to 2,000 rounds a day, the commander of the northwest front said Wednesday.

Lt. Gen. Nguyen Van Minh learned of Hanoi's "capture or destroy" order from prisoners of war, he told a reporter.

South Vietnamese also intercepted a message to the Communist command explaining the enemy's failure to take the province capital 60 miles north of Saigon on Highway 13.

"It apologized for their lack of accomplishment and blamed the North Vietnamese tanks for racing too far ahead of their infantry," Minh disclosed. "So there was no one to protect their tanks when they ran into my troops equipped with anti-tank rockets."

Minh added that he had offered the piaster equivalent of $500 to each of his soldiers who knocked out a tank.

"It really improved morale," he sid. "My men went hunting for tanks. So far they have destroyed 45 or 50. Soon I will be very poor. Maybe I will even have to sell my stereo to pay them."

The province captial has been under siege 20 days. Minh claimed the most critical phase is over, but he was clearly worried by the sustained North Vietnamese shelling and the diversion of half his air support to Kontum Province in the central highlands.

"My men have held An Loc," he said. "They are not worried about the enemy tanks or infantry, but they are concerned by the heavy shelling. In the last three days we have evacuated 150 wounded.

"Many of my air assets have been diverted to the fighting in Kontum. I need more B52 strikes, more helicopters, more fighters. I don't need more troops because I wouldn't have the air power to support them."

Minh said the Communist command initially committed three divisions to its campaign in Binh Long Province of which An Loc is the capital.

"We were surprised at the amount of ammunition they had, the large number of tanks and the speed with which they moved," Minh conceded. "They took Loc Minh because we were not prepared.

"But I poured reinforcements into An Loc and they made a mistake by sending their tanks too far ahead."

The siege of An Loc began April 6. The North Vietnamese launched tank-led human wave assaults April 15 and again on April 17 but were repelled.

"They were ordered to capture An Loc before April 20," said Minh. "They failed, so now they are trying to destroy the town with shelling."

Half of An Loc is in ruins and its defenders still are encircled by thousands of enemy troops. Medical evacuation and supply helicopters run a gauntlet of antiaircraft fire.

Minh is hoping the North Vietnamese gunners run out of ammunition before the monsoon rains begin in two or three weeks. And the North Vietnamese are waiting for rain to curtail Minh's air support.

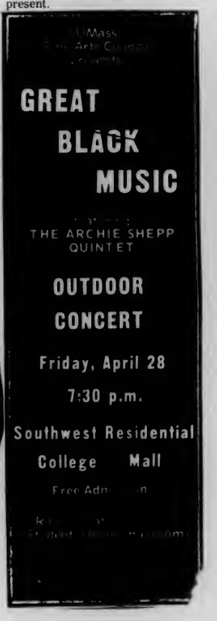
Kleindienst Recalled

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Judiciary Committee voted today to recall Acting Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst Thursday morning to take further testimony from him in its investigation of his nomination to head the Justice Department.

Chairman James. O. Eastman, D-Miss., said the panel also decided to vote at 5 p.m. Thursday on whether to reaffirm its previous endorsement of Kleindienst.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., had pressed for extension of the Kleindienst hearings. They began March 2.

The committee extended an earlier hearing deadline by one day as it agreed to send the full Senate its recommendation on the nomination by late Thursday.



At the same time, Republican committee members with some Democratic help beat back attempts by liberals to further extend the hearings and call still more witnesses, including presidential aide Peter M. Flanigan.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said he still will ask the full Senate to send the nomination back to the committee for expanded hearings.

Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W. Va., the Democratic whip, said he is particularly interested in what Kleindienst would say about earlier testimony that he did not recall talking to Flanigan about settlement of the anti-trust suit against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp.

In a letter to committee chairman Sen. James O. Eastman, D-Miss., earlier this week, Flanigan said he had delivered a financial report on the proposed settlement to former Asst. Atty. Gen. Richard W. McLaren while Kleindienst was present.

RAND: The Brains Behind The Bombs

By LIBERATION News Service

Who studies thermonuclear war, weather forecasting in Southeast Asia, student activism in Latin American and rent control in New York City? Who has a head office in sunny Santa Monica, California and is funded by the U.S. government?

If those clues don't help, it's not surprising, for the RAND Corporation—the think tank of the think tanks—has never been keen on publicity. An August, 1966 Time Magazine statement sums it up pretty well: "Of all the behind the scenes forces that have molded America's military muscle, none have been more influential—and few more mysterious—than California's RAND Corp...."

Formed to "further and promote scientific, educational, and charitable purposes, all for the public welfare and security of the United States of America," the RAND Corp, is the brains behind a good deal of government policy and action throughout the world. To date, its most prominent credentials in that department are the infamous Pentagon Papers outlining the history of U.S. involvement in Vietnam which former RAND employee Daniel Ellsberg revealed in the spring of 1971.

RAND got its start in 1944 when Gen. H.H. (Hap) Arnold, head of what was then the Army Air Corps, suggested that the Air Corps hang on to its civilian brainpower "to assist in avoiding future national peril and in winning the next war." But his real reasons went deeper than that as the RAND records show. As the missile age dawned, the Air Corps fought for control of strategic missilery, and along with that an identity separate from the Army and other services.

With the help of Douglas Aircraft Company (now McDonnell-Douglas) "Project RAND" (Research and Development) was set up at the Douglas plant in Snata Monica to develop the defense schemes that would require Arnold's vision of a separate Air Force. Arnold signed a letter contract with Douglas to organize RAND without taking bids and without Congressional approval.

Other aircraft companies became involved with the project and later, because the thinkers wanted more independence, a nonprofit corporation was created with the help of the Ford Foundation. The new corporation's first president? Douglas official and top Defense Department consultant, Franklin R. Collbohm.

RAND employees got down to brass tacks and came up with RAND's first report in 1946. The document presented a carefully reasoned study of the feasibility of using spaceships in weather forecasting and military reconnaissance. Other early studies considered the use of rocket engines for strategic weapons, game theory as it applied to warfare, new concepts of air defense, new aircraft design, and the whole idea of nuclear weapons.

The RAND studies weren't relegated to the back of a dusty file cabinet either. One of the "air concepts" studied led to in-flight refueling procedures and another study led to the widespread use of titanium in the aircraft industry (indicentally creating a whole new metallurigical industry).

In the fities Cold War ear, RAND studied the economics of overseas bases and Russian nuclear capcity. From there they developed the whole new set of concepts of "first strike vulnerability" and "second strike capability" which led to the Air Force's heavy reliance on Inter-Continental Ballistic Missile systems. With the advent of Kennedy in the sixties, "RAND came into its own. The new administration had to devise a new defense strategy to replace the all-out, massive retaliation strategy inherited from the Eisenhower administration.

But RAND got into new kinds of war making on its own too, with the encouragement of RAND president Collbohm (who felt that the corp. was strong on thermonuclear war but weak on guerrilla war). Amrom Katz, a RAND employee who went to Vietnam early in the sixties, came back "hooked" as he puts it. From then on he devoted his time to figuring out how the U.S. might use its tactical air support more effectively against the Vietnamese. Katz's new-found interests soon enticed many at RAND and since the mid-sixties many studies have appeared on such topics as an "Analytic Model of Border Control" and "South Vietnam's Development Prospects in a Postwar Era." (Ellsberg worked for RAND in South Vietnam on the "pacification" program from 1965-67.)

RAND supplied the Air Force with studies of "monsoonal influences on wind, rain and clouds throughout Southeast Asia" where its bombers depend on good weather to be able to drop their millions of tons of bombs. And as employees of the Pentagon, RAND people have conducted some 2400 intensive interviews with NLF prisoners which have, according to a RAND report, "provided U.S. policy makers with the most significant body of detailed information available on Viet Cong motivations and attitudes."

RAND's fingers are in more than one pie too. The think tank has also assisted the Pentagon and the Agency for International Development (AID) in their relations with Latin America. RAND's contribution has included studies on a variety of subjects such as population growth and why families decide to have more children, student activism, and the influence of the Catholic Church in that part of the world. And before Nelson Rockefeller took off in 1969 on his infamous trip to represent Nixon in Latin America, he was briefed by three RAND analysts.

About 76% of RAND's $28 million yearly budget is spent on military studies; the rest is spent to research urban housing, health care, education, city management and even Wall Street's chaotic paperwork problems. In 1968, Mayor John Lindsay brought RAND personnel into New York City to staff the RAND/New York Institute, where they began working on reforming rent control By 1971 RAND was spending about a fourth of its time on such domestic projects, and aims by 1975 to have half of the corporation's budget devoted to nondefense work.

Who is the average RAND employee and what is he like? According to Roger Levien, a bearded, middle-aged analyst for RAND/Washington, "We tend to be what you'd expect RAND people are fairly straight, normal, the kind turned out by universities between 1956 and 1960. You don't find irrational people here. Youth today rejects the controlled mind, but we have to have a commitment to reason, not emotion."

Selective Service Regulations Change

The Selective Service System in mid-March issued its last major group of Regulation changes and thus ended more than two years of almost constant reform in draft policies and registrant rights. The Regulations concern procedures for personal appearances and appeals, among other subjects. The issuance of the new Regulations removed the administrative hold on personal appearances and appeals which had been in effect since late 1971.

The Regulations set a 15-day time limit following the mailing of a Notice of Classification card in which a registrant must request a local board personal appearance or an appeal. When he demonstrates that his failure to respond within 15 days was due to reasons beyond his control, his local board may grant an extension of the 15-day period.

The new Regulations also require local and appeal boards to give a registrant at least 15 days notice of his scheduled personal appearance before his local or appeal board. Another change announced gives a registrant who is under a long postponement of induction the right to receive consideration from his local board for a reopening of his classification to hear claims for exemption, deferment, or conscientious objector status.

The new Regulations also allow a registrant to have up to three witnesses appear in his behalf at his local board personal appearance, require that a quorum of the members of the local board be present, entitle him to 15 minutes for his presentation, and state that his local board must furnish him with the reasons should he receive an adverse decision on his classification request.

A personal appearance before a quorum of his state appeal board and, when the vote of the state appeal board is less than unanimous, the Presidential appeal board, also are provided for by the new Regulations. These boards also must furnish the registrant with the reasons should he receive adverse decisions on his classification request. He is not allowed to have witnesses appear in his behalf before appeal boards.

JOE To Go Camping

A meeting will be held tomorrow night for all those who wish to participate in a camping trip with kids from the Westfield Detention Center. The only part of this plan that is set is the desire to get the kids out into the woods and away from the concrete walls.

To get involved in this project basically means spending a weekend with people. The exact dates for this extended field trip have not yet been set. This and the many logistical details involved in such an adventure needs to be planned out with individuals willing to take on the responsiblity of accomplishing the many tasks.

However, some preliminary ground work has been completed. Members of the outing club have been contacted to help in anyway they could with equipment and expertise. Still the essential ingredient is people. The aim of this project is to take as many kids out of the building as possble. Therefore an invitation is out to all interested campers to attend tomorrow's meeting.

Essentially the idea of a camping trip also matches the new volunteer philosophy of J.O.E. The theme generated by the new leadership is to develop projects that get kids out of the building. Therefore a plea is not only out to support this up-coming project but also to get student volunteers interested and familiar with J.O.E. for the fall semester.

The key factor is involvement and this is what will be the topic tonight. The first order of business will be the camping trip but there will also be general small group discussions on how people with different interests may be of help to kids next year. J.O.E. hopes to get into other areas of volunteer work involving kids. Examples of the types of work include volunteer foster care, court laison, administrative work and the general one-to-one work with youth. If you are interested J.O.E. requests you attend this end of the semester meeting.

Power Commission Chastized

Washington, D.C.–The National Wildlife Federation has requested that the Federal Power Commission stop delaying its compliance with the National Environmental Policy Act. In a motion filed with the Commission, the Federation asserted that "by delaying its compliance with the law the Commission is delaying power production for our country's needs. The record should be clear when the Commission is finally called to account that the Commission caused the delays in these applications and that it was urged by conservationists not to do so."

The controversy arises from the Commission's persistence in basing its decision to license power plants on the environmental assessment prepared by the applicant for the license. As pointed out by the Federation in an earlier petition, the applicant can scarcely be expected to produce an unbiased analysis of the impact of the facility he proposes to operate. The law requires the agency itself, before it decides, to prepare the analysis. The federation first made this claim on December 20, 1971 when it petitioned the Commission to change its rules. On January 19, 1972 the Second Circuit Court of Appeals drew the same conclusion and declared the Commission's procedures unlawful.

Despite these strong indicators that its procedures are unlawful, the Commission has continued to let the applicants do its job. The Federation has counted eighteen different proceedings opened since February 24, 1972. The real problem, notes the Federation, is that the Commission is building its own monster, for it will only have to go back later and conduct these same proceedings according to law. This will be costly to applicants and to taxpayers, and will cause delay in the ultimate production of power, delay which could be avoided now by complying with the law.

Major Changes In Selective Service Policies

(By New Selective Service Regulations, Published in the "Federal Register" on March 10, 1972.)

SUBJECT
1. Registrant's right to bring witnesses to his local board personal appearance
BEFORE
A registrant did not have the right to bring witnesses to his personal appearance.
NOW
A registrant is entitled to bring up to three witnesses to his personal appearance before a quorum of his local board. Further, the registrant is entitled to such time for his personal appearance as is reasonably necessary for a fair representation of his claim. Normally, 15 minutes is adequate for this purpose.

SUBJECT
2. Personal appearance before a state-level appeal board
BEFORE
A personal appearance before a state-level appeal board was not allowed.
NOW
A personal appearance before a quorum of a state-level appeal board is allowed upon written request of the registrant. The registrant will be entitled to such time for his personal appearance as is reasonably necessary for a fair representation of his claim. However, he does not have the right to bring witnesses.

SUBJECT
3. Personal appearance before the Presidential appeal board
BEFORE
A personal appearance before the Presidential appeal board was not allowed.
NOW
A personal appearance before a quorum of the Presidential appeal board is allowed upon written request of the registrant, if the vote of the state-level appeal board is not unanimous. The registrant is entitled to 15 minutes for his personal appearance and the board may, at its discretion, extend this time period. The registrant does not have the right to bring witnesses.

SUBJECT
4. Time limits for requesting personal appearances or appeals
BEFORE
A registrant had 30 days from the date on his initial Notice of Classification (SSS Form 110) in which to request a personal appearance before his local board, or an appeal. If he elected a personal appearance, there was no requirement that the local board notify him of the date of his appearance within a set number of days.
Following his personal appearance before his local board, he was sent a new SSS Form 110. He then had another 30 days from the date on the new Form 110 in which to request an appeal.
Following action by the state-level appeal board, another new SSS Form 110 was sent to him. If the vote of the appeal board was less than unanimous, he had 30 days from the date on his latest Form 110 in which to ask for review by the Presidential appeal board.
NOW
A registrant has 15 days from the date on his latest Notice of Classification (SSS Form 110) in which to request a local board personal appearance; or, if he wishes to by-pass the personal appearance, he has the same 15 days in which to request an appeal to the state appeal board.

If he requests a personal appearance before his local board he will receive at least 15 days notice of his meeting. Following his personal appearance before his local board he will be sent a new SSS Form 110. He has 15 days from the date on this new SSS Form 110 in which to request an appeal to the state-level appeal board and to state whether he will appear in person before a quorum of the board. If he elects a personal appearance, he will receive at least 15 days notice of the meeting. Following the appeal board action, he will be sent a new SSS Form 110.

If the state-level appeal board is not unanimous in its decision, the registrant has 15 days from the date on his latest SSS Form 110 in which to request a further appeal to the Presidential appeal board and to state whether he will appear in person before the board. If he elects a personal appearance, he will receive at least 15 days notice of his meeting. Following the board action, he will be sent a new SSS Form 110.

Requests for a local board personal appearance, a state-level appeal, or an appeal to the Presidential appeal board, must be submitted to the registrant's local board.

All the 15-day time limits may be extended by the local board if it is satisfied that the registrant's failure to act within 15 days was due to some cause beyond his control.

SUBJECT
5. A personal appearance with the local board prior to the board's decision on a CO classification or hardship deferment request
BEFORE
A registrant did not have the right to a personal appearance with his board prior to the board's decision on his CO classification or hardship deferment request.
NOW
A registrant can request a personal appearance with his local board prior to the board's decision on his CO classification or hardship deferment request. The same procedural rights which would be afforded him at a post-decision personal appearance are afforded him at a pre-decision meeting. A post-decision personal appearance will not be held if a pre-decision appearance has been held at the registrant's request.

SUBJECT
6. Failing to report for scheduled personal appearance with local or appeal board
BEFORE
There was no clear guideline to local boards concerning appropriate action to be taken when a registrant failed to report for a personal appearance.
NOW
A registrant who fails to report for a personal appearance before his local board, state-level appeal board, or the Presidential appeal board is given five days in which to submit acceptable reasons for his failure to appear. The reasons should be submitted to the board before which he failed to appear. The 5-day period may be extended by the appropriate board if it is satisfied that the registrant's failure to appear was due to some cause beyond his control.

SUBJECT
7. Providing reasons to a registrant for adverse decisions by local or appeal boards
BEFORE
Local and appeal boards were not required to provide a registrant with reasons for their decision.
NOW
The reasons for an adverse classification decision at a local or state-level appeal board will be mailed to a registrant at the same time he is mailed a Notice of Classification (SSS Form 110). If the registrant desires the reasons for an adverse classification decision by the Presidential appeal board, he must write to his local board within 30 days of the date on his latest SSS Form 110.

SUBJECT
8. Post-Induction Order Reclassification Requests
BEFORE
A request for reclassification after the receipt of an induction order was not considered unless there had been a change in the registrant's status resulting from circumstances over which he had no control.
NOW
A registrant receiving a postponement of induction which is authorized by the National Director or a state director, or which is issued in order for him to complete a school term or academic year, will receive consideration of a reclassification request until 30-40 days prior to his actual induction date. Post-induction order reclassification requests by other registrants will not be considered unless there has been a change in their status resulting from circumstances beyond their control.

SUBJECT
9. Registration Procedures
BEFORE
Every male U.S. citizen was required to register within five days after his 18th birthday.
NOW
Every male U.S. citizen must register within the period 30 days before to 30 days following his 18th birthday.

SUBJECT
10. Classification of Registrants age 26-35 with Extended Liability
BEFORE
A registrant who, because of a previous deferment, had his liability to the draft extended to age 35, was kept in Class 1-A.
NOW
Registrants age 26 to 35 with extended liability, except for medical specialists, will be placed in Class 1-H, an administrative holding classification.

SUBJECT
11. Permission to depart the U.S.
BEFORE
A registrant was required to obtain the permission of his local board in order to leave the U.S.
NOW
A registrant is no longer required to obtain the permission of his local board in order to depart the country.

SUBJECT
12. Current Status of Registrants
BEFORE
All classified registrants were required to inform their local boards of changes in their status regarding employment, marriage, address, etc.
NOW
All classified registrants, with the exception of those in Class 1-H, must inform their local boards of changes in their status. Registrants in Class 1-H must inform their boards only of address changes.

Break The Law

For the past six days UMass and Five College students have been conducting Civil Disobedience at the gates of Westover Air Force Base. Almost two hundred have been arrested.

Why have they done it? Blocking off the gates of Westover Air Force Base is not going to bring a screeching halt to the Vietnam War. It will, however, slow down operations at the base, glut the local courts and jails with demonstrators, and feed the fires of Valley journalists. All this is secondary to the main point however; the people are there, reacting to an issue in the time-honored tradition of peaceful demonstration. The people have committed themselves to protesting the war in the way most palatable to them.

What is needed is more people to go to Westover and sit at the main gate. Think about it. What would happen if, for the next four weeks there were 100 or 200 protestors every morning at Westover sitting on the roadway, planning to get arrested? There are a few possibilities. One, they'd simply stop arresting people. Two, the sentences would get much tougher. (Right now it's mostly a 10 dollar fine for those arrested). Or three, just maybe it would hurt the functioning of the base.

Certainly there are enough people at UMass alone to make this happen. It might not end the war, but it's not going to let the powers that be, sit comfortably.

Trying To Get Trustees

If the Trustees had been more responsive at their partial, unofficial meeting yesterday, students would have been convinced that something was truly being done to end a bloody, useless war now, and that no more would be started in the future. However, students now have more reasons to distrust the members of the Board than ever have before.

Six hundred students, mostly from UMass-Boston, and some faculty members from both campuses, trekked to the Board meeting yesterday expecting to hear answers about the future of ROTC and military recruiting on the UMass campuses.

What they heard from the Trustees was that no formal commitment could be made at that meeting because it had been officially postponed due to the death of former Honorary Board Chairman Frank Boyden. Students also heard Trustee Alan Shaler, Robert Abrams, Frederick Troy and Robert Gordon give personal views on these issues and the merits of proper procedure.

On the subject of ROTC, Gordon said he would have to give a qualified no. He said he believes in the need for military training outside the direct military for an effective citizen body. Gordon apparently feels that the liberal atmosphere of the college campus affects the ROTC student to such an extent that it will obviously liberalize the army. Of course to accept this, one must believe that almost every ROTC officer is planning to become a lifer. However, many are merely using it as a last resort to go to school, as it was pointed out by one in the audience.

The Trustees called for results of referenda and petitions from both campuses. Only UMB's referendum and an ROTC sponsored petition (favoring ROTC) from the Amherst campus were ready. Students at UMB voted 993-958 to strike in some way; also 536 for and 1,406 against military recruitment, 1,180 for and 692 against industrial recruiting, 508 for and 1,361 against allowing ROTC at any UMass campus, 451 for and 1,463 against the defense research, and 1,754 for and 159 against withdrawal from Vietnam immediately.

Unbeknownst to most students who had probably never seen a Trustee before in person, was the paddy wagon full of at least 15 police, who were waiting on the ramp of the parking garage attached to the Howard Johnson building where the disorderly meeting was trying to be held.

Although several times the 600 in attendance shouted in unison, "Vote, vote, vote..." after demands such as, "We want to know where the hell your heads are at," the best they got was the four statements by those Trustees and a promise to hold an official Board meeting in two weeks.

For the most part, efforts all around were wasted. Six of the Trustees sat around stone-faced (like the one who gracefully uses a cigarette holder for chainsmoking). The Trustees were expected to give their say on the ROTC and recruitment topics. They ended up slipping out the back door of themeeting room, heavily surronded by some sort of security guards. Confrontation tactics with unresponsive Trustees who are not turned into the same issues as students don't work.

Beyond Belchertown

The problems at Belchertown State School I described a week ago, are problems that have been caused by several things. There has been neglect on the part of the state. There have been politics often played instead of genuine concern. There has been lack of understanding on the part of both officials and the public.

And there are the inherent problems of the existing Belchertown structure and concept. The physical construction of the school inhibits privacy, is difficult to maintain and is lacking in many facilities while its huge size is predicated on the concept of having a large number of residents.

Finally, there is the grievous problem of retardation detection, of the institutionalizing those who may not need confinement.

Some of these grave concerns are beginning to be dealt with. There is a great need for suitable treatment centers for persons not needing total confinement. There is a great need for halfway houses, for community-based centers.

Often times, individuals have been institutionalized who were capable people, who it turned out, became virtual non-paid, full-time employees at the Belchertown School. These more capable individuals are now being allowed to leave Belchertown. Many live in their own apartments and rooms and are full participating members of society. Many are in transitional home situations where after a period of supervision they will be able to take full charge of their affairs.

But, there are not enough of these "half-way" houses. Last year, I drafted legislation that authorized non-institutional construction standards for group residences and halfway or transitional houses, to be operated by the Commonwealth. Every agency under the Office of Human Services hopes to use the broad authorizations of the law, and thus provide new community-based programs for the retarded, disturbed, delinquent and orphaned.

All these programs cost money. Adequate facilities will be very expensive and the state has reduced its sights for mental health centers. While 40 such centers have been planned, only a few have been funded. Construction costs meanwhile rise. At the rate of existing capital outlays in mental health, it would take 40 years to complete the program. We would end up with a tremendous investment in mini-institutions which would be obsolete by the time they open.

Out of such reasoning arose the long battle I helped lead to obtain the property of the Northampton School for Girls as a children's center in Human Services. That facility would provide the home-like atmosphere not possible at a place like Belchertown, and at a reasonable cost. It should serve as a model for similar facilities all over the state and help avoid the vast cost of massive construction programs that prove obsolete before completion. It is close to the five-college area where training programs could benefit from a relationship with a progressive service delivery center.

The Northampton School campus has about ten buildings, admirably suited to group residence uses. Other facilities are available for day care and possibly services beyond mental retardation.

There are other possible programs that need consideration and study. A vacation program and an allowance for retarded should be developed. There should be some sort of camp program for retarded of this region to give inmates a needed change of atmosphere.

We can hopefully begin to diagnose learning disabilities early enough to avoid functional retardation later. We can perhaps avoid repetitious institutionalization of disturbed children if we can treat them within their community rather than out of state.

Community groups such as Students Offering Support (SOS) and Community Offering Support (COS) have been and will continue to be important and needed bodies in focusing attention on the need for alternatives.

Private citizens, professionals in the field of mental health care must contribte their time and their talents to the solving of these problems and the realization of many of the needed changes, I have just briefly begun to describe here.

Massachusetts once was the leader in progressive mental health care. We have fallen behind others in recent years. It is our task now to bring our state back to this position of leadership.

Letters To The Editor

Explaining Away Their Government

To the Editor:

First a question: Why did the student Mobe put that letter in the Collegian yesterday? I imagine it was to explain away the guilt that they feel has been attached to them as a result of Thursday night in the Ballroom. I think this is in their head and that others treated the Mobe on the issue of single issue politics. Be that as it may.

The Mobe asked that four representatives be on the committee who had consistently been involved in anti-war activities. First, it should be obvious that more members of the army are from minority groups and, therefore, it is logical that such groups should be dealing with the war and the oppressive nature of the military on an active basis; and in fact, the Black Liberation movement in the south through its active support behind the peace movement years ago at the risk of obscuring their own issues.

The modern Feminist movement grew from such writers as Kate Millet and Robin Morgan who first began to realize and deal with sexism from within radical groups in the anti-war movement and feminism has consistently dealt with the military and the war.

So if they wanted four representatives who had been dealing with the anti-war movement for years, they already had them, and what does the Mobe think the reps from the steering committee were involved in?

The reason the people left was not in opposition to the particular amendment. It was the implications placed on this amendment by the Mobe spokesman and the crowd. 1. that the Mobe would not allow the interrelation of the three issues; 2. that the Mobe and friends would not deal with the wording of their own amendment and insisted on factionalized representation instead of by the issue (as they had worded it); 3. that the people supported not the issue, but rather the lie, that "little people are crawling out of the woodwork" in an attempt to subvert the aims by power politicking, and supported it by loud and frenzied applause.

Such applause was viewed as racist and sexist and rightly so.

There is a very real difference between working within a group with the same goals and understanding of the major issues and staying within a group that is in direct opposition to all you represent. In the first case, you can try to educate, etc., knowing that what you are doing will not be fought and undermanned. In the second case, there is only the choice of leaving or having all your aims subverted from the beginning.

Dear Mobe, I think you should watch the film again and try to understand the relationship between the three issues which you proved not to understand by your capitalizing of the first demand in that horrendous referendum.

Edward Anthony

Within Our Context

To the Editor:

From a Pathet Lao grade school reader written in the Meo language and used in schools in Northern Laos, a Meo student of anthropology has translated the following:

"The sky is blue. The tops of the mountains are clear, and on the summits and sides of the hills is fresh green grass. Two small boys named Tong and Bee are spinning tops. Their laughter and shouting is lively. Suddenly Tong stops playing and listens carefully. He hears a hum. He raises his eyes to the sky and sees planes. American bandit planes are flying straight at him, like black eagles. Suddenly he sees flames pouring from under the planes. The blaze gets very red, and black smoke twirls up to the sky. Tong feels giddy. He wants to call Bee so that they can both run home. But his arms can't move any more. His legs feel very heavy and he can no longer move on. Forest, bush, reeds, grass all swirl around him. He falls down on the ground calling to his mother to curse the most wicked American bandit, the wicked American thief who is more terrible than the wild beast."

Most in the University community would agree that we want to see the war ended quickly and without reservations. But there are questions within the war and beyond the war that require grappling with by a community formally committed to intellectual goals. While sympathetic with many of the attitudes reflected in the statement from the Center for Social Change, I find a number of these statements couched largely in terms of general observations. I support Chancellor Bromery's statement against the war. However, if it is to have a significant internal meaning for our campus, it is appropriate to suggest that serious consideration ought to be given to formally utilizing interested faculty and involving students, in a cross-disciplinary framework appropriate to our university context, to jointly explore questions related to the war which has caused the death of so many and compromised all our lives.

Humanize ROTC

To the Editor:

During the past week I have noticed, with some concern, that much of the strike activity has been aimed at both ROTC and the draft. Instead of working for the abolition of these institutions, I urge a redirection of energies toward the humanization of both.

I am frankly scared of the concept of a volunteer, professional army, especially if that army were peopled by non-liberally educated men and women. One of our greatest hopes is to move people into all ranks of the armed forces (and the government) who understand the difference between defense and aggression.

I often think of the question, "What if they held a War and nobody went?" Instead of abolishing ROTC, let's add to the ROTC curriculum courses in the history of aggression with strong emphasis on the moral paucity and evolutionary insanity of all intra-specific killing.

I would prefer to see humane men and women, most of them non-professionals, in our armed forces rather than a professional army which might be used as a political arm of a stronger central government.

Harvard Supporters

To the Editor:

Last night at a meeting of the Center for Social Change, it was decided to forward a statement of support to the students presently occupying Massachusetts Hall at Harvard University. The statement read as follows:

To the Brothers occupying Massachusetts Hall, Harvard University:

We support your efforts to maintain occupancy of Massachusetts Hall so as to have Harvard University sell their stock of Gulf Oil which would end their corporate complicity in the terrorism exacted upon peoples in Africa. In our drive to remove R.O.T.C. from the University of Massachusetts campus, we will inform the people here of your struggle.

In the spirit of solidarity, Vencremos!

Something Constructive

To the Editor:

UMass students did something constructive this week. On Monday and Tuesday about 150 students contributed $170.00 to a hospital in Saigon where children who are victims of the War in Vietnam are being rehabilitated.

The Center for Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery is dedicated to treating thousands of injured and maimed children who have suffered directly and indirectly from the Vietnam War.

The $170.00 which these 150 students unselfishly gave will enable 2 children to undergo surgery and physical thefapy to help them walk again.

The Center has already treated more than 4,000 children and this money donated by the UMass students will help it carry on its work. Without funds to keep the hospital operating, thousands of disfigured children will grow up non-functioning, permanently crippled adults.

I found this outpouring of support most rewarding and am very grateful to those who stopped by the table in the Campus Center on Monday and Tuesday.

All of the money collected has been sent to the Children's Medical Relief International, Inc., in New York and will be forwarded to the hospital in Vietnam.

If anyone is still interested in contributing, the address is: Children's Medical Relief International, Inc., 228 East 48th Street, New York, New York 10017.

Thank you,

Bob Callahan

Thanking The Green Plant

To the Editor:

In 1970 the first act signed into law by President Nixon was the National Environmental Policy Act (N.E.P.A.). This was landmark legislation for the environment which ushered in "the environmental decade of the 70's" (quote R.M.N.). It opened up government planning to the public and encouraged public involvement on environmental issues.

Fortunately N.E.P.A. worked.

Private interests and government bureaucracy chafe under the openness and publicity of the act. They disdain public scrutiny of their acts and fear the power of public intervention in the decision-making process. Secret government is anti-democratic. Powerful groups who fear the strength of N.E.P.A. are working desperately to weaken it.

You can and should help.

Write your Senators and Congressmen (and R.M.N.) to encourage them to support the present N.E.P.A. requirements.

If you can't write a letter or two, please stop at the Coalition for Environmental Quality table on the Campus Center concourse Thursday, April 26, and write a few postcards.

On Civil Disobedience

To the Editor:

The following was presented as a reading yesterday morning at Westover Air Force Base. A group of 26 people then moved to block one of the entrances to the base in act of non-violent civil disobedience and were arrested, bringing the total number of arrests to 155.

Henry David Thoreau said in 1848 at the time of slavery and the Mexican War:

"When a whole country is unjustly overrun and conquered by a foreign army and subjected to military law, I think that it is not too soon for honest men to rebel and revolutionize. What makes this duty the more urgent is the fact, that the country so overrun is not our own, but ours is the invading enemy.

"If the...machine of your government is of such a nature that it requires you to be the agent of injustice to another, then, I say, break the law. Let your life be a counter friction to stop the machine."

The group repeated the last sentence three times.

Let us follow the example of our fe" w-countryman of Masschusetts, Thoreau, who invented the name and p ticed Civil Disobedience. Let us disobey!

Acts of Civil Disobedience are planned for Thursday and Friday mornings, with a special May Day Women's Action on Monday morning.

People are needed to show support for those who will be arrested and to demonstrate their own feelings against the war by talking with the delayed motorists and distributing leaflets.

We urge you to support the continuous effort at Westover Air Force Base against the continuation of the war and the escalation of the bombing of innocent men, women and children in Vietnam.

We meet on the Amherst common each morning at 6:15 a.m.

Please join us.

For more information, please call either 253-3683 or contact Gil Salk in the Draft Counseling Office in 923CC or by telephone 545-0813; or you can reach Jim Dempsey in 244 Pierpont or by telephone 546-5210.

Classic Musical Comedy Tonight

Alcmena (Joyce Wagner) in Classics Society's AMPHITRYON accepts Jupiter's bribe for sex. See it tonight at 8 p.m. in the CC Auditorium. It's free!!

The Classics Society, an organization sponsored by students who are interested in Classical civilization and culture, will present a modernized version of Plautus' musical comedy, the Amphitryon, tonight at the Campus Center Auditorium, 8:00 P.M. Admission will be free, but preferential seating will be reserved for ticket-holders. Free tickets are available from the Classics Department office in Herter Hall 407, or call 545-0514.

Two of the three acts in the Amphitryon will be produced in the original Latin. One act will be produced in English translation. Actors will include John Carideo, William Schumacher, and Joyce Wagner of the University, William Gleason of South Hadley High School, and Lorraine Teller of Williston Academy in Easthampton. Professor Edward Phinney of the University Classics Department will direct.

The Classics Society will also present the Amphitryon before some 1,000 members at the Convention of the Massachusetts Junior Classical League, on Saturday, April 29, 12:30 P.M., at Marblehead Senior High School in Marblehead.

The Amphitryon, which was first produced over 2,100 years ago, is a comedy of errors based on the myth of an adulterous wife, Alcmena, and her husband, Amphitryon, who were both duped by the god, Jupiter. While Amphitryon was away fighting a battle, Jupiter disguised himself as Amphitryon and very easily persuaded Alcmena--who thought Jupiter was her husband--to commit adultery. The fun began when the real husband returned home from battle, expecting a hero's welcome. Amphitryon discovered not only that his wife had been unfaithful, but also that she was pregnant. The product of the liaison, however, turned out to be the mighty baby, Hercules.

UCF To Support Westover Protest

The staff and executive committee of the United Christian Foundation voted yesterday to support the continuing non-violent civil disobedience at Westover Air Force Base. The vote was taken to formalize the endorsement which had been expressed by individual members earlier.

Members of UCF have been active in the Westover protests since their beginning. Gil Salk, a member of the UCF executive committee, originally proposed the idea at the first open strike meeting last week, and has been involved in planning and organizing.

The Rev. Sam Johnson, a staff member of UCF, has been organizing and leading non-violence workshops relating to the Westover action, both at UMass and at Hampshire College.

The Rev. Frank Dorman, former President of the UCF Board of Directors and currently the local coordinator of Clergy and Laity Concerned, has also been heavily involved in planning the demonstrations.

All three were arrested at Westover on Monday and will face trial on May 10.

According to organizers of the continuing action, plans call for more civil disobedience and arrests on Thursday and Fridy mornings. They are calling for more participants, either to join in the civil disobedience or to act as a support group by distributing leaflets to passersby. There is also a continuing need for cars to carry demonstrators to the air base.

Groups of demonstrators have been gathering each morning at 6:15 on the Amherst Common, and depart for Westover at 6:30. Those who wish to participate, or to offer transportation to participants, have been asked to assemble at that time.

For those who desire some idea of what to expect at the site of the demonstration, organizers have scheduled training workshops each evening prior to the action. The training sessions include discussion of what has happened in court to earlier participants, and role-playing of the planned action for the next day. The workshops are held at 7:30 each evening in the 9th floor lounge of the Campus Center.

Organizers point out that the arrests generally take place before 8:00 a.m., so supporters could leave in time to get to work or to classes. The sense of those previously submitted to arrest has been that a great deal of strength has been drawn from the presence of the supporters, and that they are therefore an important part of the life of the action.

People desiring more information should attend one of the workshops or call 253-3683, or contact Gil Salk in the Draft Counseling Office in 923 Campus Center (Phone 545-0813).

Rhode Island Dogs To Race?

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Legislation to legalize dog racing in Rhode Island was back on Gov. Frank Licht's desk again today, one week after he vetoed a similar bill.

The new measure, described as overcoming Licht's technical objections to the earlier version, was delivered to the Senate Tuesday rushed through the Corporations Committee and Democratic caucus, and then approved on a 37-7 roll call vote.

It was passed by the House last Friday after being hurried out of the judiciary committee as a back-up measure to the vetoed bill.

Democratic leaders in the Senate said privately that Licht would allow the new bill to become law, probably without his signature. It would become effective within six days unless he signs it sooner or disapproves it.

One of Licht's objections to the earlier bill-the lack of a provision for the share of the betting pool that would go to the state through taxes-was in the new version, which also specified the schedule for distribution of tax monies for cities and towns.

Webster Summer Program
- Take Experimental Courses for Academic Credit, transferable to your institution
- Live inexpensively for the summer in Washington, D.C. in shared apartments or houses
- On a Campus located on 15 acres with an indoor swimming pool, gymnasium, tennis courts, TV and radio studios, arts and crafts buildings

Webster, a new learning consortium in Washington, D.C., is planning an innovative program based around the community concept of individual colleges. The program will offer two year, four year and graduate programs as well as part time studies. Focus will be on a search new alternatives to existing social problems through academic and practical design.

Webster is a consortium of the College of the Potomac, Webster College, Synergos Institute, and others. It will offer programs in:
— creative arts — community studies and community organizing
— implications of technology — communications — innovative and futurist education — environmental studies and other programs that attempt to search for new alternatives to education and community.

Webster will attempt to find what Martin Buber called the living center: the reciprocal relationship of the members to one another. Open ended encounters and discussions centering on alternatives in education will be available.

Draft Registration Changes

The Selective Service System announced today new registration procedures for the draft. Under the new provisions, a registrant must register with a draft board or a draft registrar within the period 30 days before to 30 days after his 18th birthday. He must bring some official type of identification with him when he registers, such as his birth certificate, Social Security Account Number card, drivers license, school or college activity card, or a credit card.

The new registration procedures are designed to make registration more registrant-oriented and draft board operations more streamlined. Registration will consist of filling out a Registration Card. Additionally, a new Registration Questionnaire also must be filled out, although the registrant can take the questionnaire with him, or it may be mailed to him. He must return it within 10 days.

The new Registration Questionnaire requires the names and addresses of three persons outside the registrant's immediate family who will always know his address. The names, relationships, and addresses of all the registrant's family over age 16 also must be listed. In addition, the form includes questions inquiring whether the registrant believes he qualifies for a hardship deferment, for status as a conscientious objector, for a surviving son exemption, or for other Selective Service deferments and exemptions.

Finally, every registrant must list a place of permanent residence, as well as a current mailing address. The draft board serving his permanent residence will be the registrant's permanent draft board, regardless of where he registers.

When he registers at his own draft board, and when time permits, after he has completed the registration card the registrant will be issued his Registration Certificate along with his Notice of Classification stating that he has been placed administratively into a holding classification, Class 1-H. Practically all new registrants will remain in Class 1-H until after their lottery drawing which will be held early in the calendar year in which they reach age 19. Those who receive low lottery numbers will then be considered for classification out of Class 1-H. Young men become draft eligible, provided they do not receive a deferment or exemption, during the calendar year in which they reach age 20.

Judaic, Near East Studies To Expand

The Judaic Studies Committee and the Near Eastern Studies Committee announce the appointment of Professor Robert Eisenman, who will join the staff of the Classics Department in the fall to teach courses in the fields of Judiac and Near Eastern Studies. Professor Eisenman will also help organize these two programs of studies at the University. He received his Ph.D. from Columbia University in Middle East Languages and Cultures, and for the past year he has been teaching the History of the Arabs at Tel Aviv University and the History of the Jews under Islam at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

Proposals have been submitted for the establishment of undergraduate majors in Judiac Studies and in Near Eastern Studies. The proposals have not yet been finally approved. Students wishing information about the proposed majors may contact Dr. Jules Piccus (Spanish Department, Herter Hall, 545-0534) or Mrs. Leora Baron (Classics Department, Herter Hall, 545-0311) for Judaic Studies, and Mr. David Biddle (History Department, Herter Hall, 545-0672) for Near Eastern Studies. New courses are being offered in the fall in Judaic Studies (see under Hebrew) Near Eastern Studies, Hebrew, Persian, Turkish, and Armenian. Armenian 110, Elementary Armenian, will be offered Monday and Wednesday afternoons. For more information about new courses, see the Course Descriptions: Fall 1972.

HEBREW AND JUDAIC STUDIES. Monday, May 1, Herter 601. 8:00-10:00 p.m.
ARABIC, PERSIAN, AND NEAR EASTERN STUDIES. Wednesday, May 3, Herter 301. 7-10:00 p.m.
ARMENIAN. Wednesday, May 3, Herter 601. 6:00-9:30 p.m. (Movie at 8:30).

Information on course offerings, proposed major programs, career opportunities, travel and scholarships will be available. All are welcome.

Classics counseling information will be available in the Campus Center, 2nd level, Monday, May 1, 11:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m., and Tuesday, May 2, at the same hours.

Amherst Is 150!

One rarely gets the chance in life to have a 150th birthday party and fly a kite, especially on the same day.

But 1250 Amherst College students will get the chance on Saturday, May 13. The birthday party, complete with cake and candles, is being planned by the students to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the founding of Amherst in 1821. The party is one of a series of events that has been continuing during the current 1971-72 academic year to note the anniversary.

Like the kite-flying, many of the birthday party events will evoke bygone forms of amusement on the typical college campus of years ago: a prom, fireworks, an evening fraternity float parade through the center of the Town of Amherst, and a pie-eating contest. Along with today's frisbee, informal sports activities will include pushball, footraces and rope pulls. Athletic contests with traditional rival, Williams College, are also planned.

*During the afternoon, Amherst President John William Ward will cut a 150th Birthday Cake and seal a time capsule for posterity. Student and faculty musical groups will provide entertainment.

The student radio station, WAMH, will broadcast special programs on the day, including a special quiz show on the history of the college. Displays of costumes, photographs, and other memorabilia relating to Amherst's history will be displayed in the Robert Frost Library.

One special event is being billed as perhaps the highpoint of the day. A light airplane will fly over the campus trailing a banner with this message: "Happy Birthday Amherst."

Astronomy Lecture

The UMass physics and astronomy department has announced that "Evolution and Red Shifts of Galaxies" will be the topic of the next Five College Astronomy Colloquium. It will be Wednesday, April 26, at 8:30 p.m. in McConnell Auditorium of Smith College with Dr. Halton Arp of Hale Observatories as the lecturer.

Aleka Katseli To Compare 3 Electras

Aleka Katseli, world famous tragedian of the National Theatre of Greece, will lecture Tuesday evening, May 2, in SBA 120, at 8:00 p.m. on A COMPARISON OF THREE ELECTRAS, by Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripedes. Following her talk Ms. Katseli will give readings from a selection of her better known roles.

Ms. Katseli, a native of Athens, Greece was graduated from the Koula Pratsika Dancing School, and from the Karl Kuhn School of the Dramatic Art Theatre. She made her acting debut with the Art Theatre in George Bernard Shaw's "Fanny's First Play."

In 1945, Ms. Katseli was invited by the National Theatre of Greece to appear as Portia in The Merchant of Venice, produced by Pelos Katselia, who later became her husband. Since her appearance as Portia, Ms. Katseli has been one of the leading performers of ancient drama for the National Theatre of Greece, and had appeared as Clytemnestra, Hecuba, Medea, Electra, Andromache and Lysistrata.

Ms. Katseli has also played leading roles in Greek films and is best known on a world-wide basis for her role as Clytemnestra in Cacoyannis' production of Electra.

She has also performed more modern roles in the works of Ibsen, Shaw, Btti. Pirandello and Lorca.

Among her other distinctions, she has received an Oscar for her work in Greek films. She is also a member of the Society of Greek Theatrical Writers and Greek Choral Drama, is a Professor of Dramatic Art, and has been awarded the Medal of the City of Paris for Arts, Sciences and Letters.

The Dominican Order is an Order of preachers. But it is an Order of men who base their preaching on intensive contemplation – time spent in study and prayer – so that when they do speak, they have something meaningful to say.

The goal of the Dominicans is the salvation of souls through preaching, but not preaching in just the narrow sense of the pulpit. Rather, it is preaching in the expansive, apostolic sense that uses any channel available to communicate Christ and evangelical truth.

In the Dominican Order, each person is recognized for the uniqueness of his personality while living in Christian Community with others – and sharing his ideas and experiences. Prayer, study and apostolic action are the chief occupations in a Dominican house. They form a unity, because Dominican study is a loving, contemplative study of truth.

The Dominican Order places a premium on developing an individual's ability to accept responsibility. Everyone is given a share in decision-making, from the top to the bottom of the Order's government. Areas of responsibility outside of the Order include: parish work such as counseling and confessionals, retreats, missions, teaching in universities, colleges and high schools, writing, publishing and research.

If you like to think before you speak, perhaps you would like to become a Dominican. For more information, mail the coupon below. Or phone Fr. Quigley or Fr. Gerhard at: (401) 865-2477. A 24-hour answering service is available; you are invited to call collect.

Help A Foreign Student

Between one hundred and two hundred new foreign students will begin their first attendance at UMass in September. Pershaps half of these will be arriving direct from their home countries, without having been in the United States before. The Foreign Student Office would like to put these newcomers in touch with American students who would enjoy writing letters over the summer about the University and answering the new students' questions.

The prospective foreign student receives a good deal of factual information, from the Admissions Office, the Foreign Student Office, and his department. What is needed is a more personal dimension, which can best be provided by letter-contact with a fellow student.

Interested students should come to the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 239, or telephone 545-2843 in order to apply.

Health Ed

What To Do For Bites, Burns

Summer is approaching, bringing with it certain health problems. Here are some procedures to follow if they bother you:

INSECT BITES

1. If stinger is still in the skin, try to remove it.
2. Apply cold or ice compresses.
3. Ammonia or baking soda paste sometimes helps to relieve pain.
4. If you know you are allergic to insect bites, or if swelling occurs, see a physician promptly.

SUNBURN

Prevention

1. Be cautious on your first exposure to the sun. Don't stay in the sun for more than 30 minutes the first time.
2. Work up to longer exposure gradually.
3. Use sun-screen lotions.

Treatment

1. Try lying in a bathtub with cornstarch or baking soda in the water, or apply cool compresses to the affected areas.
2. A & D ointment, vaseline, or lotions will sometimes aid in relieving the dryness.
3. If blistering occurs, try to protect the blister from opening for at least several days. Do not cover it with a dressing.
4. Take aspirin for pain if necessary.
5. See a physician if burns are severe.

POISON IVY

1. Avoid exposure to poison ivy plants.
2. If you do come in contact with it, wash the area with a bar of yellow laundry soap as soon as possible.

Zoe Best To Read Poetry

Tonight Zoe Best will read from the poetry of Otto Rene Castillo, a Guatemalan guerrillero who was captured in 1967, tortured and burned alive because of his opposition to the U.S. supported military oligarchy.

She will read from a prose piece by 1967 Nobel Prize winner in literature, Miguel Angel Asturias. Zoe Best's own poetry is included in the program based on her experiences in Guatemala during the State of Siege in 1968 and 1970.

Questions should be asked to draw out the historical context of the poems. The program will end with a short Newsreel film "Guatemala: My Country Occupied" which is about a peasant woman and her contact with the United Fruit Co.

The poetry and film is to coincide with the opening of an international conference in Budapest, Hungary this week. The World Federation of Democratic Youth and the International Union of Students, a Student Federation of Central America, the Student Federation of Costa Rica as well as delegations and exiles from Central American countries will attend. This international conference will appeal for world-wide support for the "Guatemalan people who have fought many years against exploitation, impoverishment and against the delivery of the riches and national sovereignty to the imperialist interests.

"In the last five years there has been an intensification of the violence and official terror against the people, leaving more than 9,000 dead.

"Hundreds of Guatemalans fill the jails of the oppressive regime, suffer tortures, and inhumane prison conditions. Many 'disappear' without any official explanation. Urgent solidarity with the political prisoners is needed along with the fight for their freedom."

The poetry and film will be in room 804 of the Campus Center, 8:00 P.M.

Chess Team Defeated

The UMass chess team lost a four-board match to Harvard Tuesday night, by the closest score possible, 5 1/2-4 1/2.

An unusually high percentage of games were drawn: Dave Palmer, Jim Shepherd, George Kosinski, Mark Ordung, and Jay Goguen each split the point. Winning for UMass were Barry Cohen and Robert Crease.

Even after Russ Gouveia lost his game, the match looked like a sure win for UMass; then, within a few minutes of each other, both Bob Corwin and Jim Lane blundered horribly to convert two easily won positions into two hopelessly lost positions, allowing Harvard to nose out UMass.

The match was hosted by the Wachusett Chess Club of Fitchburg. The team's next match, to be played this Friday at 7:30 P.M., in Grayson House, will be a rematch with W.C.C. which lost to UMass last October.

by SYDNEY OMARR

Many persons born under Gemini are under pressure; their mettle is being tested. But Gemini bounces back, wades through adversity and emerges with a quip and a smile. Gemini is the sign of the twins. There are more twins born under Gemini than under any other zodiacal sign. Gemini is said to be associated with the hands. There are more left-handed persons born under that sign. Gemini is versatile, restless, exasperating and funny. It isn't easy to live with Gemini, but the world would be bleak without these persons.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Investments, money questions, possible financial partnerships are spotlighted. Be careful. Don't give up something for a mere promise. Element of deception could be present. Come down from the clouds.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Aries message. Questions of marriage, partnership could be paramount. Call on reserves. Handle responsibility. Get legal clearances. Rely on one who had had experience. Avoid untamiliar territory.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep medical, dental appointments. Get chores out of way early. Finish task which has been left over from another day. Adjust to change in employment picture. One who serves you could give notice.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): One you thought you knew surprises by playing role of major domo. Young person should be indulged. However, your own creative efforts, desires should not be ignored. Follow through on hunch.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Share knowledge; learn by teaching. Moon position now coincides with search for security. Public will decide your ultimate role. And that decision is on horizon. Avoid the petty. See beyond minor obstacle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Appetite to be on the go may now be satisfied. Lunar position coincides with activity connected with short journeys, relatives. Messages tend to go astray. Protect interests. Guard against being misquoted.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Financial transaction can be successfully completed. Check for loopholes. Let others know you are capable of being thorough, practical. One who attempts to dissuade you may be hiding something.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Dress up ideas. Get around--see and be seen. Spotlight personality. Change of scenery is indicated. Personal magnetism soars. You get offers. Key is to be selective. Choose quality. Take initiative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Areas darkened by mysterious secrets receive benefit of light. Make amends to family member. Stress diplomacy. Cooperate in project which aids charity, the handicapped. Visit individual confined to home, hospital.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friendship should blossom. Special relationship is emphasized. Get to heart of matter. Find out where you stand. Refuse to be satisfied with sweet nothings. Take cash now and let credit go. You will understand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lunar position stresses authority, prestige, standing in community, image and achievement. Accept challenge and responsibility. Make room for yourself at top. State case and do so in authoritative manner.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): See potential. Plan ahead. Get rid of burden not rightly your own. Gain greater freedom. Let others know you intend to live your own life. One who constantly asks favors will respect you and change ways.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, stubborn, adhering to a unique life style. Many envy you and cover this jealousy by being hostile. You are a valuable ally and a formidable foe. Change of domestic scene is due, with emphasis on September.

Tennis Team Faces Tough Amherst

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

UMass hasn't beaten Amherst College in tennis in quite a while. Every year teams make a go of it, but somehow come up short. This year though might be "the year" as the UMass netmen host Amherst at 3 this afternoon.

Amherst has lost five of its top six players from last year, and looks about as vulnerable as it ever has. In fact the University of Rhode Island defeated Amherst last week, one day prior to the beating handed URI by the Redmen.

The contest will mean three matches in three days, which isn't exactly the most delightful circumstances to be playing under. In addition UMass is probably still recovering from the Tuesday fiasco, when they dropped a 5-4 decision to UConn. Despite the fact that they rebounded well yesterday against UNH, trouble still looms for them.

In Tuesday's match nothing really went well. People get upset, players get upset, right? Well UMass decided to get upset on Tuesday, and UConn got the nod. It was 4-2 UMass going into the doubles; yes the doubles the bread and butter for the Redmen went bye-bye, down the drain, forget it-sville. First Ferber and Braley went down, then Coffin and Phillips, followed by Brass and Schpeiser, and the UConn team had gained their second tennis victory over UMass in 20 years.

Singles matches were won by Ted Donahue at first, Gary Ney at second (both freshmen) and Mark Brass (sophomore) along with Robert Schpeiser. Ferber and Braley were not having "their kind of day" as they both fell in singles, making it 4-2.

Yesterday's match left Coach Kosakowski in a much better frame of mind. Trying hard to forget their second defeat inside of a week, the Redmen overwhelmed UNH by a score of 7-2. Ney, at second singles whipped his opponent 6-2, 6-1, while Braley took his in three sets, 6-4, 5-7, 6-4. Ferber left with a 6-0, 6-2 victory while Brass and Schpeiser won 6-2, 6-1, and 6-3, 6-3 respectively. No the singles men didn't even give UMass a chance to blow it in the doubles as they racked up five big points in the six singles position.

Today though it's Amherst, a traditionally strong team, and Coach Kosakowski, along with his 9 or 10 man squad, would love to knock off Eddy Seris' boys. Today's lineup will probably go something like this: At first singles Ted Donahue, who holds a 4-3 mark will be going against Bob Ryan. At second singles will be Ney, who is presently 2-0. Third singles will find Braley with a 3-3 mark, while Ferber at fourth goes at it boasting a 5-2 slate. Brass with a 6-1 record is followed by Schpeiser at 7-0, and again, as predicted, the lower you go the better get the records.

All done with Yankee Conference matches for the season, the Redmen end up at 3-1 losing only to UConn on Tuesday, while not facing the Black Bears from up north at all. The conference title will feature all six Yan-Con teams in 10 days, and the Redmen will be the hosts. It is then that they'll get their chance to show UConn that UMass means Yan-Con supremacy. But first TODAY—it's Amherst, and it's a big one for Kosa and his boys.

Bruins Will Be Tough Just Ask Al Arbour

ST. LOUIS (AP)-"You'd have to rate Boston among the greatest teams the game's ever seen," the coach of hockey's vanquished St. Louis Blues declared.

Al Arbour, seemingly relieved his team was through with the high-scoring Bruins, made the assessment Wednesday following a 5-3 Boston victory on Arena ice the night before.

Asked to comment on the Stanley Cup finals starting Sunday between Boston and the New York Rangers, Arbour added, "If New York is going to do well, its defense is going to have to be super. And their goaltending is going to have to be super, too.

"It's difficult to size up any one series and predict the outcome," Arbour said, however. "Boston's got so much experience. They don't have any rookies, and I think the Rangers have only one."

Backing Arbour's prasie of Boston was a seven-goal pace with which the Bruins marched through St. Louis in four games.

Flourishing a deadly power play, they scored on half of 20 opportunities with St. Louis a player short and poured in 28 goals for a four-game series Cup record.

Taking over as the Bruins' most devastating line were Fred Stanfield, Johnny Bucyk and Johnny McKenzie, who combined for 10 goals and 32 points in the series.

The line, which set a Cup record of 52 points in 14 games two years ago, now has 46 in nine games entering the finals.

"The thing about Boston is you can't concentrate on stopping just one player or just one line," Arbour said. "They all score, from just about any place at any time."

"The only guy we've got hurt is Bucyk," said Boston coach Tom Johnson before the Bruins headed for home. "He's got either a hip injury or a charley horse. We don't know for sure."

"We know they've been playing well," he said in respect to New York, which Boston beat in five of six games and outscored 25-8 during the regular season.

"We handled them pretty well all year," Johnson noted, "but sometimes in a series it comes down to who's hot and who gets the breaks."

"I Want To Play" Says Cepeda

ATLANTA (AP) — Orlando Cepeda is frustrated. He is angry. But he is not quitting baseball.

"I want to play and soon," the strapping first baseman for the Atlanta Braves said Wednesday while denying reports that he will retire from baseball because of an ailing left knee.

"I didn't say I was going to quit," the 34-year-old native of Ponce, Puerto Rico said. "I did say I was tired of all the needles and pain. And that some days I feel like quitting but the knee is getting better each day.

"I want to play, I've played baseball all my life. It is my life."

So far this season, Cepeda, a hulking 6-foot-2 and 205 pounds, has been to bat twice. Last year the former San Francisco Giant and St. Louis Cardinal managed to play in 71 games and batted .276 with 14 home runs and 44 runs batted in before his injured knee had to be operated on in August.

"I was on a weightlifting program after the operation," the 1967 National League Most Valuable Player said. "Then I played winter ball and the knee was coming along.

"In spring training in Florida, the doctor told me not to continue with the weights. I did what he said and the knee got worse.

"I saw my own doctor in New York and he said to go back to the weights."

Cepeda's scheduled comeback was placed about three weeks behind, he says and only now is the ailing knee starting to come back to normal.

"It feels much better but I have to wait and see. Luman Harris, Braves manager, has been great. He doesn't want me to rush it.

Vikings Trade Cuozzo

ST. PAUL—MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The Minnesota Vikings traded veteran National Football League quarterback Gary Cuozzo to the St. Louis Cardinals Wednesday for wide receiver John Gilliam and two draft choices.

Cuozzo, who shared the quarterbacking duties a year ago but played out the season without a contract to become a free agent, had asked the Vikings to play him or trade him. He would have become a free agent May 1.

In addition to Gilliam, the Vikings get the Cardinal's No. 2 draft choice and the No. 4 draft choice they gave to St. Louis last year when Dale Hackbart went to the Cardinals for Bob Brown and Nate Wright.

The trade of Cuozzo seemed imminent after the Vikings sent quarterback Norm Snead, wide receiver Bob Grim, running back Vince Clements and two draft choices to the New York Giants for scrambling Fran Tarkenton, who started his career in Minnesota.

JV's Keep Rolling; Win 13-5

The UMass JV baseball team continued its winning ways yesterday with a 13-5 victory over the Dartmouth JV's. The game was played in frigid weather at Hanover, N.H.

Bob Langlois and Ralph Brescia shared mound duties for the Redmen with Langlois gaining the win and Brescia picking up a save. The victory ran Langlois' record to 3-0 while Brescia kept his ERA at 0.00.

Leading the UMass attack was leftfielder Paul Hermanski with three hits in five trips and four RBI's. Charlie Barnaby and Carl DeIeso along with third baseman Bob Disabato also chipped in with two hits apiece.

Shortstop Billy McDonald was on base five times and stole two bases and the JV's now, as a team, have stolen 21 bases in 21 attempts.

The little Redmen are now 5-0-1 on the season. Freshman Jeff Osborne will start today in the biggest game of the season against the UConn Huskies JV club down at Storrs.

Brown Tops Redmen, 10-6

By HOWIE BLOOM

"No one in this area can beat Brown University, with the exception of maybe Cornell"--Coach Dick Garber following UMass' 10-6 loss to the Bruins Wednesday afternoon.

Brown University was just too good. They made fewer mistakes, and capitalized more often on the Gorillas' errors. The New England championship was at stake, and Brown won it, but for awhile at the beginning of the game, it looked like UMass was going to do to the visitors what it had done earlier in the season to Holy Cross, Tufts, and Wesleyan, to name a few of the stickmen's victims this season.

Daily Collegian SPORTS

UMass came out sky high, determined not to let Brown get the jump on them, and they got their wish as Paul Ritch put one away by himself with just a little over two minutes gone in the first period. The next goal was a patented Charlie Hardy beauty, as the tri-captain danced around at the side of the Bruins' goal, dodged a couple of defenders, and fired the ball home from out front. Brown was playing very sloppy lacrosse early in the game as most of their passes were not connecting. UMass' close defense was doing a superb job stymying the visitors' crease attack.

Brown refused to let the 2-0 deficit get to them though, and they dug in and scored two quick goals a little over halfway through the period to tie the game. The first Bruin score was credited to Joe Dougherty with the assist by Jeff Riley. The tying score was set up by a third midfielder, Carl Robbins, who fast breaked with the ball up the right side of the field and passed left to John Pearson for the score. Bruce Crawford had five saves in the period, while Bruin goaltender Doug Spiro was tested just twice. UMass had the edge in the action in the period, but Brown had the momentum going into the second stanza.

The visitors jumped out to a lead early in the second quarter when Dave White, who was outstanding all afternoon, tallied one for the Bruins. Less than 30 secons later, however, the Gorillas let Brown know that they were going to have to relly dig to win the game, as Paul Ritch fired the ball by Spiro from the right of the crease after some nice ball-handling by Dana Stone.

Brown jumped back into the lead at 6:35 when Dougherty scored his second goal of the game, assisted by Steve Russo, who had a terrible time all afternoon trying to shake freshman defenseman Bill Blaustein. Then, with just three minutes to go in the half, and with a flag down on the field, White did it again, bouncing a shot by Crawford to make the halftime tally Brown 5, UMass 3.

Neither team seemed on top of its game during the first two periods, and if UMass could've gotten a little help from the officials, who were horrendous, and just a couple of breaks, they probably would've walked off the field at halftime leading.

In the third period, Brown came out looking like their coach had threatened them all with decapitation during halftime as they upped their lead to 7-3 on Dave White's third goal of the game, from Russo, and on a score by Don McLane (almost bye, bye Miss American Pie) with the assist by Robbins. Then, at 10:17, Paul Ritch scored a beauty on a great solo effort. The All-American got the ball to the left of the net, avoided two checks, moving closer to the goal with each fake, until he finally put it by Spiro for the score.

The next Gorilla goal came with a Brown player off the field serving a penalty. As they have done so many times before during this short season, John Nagle and Hardy combined for a goal, and UMass was roaring. During the next exchange, UMass wound up with the ball and pressed Brown in its own end, only to be foiled by the Bruins' goalie twice.

What's a party without a party pooper, and Dougherty turned out to be just that at 12:21 as he crushed the Redmen's momentum with an unassisted goal. UMass had been dominating the game since the midway point in the period, and although they weren't playing spectacular lacrosse, they had Brown worried and easily could've scored a couple more goals that period with a little more luck.

And so, the final period in the New England championship game began with Brown University leading UMass, 8-5. Again, the visitors came out flying, and only Crawford stopped them from upping their lead. He dove left and blocked one shot, got up, dove right and blocked another. And, on a couple of occasions he didn't even let the Bruins get a shot off as he checked the ball out of a visitor's stick twice within a fifteen minute span, until the Gorillas were able to move the ball out of their own territory.

With 7 minutes elapsed in the period, Dwight Blomquist got into the scoring column for the first time Wednesday afternoon with an unassisted goal. The score came after Hirsch Seidman had outraced a Brown defender into the visitors' end of the field, worked the ball over to Blomquist who cradled it for a few seconds before firing one of his patented bullets past an awed Spiro.

It took until there was just under half a period to play in the game, but the very, very large crowd of fans who showed up to watch the battle of the top two teams in New England finally started clapping, cheering, and getting excited about the Redmen. UMass was certainly not out of the game at this point; and the crowd and the Gorillas' bench went wild during the next three minutes as UMass kept the play in the Brown half of the field, coming close to scoring a couple of times. Finally, with just 6 minutes left in the game, Brown cleared the ball; and with a flag down on the field, they upped their lead to 9-6, Dougherty assisted by Riley.

UMass was persistent though, as they got the ball back and started pressing Brown all over again, but as before, they just couldn't get anything going. The Gorillas had the ball in the Brown end for a good two minutes this time around, but most of that time was spent scooping the sphere up off the ground instead of getting a scoring play together.

The final score of the game was 10-6, and the tally that gave the visitors their final margin of victory came off the stick of White, with the assist credited to Russo, the leading scorer in the Ivy League who wouldn't be anywhere near the top if he had to play against Blaustein every game.

GORILLA GRUNTS: Coach Garber was disappointed to lose, of course, but he was satisfied that the Redmen had played the Bruins just about even.

"Brown played a little better ball this afternoon. It was just bouncing the right way for them today. Their defense is the toughest in the country. They're big and tough to beat."

One of UMass' biggest problems this year has been remembering that the bounce shot is just about the most effective way to shoot the ball. Coach Garber remarked, "We wanted to bounce the ball by Spiro, but we threw it high instead. That's been our problem all year." Brown's steady play didn't help matters, either.

Spring Football Scene

By EARLE BARROLL

For the UMass football fan, the following diary:

Saturday afternoon--(April 29)--the UMass football team will bring its spring drills to a close with the annual Red-White intersquad game at Alumni Field. (There is no admission).

Yesterday afternoon--(April 26)--Commissioner Clarence Brooks (alias football captain) conducted the draft for this game. Present for the Red brass were: General Manager Tim Edwards, Director of Player Personnel Tom Mullins and Chief Scout Steve Schubert. For the White team: General Manager Paul Metallo, Director of Player Personnel Doug Winslow and Chief Scout Bill Hanifan.

Last Saturday--(April 22)--the football team travelled to Brockton High School (second largest in the country--5300 students) and put on a clinic-scrimmage before a sparse crowd. Clinics may not be the big thing this time of year with spring sports taking up most of the copy. B.H.S. coach Armond Columbo pointed out, though, that Florida State (big time country) had only 100 at their clinic this spring.

According to head coach Dick MacPherson, "the Brockton people want to try it again next year. The main reason for the small crowd was probably the weather (extremely cold and overcast).

Why was this trip undertaken? "The president (Robert Wood) wants to spread the university around the state," Mac said. "We're doing it by bringing out football program around the state. We want to get kids to come to school here and the fans to come here to see us play."

Brockton High School has become the big football power in Massachusetts. It's getting to a point now where the Red and Black have to go out of state to get opposition. Next year they travel to Orange, N.J. and White Plains, N.Y.

Some Added Notes:

"We are definitely ahead of lastyear at this time," MacPherson emphasized. "I was very pleased with the outcome of the game, especially the showing of Mark Tripuck at quarterback. Every quarterback called his own shots during the game."

Saturday morning beginning at 8, MacPherson, his coaching staff and the Redmen will host a state-wide football clinic at Mahar Auditorium. It should be quite a spectacle watching Clarence Brooks leading Paul Metallo on a sweep up the middle aisle.

Formers Gridders signing with the Pros:

Skip Parmenter (Denver), John Hulecki (Pittsburgh), Dennis Keating (N.Y. Jets), Jack O'Neil (Patriots), Bill DeFlavio (Montreal-Canadian League), Joe Sabulis (presently negotiating), Bob Donlin (Will play for the Washington Redskins if his knee injured last season vs. Dartmouth-is ready), and Russ Wood and John Farrelly are negotiating with Canadian teams.

Francis To Make Changes

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Emile Francis, general manager of the New York Rangers, will interrupt his preparations for the Stanley Cup finals against the Boston Bruins to conduct a news conference here Thursday night to make announcements about his Rhode Island Reds farm club of the American Hockey League.

Speculation is that Francis will name a coach to succeed Larry Wilson. The latter, and general manager Dave Creighton, were both cut loose by the Reds earlier in the week in a move dictated by Francis.

The Rangers plan to have more control over the Providence operation next season which will be the second in a five-year agreement between the Reds and Rangers.

Shortly after the press conference, Francis will fly back to New York to rejoin his Rangers who meet the Bruins in the Stanley Cup finals opener on Sunday at Boston Garden.

Pats Trade Dryer

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — The New England Patriots of the National Football League traded unsigned defensive end Fred Dryer to Los Angeles Wednesday in exchange for the Rams' No. 1 pick in the 1973 draft and veteran defensive tackle Rick Cash.

The Patriots surrendered their first and sixth draft choices this year and their No. 2 pick in 1973 to acquire Dryer from the New York Giants.

Dryer played out his option with the Giants last season and the Patriots were unable to sign him. Unless he signs with Los Angeles by May 1, he will become a free agent.

Fac-Sen Votes To Kill ROTC Credit

By JIM DEMPSEY

Chancellor Randolph Bromery yesterday gave an official presentation of the "strike" related events on campus during the past week to the regular meeting of the Faculty-Senate. This address, which highlighted the meeting, was meant to clear up several rumors while providing an accurate picture of the week's events.

In other Faculty-Senate business, a motion was passed urging the Board of Trustees to terminate academic credit for the ROTC program on campus, and the Senators heard that the Massachusetts House gave initial approval to a special reserve fund. (See story on page two.)

The motion, presented by Professor Joseph Burroughs, was endorsed by a 35-12 vote. It urges the Board of Trustees to terminate the awarding of academic credit for the area of military and air science in the ROTC program. This would serve to reaffirm two previous approvals of this same matter by the Faculty-Senate, which the Board of Trustees rejected.

The ROTC military and air science courses should be distinguished from the same regular university courses. According to the motion, these will continue to be awarded credits.

Bromery said that he first heard of the planned strike last Thursday morning. He was approached by the strike steering committee asking permission to use Dickinson Hall as the strike committee did in 1970.

They asked that Dickinson classes be scheduled elsewhere, but admitted that accommodations would be made if this was impossible. The strike committee told Bromery there would be no damage and that they would clean up after themselves.

Bromery agreed, scheduling both ROTC and non-ROTC classes out of Dickinson to prevent disruption of classes.

Thursday evening at the Strike Steering Committee there were tremendous problems and difficulties, with the Women's Caucus and the Third World Caucus splitting off from their union with the Student Mobilization Committee.

On Friday, a referendum to continue the strike was defeated by a 62-vote margin.

Saturday morning, Bromery was informed that three groups were holding Dickinson Hall: the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, a women's group and a men's group. The Chancellor was eager to set up some dialogue between the Administration and those holding the building.

Bromery then met with six representatives of the groups to arrange a meeting to discuss the issues. A single binding provision was made--that an agreement be made between the two parties on when Dickinson would be vacated.

An administration Negotiating Committee was then formed for the Sunday morning meeting. Discussion continued into late Sunday evening, especially dealing with racism and sexism and the ROTC program.

Bromery was quick to add that it was an educational experience for all involved and a good opportunity for both sides to find out the legal, technical and administrative aspects of the issues involved. One agreement they made was that as long as they were in discussion, no action would be taken.

Discussions continued on Monday at Whitmore and the Dickinson building was left vacant and undamaged as promised. Bromery noted that at no time during the discussions was there hostility, abusive language, threats or coercions between the two parties.

The Chancellor added that he has "serious questions about the presence of ROTC on campus," but "I'm not going to formulate any policy or actions without consulting the appropriate body."

On Tuesday Bromery met with the ROTC cadets and advised them to circulate a petition to measure campus sentiment towards the ROTC program. At the same time, another petition was making the rounds, measuring anti-ROTC feelings.

When asked about his recent personal statement against the escalation of the bombing in North Vietnam, Bromery replied: "When I made my commitment to the faculty and students on this campus in the chancellorship, I did not give up my conscience."

Finally, the first floor of Munson Hall (across from Whitmore's back door) was established as the center for the Coalition Against Oppression and the Vietnam Vets Against the War.

These people gathered together early yesterday morning outside Westover Air Force Base to protest the continuation of the war and the escalation of the bombing of innocent Vietnamese men, women, and children. It was the fifth consecutive day people from the Pioneer Valley and as far away as Dartmouth College, had arrived to demonstrate their conscientious objection to the war and Westover's participation in it. Plans are to continue the demonstrations as long as possible. (MDC photo by Gil Saik)

Special Reserve Fund Gains Ground

The Massachusetts House yesterday gave preliminary approval to a budget measure that would transfer some $84 million from the budgets of state departments and agencies to a special fund.

Proponents said the measure would freeze $71.4 million in a $2.16 billion budget proposed by the House Ways and Means Committee Opponents called it a budget cut.

Under the measure, which passed by a vote of 221-4, all departments and agency budgets would be reduced by amounts ranging from 5 to 50 percent in the areas of overtime and travel expenses, consultants, lab and medical supplies, maintenance of state property and purchase of new equipment.

The proposal, drafted by the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, is designed to transfer some $84 million to a special reserve account under the commissioner of Administration and Finance. The commissioner, in turn, could authorize the release of up to 15 percent of the $85 million to meet the department's expenses in such areas as overtime if one of the state's 10 cabinet secretaries ruled there is an emergency.

Rep. Anthony M. Scibelli, (D—Springfield), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee and sponsor of the bill, said the remaining money in the fund, a maximum of $71.4 million, would revert to the state's general fund at the end of fiscal 1973.

Scibelli said that frozen funds above the 15 percent portion could be released only by a special act of the Legislature.

Scibelli made his proposal after a meeting of House Republican members who supported similar legislation drawn up by the House minority leader Francis W. Hatch, (R—Beverly).

"All over Massachusetts," Hatch said, "families and businesses are cutting back out of economic necessity." He said state governments "have the obligation to recognize the plight of its taxpayers and to reduce spending wherever it can."

"I have no doubt," he added, "that these recommendations will not please some state officials who will have less money to work with. However, they are being asked to reduce non-program items which now make life more comfortable, but which, in a period of austerity, they can do without."

The Scibelli measure calls for the following transfers of department budget requests to the special reserve account:

—Twenty percent of overtime salaries, which would amount to $11,015,000.

—Twenty-five percent of consultant and other non-state employee services, amounting to $10,234,000.

—Five percent of laboratory and medical supply expenses, amounting to $43,765,000.

—Ten percent of travel and auto expenses, amounting to $1,008,000.

—Ten percent of advertising and printing expenses, amounting to $634,000.

—Fifty percent of maintenance and repair expenses for state property, including cars, highways and buildings, amounting to $8,530,000.

—Five percent of expenses for special exhibits, prison industries and public celebrations, amounting to $3,727,000.

—Fifty percent of expenses for new equipment, including automobiles, construction, maintenance and office equipment, amounting to $4,494,500.

ABLE Succeeding

By MICHAEL PATTERSON

Twenty minority group members have risen to top management posts across the country as a result of their participation in a University of Massachusetts program of graduate business training called Program ABLE.

ABLE, which stands for "Accelerated Business Leadership Education", is a continuing two year program founded by Dr. Lawrence Johnson which he says is designed to fill the growing need for minority group members in top management positions.

Three years ago, for instance, a recent black participant in the program was working at a low level management position for a Wisconsin urban league. Now he is director of economic development in that organization, after having spent two years in the UMass Program ABLE.

Since the first class entered UMass in the summer of 1969, Program ABLE has expanded to Syracuse, New York, Atlanta, and Howard Universities. Eleven blacks, American Indians, and Spanish Americans are enrolled in the UMass program, eight at Syracuse, and the programs at the other universities will start this fall.

Program ABLE, is supported by grants from the Economic Development Administration, Mobil Oil Company, Polaroid Corporation, General Electric Company, and the Morgan Guaranty Trust Company.

Candidates in Program ABLE, selected from across the country, are all college graduates who have the potential necessary for advancement, but who lack a strong educational background in business. Most candidates enter the program from low level management jobs, or from college or the military.

Every student begins his two-year program at an intensive summer session during which his area of weakness is determined and worked on. The session this summer will be at Syracuse University for members in the ABLE Program at all five universities.

The program has a 100% success rate with 20 pagicipants having earned their masters degrees in business administration. After receiving his masters degree, the student is committed to working at least 18 months in a minority business.

Meeting Tomorrow To Plan For May 4

The continuing escalation of United States involvement in South East Asia, especially in the past three weeks, has resulted in a new upserge of antiwar activity culminating in student strikes, massive national demonstrations on April 22, and countless local actions demanding immediate withdrawal of all United States forces from Southeast Asia.

In light of these recent developments, many feel it is absolutely imperative that antiwar activity continue. Target dates set for local action co-ordinated throughout the country are Saturday, April 29th and Thursday, May 4th. On April 29th activists in the Five-college area will undertake a concerted effort to publicize the crucial situation that exists and to build support and participation in mass peaceful legal demonstrations planned for Westover Air Force Base on May 4th.

At the Saturday meeting, there will be information on civil disobedience, boycotting of war related products, and guerrilla theater. In addition, there will be leafletting following the meeting, in the center of Amherst, and at local shopping centers. Speakers from the New England locals of the United Electrical Workers Union are being planned.

The meeting on Saturday will be on the lawn behind the Hatch, between the Student Union and Hasbrook. It will begin at 10 A.M.

Anyone desiring to aid the withdrawal of all troops from Southeast Asia is urged to attend, and to contact the UMass Student Mobe at 545-1366 or on the second floor of the Student Union on Saturday morning.

WBZ Invaded

BOSTON (AP) - About 50 demonstrators invaded the studios of WBZ-TV on Soldiers Field Road Thursday night, demanding equal air time to answer President Nixon's speech on Vietnam Wednesday night.

They were removed by police. An officer at Station 14 said about 45 or 50 would be charged with trespass.

Jim Thistle, director or television news for the Westinghouse Broadcasting outlet, and Vice President Winn Baker told newsmen other Boston TV stations had been alerted that there would be a demonstration but WBZ was not.

They said that as far as they could tell, no damage was done.

Thistle and Baker gave this account.

A girl pressed on the buzzer at the front door at 6 p.m. She was the only person visible so a guard by means of a remote buzzer opened the door. The girl then held the door open to admit about 50 persons who had been hiding outside.

The group forced its way in, surged down a hall and entered a large TV studio not at the moment in use, and went from there into an adjoining studio where the 6 p.m. newscast was just going on the air.

The officials said a video tape was on the air at the time, realizing what was happening, a producer went from the tape to a commercial, then instead of going back to live air, threw up a station identification slide. There was no programming except for the slide until 6:23.

The officials said they asked the demonstrators, carrying a Viet Cong flag, to leave the station. When they did not, police were called and took them away two by two. They offered no resistance.

A station spokesman said the station did not go off the air and said that to force a station off the air would be a federal offense.

Weather

Mostly sunny except becoming partly cloudy up north. Highs in 40s up north to low 50s in the south. Friday night fair. Lows upper 20s to low 30s. Saturday partly cloudy. High near 50.

Fair weather Sunday. Partly cloudy Monday with a chance of occasional rain Tuesday.

Daytime temperatures will be from the middle 50s to the low 60s. Nighttime temperatures will be from the upper 30s to the middle 40s.

Huntington On America

By JACK LEWIS

Last night Thompson 104 housed a speech by Dr. Samuel P. Huntington, a Professor of government at Harvard University. Huntington lectured on The American Military: Present Crisis and Future Challenges.

Speaking before a group of approximately 50 people Dr. Huntington stated, "What is new is not the militarism (in this country) but the opposition to this militarism."

Because of this opposition, Dr. Huntington stated that the U.S. is now moving towards demilitarism.

"Not since 1949 has the american military been criticized as it is today", he said. "The american military does not command the respect as it did some years ago."

While stating some similarities between the american military's situation now, as it was in the 1950's, Professor Huntington stated that it may be conceivable that the current demilitary shift is a return to the strategy of the 50's.

Professor Huntington stated that in a recent poll 11% wanted to increase the power of the american military while 50% wanted to decrease this power.

"This is due not to a change in strategy by a President but a change in the attitudes of the nation," he said.

Stating his predictions of future changes in the american military Huntington stated his belief that, "The years of the American supremacy are declining rapidly."

In outlining new threats to world peace, Huntington said that the Soviet Union already has the "second strike" capability and is very near the intervention capability to deploy its forces. Until recently the U.S. was alone in these capabilities.

He also stated that "The Soviet Union is now gaining the power to intervene in places such as Southeast Asia where they haven't been capable of this in the past."

Dr. Huntington believes that the american military's greatest challenge is "to formulate the strategic concepts and policies necessary for U.S. security despite these new international threats to that security."

Dr. Huntington has conducted extensive research and writing on political and military relationships, and has been involved in numerous organizations and research groups. He chaired the Council on Vietnamese Studies, Southeast Asia Advisory Group in 1967-1969.

Some of his works in the military field include The Soldier and the State and The Common Defense. He edited Changing Patterns of Military Politics.

SUG Board Debates Appointments

By STEVE TRIPOLI

The Student Union Governing Board last night erupted into a heated debate over appointments to next year's Board which were endorsed by the Student Senate Wednesday.

The major objection to the appointments was the procedure by which the appointees had been nominated for the approval of the Senate. The objecting Board members, led by Rocky Hodgeson, claimed that certain members of the Board had fixed the nominations to get rid of a few encumbent Board members who were not reappointed for next year. They also claimed that the nominations were not in accordance with the SUG Board constitution.

Board Chairman Barry Cohen answered the charges by saying that the nominations were legal, and that since the Board didn't get a nominating committee together in accordance with the constitution an alternate committee was set up. He also stressed that none of the people who weren't reappointed were excluded for political reasons.

Board member Rita Tonucci had this to say about the controversy: "Maybe Barry and Lisa (Board Chairperson and Vice Chairperson Barry Cohen and Lisa Mandell) should have emphasized more the fact that the interviews would mean a lot towards getting the nomination. They also should have told the Board that they would be making the recommendations to (Student Government Association President) Larry Ladd.

"On the other hand, Barry and Lisa know better than anyone who's been working and who's not been working on the Board this year. I'm sure they were fair in their decisions."

In other business, a procedure by which the Board could employ a referendum type opinion poll when necessary was tabled in order to have the move more closely scrutinized.

The Board also passed motions to allow WTOY, the university TV station, to hook into the Campus Center's video cable for broadcasting purposes, and to give the Chairman of the Board the power to declare any major issue nondebatable for one week in order for the Board to look into it.

Defeated was a motion by the Building Committee to place a box for voluntary donations in the Music Room, and tabled was a motion to increase the Top of the Campus membership fee for non students to $5. The Board will meet again next Tuesday in an effort to clear up what's left of this year's business.

SUG Board member Rocky Hodgeson (second from right), who took angry exception to the nominations to the Board which were approved by the Student Senate Wednesday. Hodgeson claimed that the nominations were illegal and of somewhat dubious value, claiming political motives were behind them. (MDC Photo by Steve Quigley)

Final Primary Results

BOSTON (AP)-Late returns compiled Thursday in the 11th Congressional District indicate Sen. George McGovern has destroyed even further the few victories scored in Tuesday's Massachusetts Democratic primary by Sen. Edmund Muskie.

Latest tabulations assure 87 of McGovern's 102 pledged delegate candidates of victory. Of the remaining 15, Muskie appears to have won 9, with Rep. Shirley Chisholm of New York winning four and one uncommitted delegate, Cambridge Mayor Barbara Ackerman, winning a convention seat.

With 1,827 Precincts or 93 per cent of 1,964 precincts reporting, here are the latest totals in the Massachusetts Democratic presidential primary:

Humphrey 44,001-8 pct.
McGovern 293.221-53 pct.

Muskie Quits Primary Race

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, his once-bright prospects battered by a series of primary defeats, withdrew Thursday from active campaigning in Democratic primaries but said he'll stay in the presidential race.

Almost to a man, Muskie's big-name supporters said they will stand by his candidacy, hoping he might still emerge as a possible compromise choice at the Democratic National Convention this July in Miami Beach. Privately, however, some conceded this was unlikely.

Muskie told a jammed news conference his decision was forced by "diminishing results and diminishing resourses," specifically Tuesday's twin defeat in the Pennsylvania and Massachusetts primaries. "I do not have the money to continue," he said.

Muskie said he would remain a candidate in deference to supporters who want to keep working for him. He conceded "this decision reduces my prospects in the campaign" but said a compromise candidacy at Miami Beach is "a possible option."

From a practical standpoint, Muskie's withdrawal from active candidacy is expected to accelerate the polarization of the Democratic race into a two-way fight between Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and George S. McGovern, the winners in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts respectively.

In Ohio, the two senators were already believed running ahead of Muskie in next Tuesday's primary despite support for Muskie by Gov. John J. Gilligan.

Others also are in the presidential contest, most notably Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, who is trying again in Ohio after finishing third in Florida and fifth in Wisconsin, and Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama, who captured Florida and finished second in Wisconsin and Pennsylvania.

But most party leaders believe McGovern and Humphrey have become the unquestioned front-runners though most of the 3,016 delegates are yet to be selected. Muskie's decision is seen as likely to reduce the chances of a deadlocked convention that would turn to someone else, such as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts.

For Muskie, Thursday's announcement came a little more than seven weeks after he entered the primary season as the clear front-runner, backed by an impressive array of governors, senators and other top party leaders.

In the primaries, however, this leadership was unable to produce at the polls for Muskie.

Muskie won the opening round in New Hampshire, finished a badly beaten fourth in Florida then appeared to be on his way with a substantial victory over McGovern in Illinois.

But his campaign faltered badly in the closing days of the Wisconsin primary, where he again finished fourth. And Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, where he once planned to knock Humphrey and McGovern out of the race, turned out to be the spots where they knocked him out.

Trade Deficit Worsens

WASHINGTON (AP)-The U.S. trade deficit deepened in March to a three-month record of $1.5 billion, handing the nation its worst yearly start ever in world commerce, the government said Thursday.

The Commerce Department said that the red ink in the nation's trade account last month totaled $584.3 million, only slightly lower than the February deficit.

A trade deficit occurs when the value of foreign goods brought into the country exceeds the value of American goods taken out of the country.

Kwame Nkrumah Dies

Once the dictator of Ghana, Nkrumah was deposed in a military coup in 1966. He had lived since then in Guinea, forever vowing to return to Ghana and regain power. He suffered from cancer and had been under treatment since last November.

President Sekou Toure of Guinea, who had provided asylum for Nktumah, broadcast the announcement of his friend's death. Toure ordered three days of national mourning.

Excess Profits Revealed

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Price Commission Thursday ordered four large retail and wholesale firms to cut prices because they have exceeded guidelines on profit margins.

Price Commission Chairman C. Jackson Grayson Jr. estimated the cuts will amount to "hundreds of thousands of dollars."

He also said he hopes other firms who see that they may exceed profit-margin guidelines will cut prices voluntarily, as the Ford Motor Co. announced it would do Wednesday. "Ford had a better idea," Grayson said.

Renewed Fighting At Quang Tri

SAIGON (AP) A tank battle erupted Thursday on the approaches to Quang Tri in a renewed North Vietnamese drive to seize that northernmost provincial capital. Allied officers claimed victory in the armored battle and said South Vietnamese were holding their own elsewhere.

The fighting around Quang Tri, 19 miles south of the demilitarized zone, broke a lull of more than a week in the north, where the north Vietnamese have been held along a river line 10 miles south of the zone.

A U.S. officer at Quang Tri said 10 enemy tanks were destroyed in the armored engagement five to six miles north of Quang Tri.

When the enemy stormed across the demilitarized zone March 30, it was believed that Quang Tri and its nearby military base was the prime objective.

Associated Press correspondent Lynn C. Newland reported from Quang Tri after a flight over the battlefield that a North Vietnamese ambush knocked out trucks and disrupted traffic on Highway 1 three miles south of Quang Tri. This was the closest enemy approach reported.

Fighting continued around Quang Tri as darkness fell.

The savagery of the fighting in the enemy's new offensive was reflected in casualty figures for last week. The South Vietnamese reported 1,149 soldiers killed and 3,376 wounded, the heaviest of the war. The U.S. Command said 10 Americans were killed, 8 were missing and 78 wounded, the heaviest losses in six months.

With bad weather holding air strikes to 14 on the northern front, U.S. fighter-bombers attacked enemy targets in North Vietnam, hoping to blunt the North Vietnamese attack. Hanoi radio claimed six U.S. planes and a helicopter were shot down over the North. It claimed the air raids came within 80 miles of Hanoi but the U.S. Command declined to comment.

The U.S. Navy also joined the battle. Warships standing off in the Gulf of Tonkin fired at enemy lines.

At An Loc, the provincial capital 60 miles north of Saigon, 2,260 shells rained down in a 24-hour period ending early Thursday, Saigon headquarters said.

It was the heaviest bombardment in any 24-hour period at An Loc since the North Vietnamese struck along the invasion corridor leading toward Saigon early in the offensive.

While no major new fighting was reported in the central highlands, there was no lessening of enemy pressure and new attacks were feared there by the weekend.

The An Khe Pass on Highway 19, the vital link between supply bases on the coast and the imperiled highlands city, was officially declared open. Associated Press special correspondent Peter Arnett said tanks were the first to use the damaged highway, heading west toward the fighting front.

South Korean troops waged a bloody 16-day battle to dislodge North Vietnamese from the pass.

The North Vietnamese battle deaths fell sharply from 7,117 two weeks ago to 4,890 last week, the South Vietnamese command reported.

Protests Continue

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Four persons were arrested Thursday for blocking a doorway at the downtown Armed Forces induction center, police said.

They were arraigned on a charge of "obstructing a passageway."

Secret Peace Talks Hinted

PARIS (AP) — The North Vietnamese said Thursday secret talks on the Vietnam war were probable. The statement was issued after both sides returned to the bargaining table.

The first meeting of the two sides in five weeks erupted into charges and denials of a North Vietnamese invasion of the South. But they agreed to meet next Thursday.

Nguyen Minh Vy, North Vietnam's deputy chief delegate, said Politburo member Le Duc Tho will arrive from Hanoi within a week. He then added that secret talks were probable. Tho met privately in Paris last year with Henry A. Kissinger, President Nixon's national security adviser.

U.S. Ambassador William J. P Porter refused to comment on the North Vietnamese statement.

At the meeting, Porter called on North Vietnam "as a first item of business...to end your invasion and commence withdrawal of North Vietnamese troops from South Vietnam."

Brandt Gets Backing; Opposition Nearly Wins

BONN, Germany (AP)-Chancellor Willy Brandt narrowly defeated on Thursday an opposition attempt to oust him. The vote in parliament brought guarded sighs of relief to his supporters in East and West who had feared his policy of easing European tensions would fail.

The crisis was not over. Opposition Christian Democrats mounted a fresh challenge to Brandt's coalition of Social Democrats and Free Democrats.

The opposition failed by two votes to unseat him through a no-confidence motion raised in the Bundestag, the lower house. The Christian Democrats won 247 votes but needed 249 of the 496 members.

Undaunted, they claimed the three abstentions meant Brandt did not have an absolute majority. They pushed quickly for a test vote on Brandt's budget.

Fighting back, the Free Democrats announced they were replacing two of their lawmakers who voted against Brandt in hopes of guaranteeing him a majority.

The fate of Brandt's nonaggression treaties with Moscow and Warsaw, up for ratification in parliament next week, hinged on the political maneuvering.

The treaties renouncing the use of force and recognizing World War II German territorial losses are central to the design for easing cold war tensions. Their approval would clear the way for the four power Berlin agreement easing travel restrictions and the atmosphere for President Nixon's Moscow trip next month.

Collapse of Brandt's government would almost certainly ruin chances for early ratification of the treaties.

Kleindienst Approved Again

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Judiciary Committee approved for the second time Thursday the nomination of Richard G.Kleindienst to be attorney general, ending the longest Senate confirmation hearing in history.

By an 11-4 vote, a wider margin than expected, the committee sent the nomination to the Senate floor "with recommendation that the nomination by confirmed."

Attempts by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. to continue the eight-week hearings failed. He promised a fight on the Senate floor to defeat the nomination. No vote is expected there for several weeks.

Kleindienst, who asked that the hearings be reopened, testified on the first and last days about the out-of-court settlement of three antitrust suits pending against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. while he was deputy attorney general.

The new round of hearings followed the first committee ballot of unanimous approval for Kleindienst to replace John N. Mitchell. The sessions reconvened after publication of a memo attributed to an ITT lobbyist which linked the antitrust suits and a pledge of up to $400,000 to the Republican National Convention in August.

Kleindienst was called again to testify because of apparent contradictions with what he said during earlier hearings. He told the committee Thursday nothing which has occurred during the previous eight weeks would have prevented him from asking that they be reopened.

Earlier, the friendly, talkative acting attorney general blamed a busy schedule for his lack of memory on contacts a White House aide says they had about the ITT affair while it was still pending last spring.

One meeting with presidential assistant Peter M. Flanigan about ITT "was so insignificant and so immaterial it just doesn't stick in my mind," Kleindienst said.

In answer to questions, Flanigan wrote the committee he carried to Kleindienst a last minute appeal from an ITT director which forecast devastating results from any widespread divestiture of some of the conglomerate's holdings.

In his letter, Flanigan also said he told Kleindienst of the arrival of a financial report favorable to ITT which Justice Department officials say had a strong influence on the decision not to carry the three antitrust suits to the Supreme Court.

The 48-year-old White House aide and friend of Kleindienst also said Kleindienst was present when the report, prepared by investment banker Richard J. Ramsden, was delivered to former Asst. Atty. Gen. Richard W. McLaren, now a federal judge.

On March 3, the day after the eight weeks of hearings were resumed, Kleindienst testified he could remember no conversations with White House aides about ITT.

Asked on March 8 about the Ramsden report, Kleindienst answered, "I had no conversations with Flanigan, though."

When Bayh asked him about that Thursday, Kleindienst said there was no discussion about the report's conclusions so he had no memory of being present upon its delivery.

Apollo 16 Makes Safe Return

ABOARD USS TICONDEROGA (AP)-Apollo 16's astronaut's splashed safely into the South Pacific Thursday, completing a 1.2-million-mile mission to the mountains of the moon. The Apollo commander reported: "The condition of the crew is outstanding."

The men, John W. Young, Charles M. Duke Jr. and Thomas K. Mattingly II, returned to their home planet with 245 pounds of rocks collected from lunar highlands formed billions of years before man walked the earth.

They thus fulfilled a mission that one week ago was almost cut short just before the moon landing-man's fifth-was made.

"You really got your money's worth on this one" Young told the people of his country.

The command ship Casper splashed down precisely on time at 2:44 p.m. EST within a mile of this carrier.

The spacecraft flipped upside down on landing, a common occurrence with Apollo landings, but the astronauts quickly uprighted it by inflating three tan balloons on the sharp point at the top of the cone-shaped craft. Swimmers leaped from hovering helicopters and stabilized the bobbing spacecraft with a sea anchor and a flotation collar.

There was no communcation with the astronauts while their craft was upside down in the water, but when it righted itself Young quickly reported the crew was fine.

"Just super," chimed in Duke.

President Nixon later called the astronauts from Key Biscayne, Fla., to congratulate them and give Duke and Mattingly military promotions. Duke, an Air Force lieutenant colonel, became a colonel, and Mattingly, a navy lieutenant commander, became a commander. Young is a Navy captain and congressional approval is required for the next rank, admiral.

"You did a great job and the entire nation is proud of you," Nixon told the spacemen.

"Thank you very much, Mr. President," Young responded.

Earlier, in a written statement, Nixon praised the astronauts for "a job well done."

"Their skill, their courage and their enthusiasm have written another proud chapter in the stirring story of mankind's struggle to unlock the mysteries of the unknown," Nixon said.

He added: "Rarely, if ever, has so much new information been made available to science in such a brief period. As the work of evaluation and analysis goes forward, the impact of Apollo 16 will be felt for many years to come."

Dr. George Lowe, deputy administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said Apollo 16 succeeded despite a series of problems.

"One week ago," he said, "we all had serious doubts whether Apollo 16 would be able to achieve its goals.

"Then we saw the Apollo engineering team spring into action... to save the mission," Lowe said at a news conference at the Manned Spacecraft Center in Houston. "Then the scientists had their turn. We saw explorers on the moon, aided by scientists here on earth, unravel the mysteries of the moon to add to our understanding and our knowledge of its composition, its structure, its evolution and its origin."

Wanted: Pot Smokers

BOSTON (AP) — Wanted, by two Boston doctors: Healthy males between 21 and 40 who smoke marijuana but have trouble falling asleep.

The subjects are wanted by Dr. Alberto DiMascio, associate professor of psychiatry at Tufts University Medical School, who has been awarded a $6,365 federal grant for studying the effects of marijuana on sleep.

The National Institute of Mental Health grant specifically calls for a one-year study of a chemical call THC as a sleep medication. Many researchers consider THC to be the active ingredient in marijuana.

DiMascio is being assisted by Dr. Kenneth Cousens of Boston State Hospital who is interviewing males as test subjects. Nine subjects will be used to study the dose level of THC at which sleep is consistently noted. Six others will be used in a comparative study with other drugs.

Federal regulations require that all subjects have previous experience with marijuana so that no new users are created. DiMascio says that requirement eliminates a control-group of non-users but that it is only a minor hindrance.

DiMascio says previous studies have observed a sedative effect of THC and noted that even in large doeses, the drug had proved to be nonlethal giving it an advantage over other sleep-inducing medications.

Respect of Demonstrators

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — An area will be reserved for anti-war demonstrators when the biennial Maine Republican Convention opens here Friday with Vice President Spiro T. Agnew as the keynoter.

"We're going to respect the demonstrators and we hope they'll respect our right to have a convention," the chairman of the state GOP committee Charles E. Moreshead of Augusta said Thursday.

Moreshead said the demonstrtors who are being spearheaded by the Maine branch of the Vietnam Veterans Against the War, will be given space on the grounds adjacent to the state armory, where the convention will be held.

An estimated 3,500 persons are expected to attend the opening of the two-day conclave. Because the armory only seats 2,500, a tent will be erected outside to handle the overflow.

The demonstrators plan a rally in capital park, and then will march to the armory where Agnew is scheduled to arrive after a late morning speaking engagement at the University of Maine in Orono.

Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis said he would not participate inthe rally, even though he had been invited. The Democratic governor said he would send the demonstrators' message.

Morehead said Agnew, who will be introduced by U.S. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith, R-Maine, will address the convention and then immediately depart by plane for Augusta State Airport.

Agnew will speak just a few hundred yards from the capitol where Edmund Muskie served as a legislator and governor, prior to becoming the first Democrat ever popularly elected to the U.S. Senate from Maine in 1958.

Maine was once a bastion of Republicanism, but in recent years the GOP has lost three of the four Congressional seats, and the governorship to the Democrats.

Moreshead predicted Thursday that the trend will change during Campaign '72.

Drug Overdose

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — On Dec. 17, 1971, a young man entered the Hotel Charles here and registered as Bruce Peck of Storrs, Conn.

A day later, he was found dead in his room, possibly of a drug overdose.

Since then, police have been unable to verify his identity or to find anyone who knew him or can offer a name or address.

Funeral services had been delayed in hopes someone would come forward with information. Even officials in Storrs, where the University of Connecticut is located, failed to come up with any leads.

Today the youth was to be buried at Hillcrest Park Cemetery in simple graveside services.

Student Teacher Relations

WARE, Mass. (AP) — The young couple found dead in a parked car here Wednesday morning were a teacher and a student at Quaboag Regional High School.

Police said the couple was found in the car, with its motor still running, by Walter Larzazs, who lives nearby.

Medical Examiner Dr. Kenneth E. Collard of Belchertown said death was accidental, due to carbon monoxide poisoning.

Linda J. Calkins, 17, of 135 West Main Street, was a senior at Quaboag. Paul J. Ethier, 24, of Maple Street, East Brookfield, was a mathematics teacher, a Worcester native who had been president of his class at Worcester State College.

Insurance Dividends

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co., is searching for thousands of its policyholders across the country.

The company said Wednesday there are 2,000 persons in Massachusetts alone with policies with cash values of about $38,000 who cannot be located.

Nationwide said the errant policies are valued at some $2 million. The firm said in most cases the policies are those of heirs or persons who have moved, or missed a few payments and forgotten about clauses that provide cash value.

More W. Mass. Drug Busts

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A 20-year-old Karlsruhe, Germany, man has been bound over to the Hampden County grand jury on narcotics charges.

Horst Webber, alias Paul Bunnell, was arrested earlier this month on charges of possession and sale of hashish.

Held in lieu of $10,000 bail, he was ordered bound over in district court action Wednesday.

Springfield police allege that Webber was found with a large quantity of hashish and thousands of dollars on his person when he was arrested April 12. They allege he had made several trips back and forth to Germany, and sold more than $7,000 worth of drugs in the days before his arrest.

War protestors hold hands in a circle around the flag pole on the New Haven Green as part of a protest against the war in Southeast Asia. About 100 people took part in the demonstration which was silent and peaceful. (AP)

At Least He Got Springfield

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — U.S. Rep. Edward P. Boland, D-Springfield, proved his vote-drawing power once again in Tuesday's presidential primary.

While the rest of the state gave U.S. Sen. George S. McGovern a sweeping victory in the presidential and delegate races, voters in Boland's Second Congressional District provided U.S. Sen. Edmund J. Muskie with his best showing in the state, according to nearly final vote totals.

McGovern won the 2nd District balloting, but only by a 6-to-5 margin, compared to his 5-to-2 margin statewide.

The Boland delegate slate, pledged to Muskie, swept to an easy victory, the only non-McGovern slate to do that in the state.

Oil Imports Challenged

BOSTON (AP) — State Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn announced today his office has filed suit challenging constitutionality of the federal oil import quota.

Quinn said in a statement prepared for a news conference that the suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Maine in conjunction with the New England Governor's Conference.

"Although my Consumer Protection Division had already prepared a bill of complaint for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts in an independent action," Quinn said, "we chose to consolidate with the governor's action in order to gain the greatest impact in asserting the rights of Massachusetts consumers."

Quinn said the oil import quota system costs Massachusetts' consumers $200 million annually.

School Of Ed. Council Needs Undergraduates

By KATHRYN GIRARD

The School Council of the School of Education was established by the Constitution as the main policy-making body of the School, with specific responsibility for academic matters (not assigned to the Graduate Assembly), program development, priorities, and resource allocation. It was the School Council that had the final say on the implementation of the Completely Modular Curriculum.

The School Council is a representative body. Each Center in the School has a representative and, in addition, there are elected at-large faculty, graduate student, and undergraduate student representatives. The School Council only works effectively when it has an active, truly representative membership.

Undergraduates are frequently affected by the decisions made by the Council (especially in the areas of resource allocation and program development). In the past, undergraduate representation on the Council has been-at-best-serendipitous and most often random and irregular. This year, there will be four undergraduate slots.

It is increasingly clear that this situation has to change. This year an attempt is being made to contact undergraduates through the School's Centers. Any undergraduate education major may be nominated, or may nominate himself/herself.

Nominations may be brought or sent to the School Council Office, Room 106 at the School, or may be phoned in to Ext. 5-1570. Nominations will be accepted through May 4. Voting will take place the week of May 8. Undergraduates may pick up a ballot from any Center or from the School Council Office.

Suggestions for improving this process would be welcomed.

Smith Coop Plans Long Life

One of the main outcomes of the Smith College two day "strike", aside from campaigning for McGovern or from the antiwar petition that was circulated through the faculty, was the formation of the Smith Action Cooperative. The Coop has an Office at the College (phone 413-584-2700 ext. 704 between 7 P.M. and 11 P.M. every night-more hours to be added) that was set up by this group of people manning the former two day "strike headquarters". The Cooperative is not a shortlived spring phenomenon; it is not a small group of elite with one limited cause.

The Cooperative is intended to act as a center for people to coordinate the various actions they are working on in the area, to keep in contact with each other and with the people at the five colleges, in the community, and in the greater New England and national scene. It is definitely intended to be a cooperative with no " president", "chairman" or person in charge. The idea is for the coordinators of various activities within this area to use the coop (i.e. they are the coop) as a center of communication and as a means of getting in contact with and coordinating their actions with other people who are into similar activities, thereby becoming more effective, we hope.

The British Approach To The Drug Problem

LONDON (AP)-A heroin addict who mistimed his last dose walked into a London clinic, twitching.

"You look awful," a doctor said. Then he handed out a legal narcotics prescription under the tax-subsidized National Health Program.

Once again a junkie had turned up just for another fix that could eventually kill him, rejecting the chance for free withdrawal treatment at a government hospital.

But at least there was no need for him to turn to crimes of violence to raise money for illegal drugs. And with legal narcotics available, there was less profit incentive for gangsters to start mass black market operations here.

He was taking advantage of Britain's system of treating addicts as patients rather than as criminals, a practice once denounced by former U.S. Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell as "the surrender approach."

There's a big question whether the British system could work in the United States, but evidence accumulates that it works tolerably well here, following some key revisions.

The number of addicts known to the government is declining. Perhaps more important, it is declining among the younger age groups.

Britain's drug situation pales by comparison to the U.S. problem. At its peak there were probably fewer than 4,000 addicts in this nation of 55 million, against perhaps 200,000 in New York City alone.

But the British addiction rate grew alarmingly over the past decade, calling the whole system into question and forcing some major changes.

The system was riddled with abuse. Rogue physicians privately overprescribed for registered addicts, who then sold their surplus to pay the rent or buy food, sometimes hooking a new young junkie.

A new law in 1968 limited the legal prescription of narcotics to government-run clinics. By 1969 the number of known addicts on hard drugs had dropped.

Part of the drop was due to a change in the method of recording addictions. The new system, in effect a census taken on the last day of the year, eliminated from that year's figures those addicts who had died, given up drugs, left the country or for any other reason had been deregistered. Previously these categories were listed as known addicts.

Abuses continued under the new system, often because hard-pressed doctors in National Health hospitals lacked the time or training to deal with addicts.

In the early days of the clinic system doctors were known to prescribe drugs for a new addict without even checking his arm for needle marks. An addict could give a urine sample to a "straight" friend, who could then qualify for drug prescriptions. By and large such abuses are dwindling.

"They're getting craftier at the clinics," an addict says. "In the beginning you could get a prescription just by shooting water in your veins."

"Clinics have to walk a tightrope," a Health Department spokesman said. "If they prescribe too little, the addict looks elsewhere; too much and he is tempted to feed the black market. But the clinics keep the balance about right."

Although fewer than 25 per cent of the clinics' patients opt for in-hospital withdrawal care, and many of them return later to drug use, the clinics can claim some success.

In setting up the clinics the government faced the possibility that addicts willing to get legal prescriptions from their own doctors would shy away from state-run clinics and look elsewhere.

Addicts themselves claim tighter control of drugs at government clinics has forced up the price of black market heroin-from a pound a grain in 1967 to 6 pounds or more today. That means a rise to $15.60 from $2.40.

To meet the black market, a law due to take effect later this year will sharply increase jail sentences and fines for drug pushers, while relaxing them for users.

Many British specialists doubt if the British control system would work in the United States.

Dr. P.H. Connell, director of the Maudsley Hospital's drug dependence clinic near London, says: "Our experience is that if there are other drugs available illegally, the addicts will want to "

Another British expert, a social worker, believes there is no real answer to the drug problem. "It is like a balloon," he says, "when you press it in one place it swells up in another-and always will."

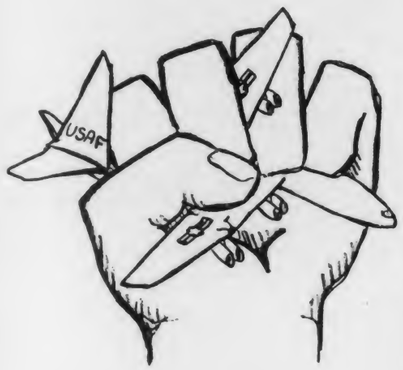
Thank You My Friends

As of Wednesday morning, with 73% of the votes counted, George McGovern had won the Massachusetts Democratic Primary with about 52% of the votes cast, beating Edmund Muskie by almost a 3 to 1 margin. But this victory was not accomplished without a lot of work from a lot of people. The fact that McGovern also swept the delegate race shows that the effort was statewide, rather than just in particular areas.

However, this article is addressed to those people who accounted for his success her at UMass, Amherst and the First District as a whole. Our organization here at UMass grew throughout the course of the year from 10 or 12 people to some 150, this week. It is these people in particular I would like to thank. Without the weekly canvassing, our upset in New Hampshire and our victory in Massachusetts would have been much less possible, and our support here on campus would have dwindled. Instead our support grew immensely and our victory in the first district and in Amherst in particular was accomplished.



There are those in particular I would like to thank. Rich Pierce, who kept out campus campaign financed without any outside help, and Bob Judge, who singlehandedly tackled the canvass throughout the campaign, are two people who were indispensable here on campus. I would also like to thank Peter Pelland who, as vice-chairman, was extremely helpful during the early stages and throughout the campaign, and David Joyce, who handled publicity and ran a busy headquarters on election day.

There were hundreds of others involved however and each knows how much he or she meant to the campaign and what we couldn't have done without his or her help. But there is one person in particular I would like to thank. Without his hard work and dedication, the UMass organization would never have started in the first place and an innumerable amount of votes would have been lost. That person is Ken Mosakowski, who ran the campaign in the early stages and was invaluable in the latter. It is only deserving that he should have a spot as a delegate to this year's Democratic convention in Miami, and I'm sure he'll use this position to its fullest capacity to get George S. McGovern elected President of these United States.

To those who have contributed to the campaign throughout the year, I thank you. Without your time and money it would have been impossible for us to accomplish the work we did.

To those students who voted for McGovern, you too should be thanked and congratulated for having the courage to stand up for your convictions. Every vote was necessary in order for us to win the way we did.

In ending this year's activities of Students for McGovern, I find myself with much less work and much more time. I also find myself looking forward to next September and the chance to sacrifice my time and effort once again.

Purge Has Begun

Last Tuesday night, the reappointment of Professor Michael Best was unanimously opposed (5-0) by a vote of the Personnel Committee in the Economics Department. The Personnel Committee rejected Professor Best's reappointment on the grounds that he fails to meet the minimum standards of competence in the field of economics.

Michael Best is an intelligent, perceptive, sensitive faculty member, whose unique ability to stimulate thought and to communicate knowledge is well known by all students of differing backgrounds and ideologies, fortunate enough to have attended Mike's classes.

The real issue in the Economics Department is not over Professor Best's competency (which has repeatedly been well attested to by scholars within Professor Best's discipline and by numerous student evaluations), rather, it is a question of true academic freedom and the role of an academic discipline within the University.

Should the University be responsive to the anti-intellectual biased-view of the power-brokers within the Economics Department or should one function of the University be to strive to meet the needs of the student body, struggling to broaden their knowledge and awareness of human conditions in a world which is too often found to be insensitive, unresponsive and complex?

I urge all students, familiar with Professor Best, to communicate your feelings to Dean Alfange, Mr. Gluckstern and Chancellor Bromery.

I urge the Administration to be aware of the anti-educational conditions within the department of Economics and the need for diversification.

And lastly I urge all people everywhere to be aware of the need for relevance in their educations and in their lives.

Hurricanes And Women

WASHINGTON–The National Hurricane Center has just released 14 feminine names for this season's storms. They are Agnes, Betty, Carry, Dawn, Edna, Felice, Gerda, Harriet, Illene, Jane, Kara, Lucille, Mae and Nadine. The names, according to the NHC, are picked by computer and no slurs are intended. But some Women's Lib organizations have complained about our weather people naming hurricanes after women. I spoke to Prof. Fitz Folgelhammer, one of the leading hurricane-watchers in the United States, who said that while he is sympathetic to the complaints of some women, he feels it is impossible to describe hurricanes except in feminine terms.

"The hurricane, as you know, is a storm over water attaining diameters of several hundred miles, following a curbed path away from the equator. When fully developed, these tropical cyclones can cause untold damage to shipping and the shoreline. The cold dry air mixed with the warm moist air and moving in a circular pattern can come on without warning.

"Any man who is married can appreciate why we have named our hurricanes after women."

"It does seem to fit," I agreed.

"We name our hurricanes in hopes of personalizing them so people will pay attention to where the hurricanes are going. If we named them after men, no one would care about them until it was too late. If we called our hurricanes Max or Charley or Arthur or Spiro, they would be ignored. But when we say Hurricane Agnes is on her way, people immediately start to batten down the hatches."

"You're saying that people are more afraid of women then they are of men?"

"Yes, especially during storm conditions. An angry woman is like a hurricane. When the barometer drops, she starts blowing in all directions."

"I've seen it happen," I said.

"It's impossible to get the same storm effect in a man. A man's anger may begin as a hurricane, but it usually blows out to sea before it reaches typhoon conditions."

"How do you explain that?"

"Well, women tend to store up tremendous atmospheric pressure during the daytime when they are dealing with the house and the children. As soon as the husband comes home from work, all this pressure is suddenly released, causing large vortical circulations on all the frontal zones. During these storms most men try to head for the basement for safety, but they very rarely make it."

"So that's why they decided to name hurricanes after women!"

"I don't want you to think it was premeditated. What happened was that quite some time ago, a weatherman named McAlphin stationed down in Key West spotted a hurrican coming up from Cuba. He immediately called his superior in Miami to report it. The superior asked him to describe the hurricane to him, and McAlphin without thinking said, 'It looks just like my wife, Gretchen.'

"The superior sent a message to Washington on his telex announcing that a hurricane named Gretchen was about to hit the Florida coast. This information was released to the press which, in the past, had refused to give much space to hurricanes. But now with a name on it, a feminine name at that, all the papers picked up the story. The weather people were so pleased they decided to name all their hurricanes from that day on after women."

"Then there was nothing sexist in the decision?"

"Of course not. We're all serious people. Everyone knows a hurricane is a feminine phenomenon. There is no other scientific way to describe it. When we get a protest about naming a hurricane after a woman, it inevitably comes from someone who has never personally seen one."

Their Truth Goes Marching On

BY FRANK BAGLIONE

Monday, April 24.

The ROTC cadets felt slightly disoriented when they entered the executive offices of the university administrators in Whitmore. It was like nothing they had ever seen before on the campus– thick carpets; modern, tasteful office furniture; elegant secretaries; artsy little paintings hung on paneled walls. This was the world of the men and women who ran the university, a world where the atmosphere was sterile with importance and everyone spoke in the reserved "professional quiet" dialect.

The cadets, seven in number and accompanied by a writer for Poor Richard's, had a four o'clock appointment with Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery to discuss the status of Dickinson Hall, presently being occupied by a political group calling themselves the "Coalition Against Oppression." A portion of Dickinson is used for ROTC classes, but while the anti-oppressionists held the building, calling it the "Center for Social Change", the cadets were being prohibited by this group from attending their instruction.

After waiting thirty minutes for the Chancellor the group of cadets was brought to his office, but they did not see Bromery. Instead, Provost Dave Bishoff and a member of the Chancellor's staff met them, explaining that the Chancellor was still tied up in talks with members of a negotiating team from the "Center for Social Change." Bishoff could only repeat some history of the affair to the cadets; he could not hint at any solutions. For the manner in which the problem would be resolved, one suspected, was then in the process of being determined by the people who ran the university and the people who had taken over the building. And somewhere beyond the cozy, little boardroom where their fate was being pondered over Coca-Cola and Virginia tobacco, the cadets were left cooling their heels in the Chancellor's office turned anteroom.

In time the ROTC men were given their moment in the boardroom, a chance to sit in the seats already warmed up for them by the social changers and to face the big man and his negotiating staff. They asked the Chancellor when they would be allowed to attend their classes once more, and they wanted to know why the administration had allowed the occupation of Dickinson to continue this long. The students had voted to end the strike, and yet a small group of people proclaiming a keener insight and knowledge of what was morally correct, had forcefully occupied a building which they felt, in their intuitive righteousness, was being used for evil purposes. The cadets, however, felt that their judgement had been too harsh. They did not feel "evil" for attending the university under the ROTC program. Evil might more properly be discovered, they inferred, in the conspiracy of university administration and the directors of social change to use ROTC as a pawn in their political games.

The Chancellor could have been patronizing to this group of cadets, but he chose, rather, to be firm. He had, after all, spent what must have been a trying weekend negotiating with the self-appointed spokesmen for moral good. He must have just heard a long list of "non-negotiable" demands from the social changers that would have required him to do everything from ending imperialism to funding non-sexist day care centers. He no doubt felt unequal to the task, so even the cadets simple request that he return Dickinson Hall to normal university use seemed a grave issue demanding the most solemn consideration.

Then, giving up the image of the noble but somewhat cringing administrator, the Chancellor advised the cadets that he could not do anything that might upset the campus, polarize the different factions, and possibly lead to the injury of some people. His was the responsibility to safeguard all the people at the university. The suggestion of one cadet that if the university administration would not act then the cadets would be forced to, only intensified the Chancellor's maternal instinct. "I will not respond to threats from you any more than I would respond to threats from them (the social changers)! I will make the final decision on the best means to handle this situation." The shocked cadet replied that all he had meant by the remark was that they would seek legislative help and legal counsel if the university allowed the occupation of Dickinson to continue. The Chancellor had to remind himself that he was not facing that other group, that more aggressive "Committee Against Aggression."

It had been evident from the start that the Chancellor was unable or unwilling to give the cadets assurances that the building would be liberated for the university's use. The testimony by members of the Chancellor's negotiating staff that they recognized the justness of the cadets' requests and were aware that the actions of the social changers violated their rights, was of little comfort to the cadets. They must have harbored a secret wish that the apostles of anti- oppression had occupied these pleasant office suites instead of Dickinson. Then how long would they have been allowed to remain? But they had not, no, "morality" was sitting squarely in their backyard, and the best the Chancellor could do was to say that he had refused to negotiate further with the social changers until they left Dickinson and that he planned to have Dickinson Hall open by Tuesday morning. What if they refused to leave? But the Chancellor would say no more, he would not explain, as we found out later, that a deal had been made.

Earlier that day when the writer from Poor Richard's had gone to visit the "Center for Social Change," he had first come upon these cadets as they scurried from one officer's room to another trying to avoid the harrassment and abuse that greeted them on contact with their "brothers and sisters" of moral good. They had agreed to allow the writer to accompany them to the Chancellor's meeting and invited him to look around Dickinson and see some social change. The writer found that social change on this small scale meant replacing the "men's" and "women's" signs on the doors of the toilets with cute, little handwritten signs that read "people." Social change meant "security" guards posted at the doors to see who came in and out, and social change meant having a "tail" follow you about in your tour of the building should you not be one of the "elect" who ruled this place. Social change meant classes on "sexism in the military" being held in the corridors where a young man, simply exuding egoism from his filthy pours, was saying, "judging from my experience with WAFS that I have met....and I'm thinking I've met quite a few...." Social change meant chairs being used to bar entrance at certain doors. Social change meant a small group of people dictating what could be taught at the university. Social change meant no change at all.

John Bretlinger, Philosophy Department.

Later that night the writer returned to Dickinson when a mass meeting was to decide whether to leave the building as the Chancellor had requested. A woman there told him that they would not leave unless they were given another building for their center. Then, as he walked along the corridor he was fingered by a young man tastefully dressed in an army field jacket and patch-ridden dungarees. "There's ————————," he announced, and groups gathered talking loudly about the critic in their midst. As the writer paused to greet Attorney Howland standing in the corridor, a short, angry looking woman came from one of the rooms. "So you're ————————," she said looking him over. "There's something I've been wanting to ask you." The writer smiled and awaited the probing inquiry. What imposing social question would he be confronted with? What evil must he confess? She looked up at him and said, "Are you a student here?" Such relief. He wanted to embrace her, and laugh, and let human warmth wash back and forth between them. How had they let such an absurd situation come to pass? How had the fitfull urge to do good engendered such animosity and anger and suspicion. Like her, he was for good and against evil; pity that their "goods" were so unlike.

"Yes," the writer said, "I am a student."

The conversation seemed to end there, limply giving up its life. Why had she asked that question? Could she not believe that a student at a great Northeast university would spend his energy opposing groups like theirs which enjoyed such vogue in these times? Did she not allow a student the ability to discriminate between a group, its actions and its aims? Must a student swallow this entire hodge-podge of social meanderings and sanctimonious posturing, this moral elitism and self- righteous ignorance, without once gagging on its bitter arrogance. Must a student accept sloppy thinking and a closed minded intolerance; is he required to blind himself to the ugly vindictive vengeance because it is all, all, done in the name of good, of morality? Who judges our judges?

So the writer moved on amid sneers and jeering voices. He had not one "tail," he had several. He felt the venom building in their wildly moving mouths. He had done it again; he had spoiled the party, cruel intruder on adolescence. As he began to leave someone asked if he had a tail. A young woman who had been making 5th-grade-type finger gestures behind his back acknowledged her duty.

"Are you my tail?" the writer asked with a grin.

"Yes," she answered, "I'm your tail and she hated him, this young woman with a red headband around her hair, clad in a blue shirt and blue slacks that clung so tightly to her budding body that her abdomen looked like the hard prow of a gunboat. She hated him right here in the "Center for Social Change."

Saga Of Quickbucks

Theda strolled rather arrogantly across the filthy wooden floor of Quickbucks. Suddenly an insipient Boy-child swept past him on his way, apparently, to the john in the rear. The only thing Theda captured sight of in the whir that passed was a small lapel pin with a radio station tastefully placed upon it. The Boy-child was, in fact, older than Theda. He was a graduate student at the big University down the road and didn't come to Quickbucks often; not because he wasn't old enough, but rather than looking fourteen year old was a genuine deterent to his entry. But not only was it difficult for him to get in Quickbucks, the Boy-child found it difficult to get into the wealth which abounded within its hallowed doors. He whirred past Theda on his way to the john, but on his way to the bar, Boy-child had finally made a scoop. She sat on one of the long-wooden benches, almost lost to the darkness and the noise. The capped lad probably wouldn't have even noticed her if she didn't spent three-quarters of her time pouting while picking the split ends of her shoulder-length hair. She picked with authority, or so it seemed from across the room. This girls also didn't come to Quickbucks often for honestly being under age, her entrances were immediately thwarted by the blonde bouncer at the door. Yet tonight, on a stroke of luck, her phony ID made it past the obviously distracted bouncer and she felt exhilerated as in joining the assembled multitude who cruised and talked. That was earlier, now she was bored. The vening brought her little of what she was told Quickbucks so elegantly contained. Not once did a gentleman approach her, she caught some eyes, mind you, but hardly worth note. This girl, who was named Brenda had very high standards. They were based upon the visible trappings of those who surrounded her and tonight Quickbucks was very much not consistent with her level of quality. There were far too many flannel, wool and CPO shirts than necessary, and they weren't even Pendletons or Puritans. Nor did any slacks or sweaters speak of any quality beyond the ordinary. The trappings bored Gloria.

That was until Boy-child rambled through. Boy-child had the habit of pouring it on too strong. Fortunately enough he was so innocuous to being with that his overbearing nature compensated for his vacant personality. Gloria was first turned off by his authoritative manner, his sing-song voice, the PF Flyers he wore on his feet, but most of all the obvious juvenile look he suffered from She. She felt as if they were out after their junior high school prom and were sitting in the back of his uncle's barroom watching all the older people carry on. But rather than sit alone, she wanted him to stay and agreed to let him buy her a beer, that is if she could convince the man at the bar he was twenty-four years old.

Completely oblivious to this was Louella, getting more and more drunk and depressed while listening to Burnsie babble. Theda was only taunting her with his good looks. She hated her infactuations, they only effectively made her lose her perspective. She smiled ironically when Theda passed by and suddenly decided her mind was ready for a change. She wasn't going to be the passive little girl she had always been, now was her time for action. She stood up, bellowed loudly at Burnsie and went in the opposite direction of her prey.

Meanwhile, Brenda sat a bit bored waiting for Boy-child to return. It was taking Boy-child quite some time to secure two beers simply because his slight stature was dwarfed by the cumbersome louts who stood around the bar. He finally bought his beer and began the long, perilous walk back. As he moved between an obviously self-possessed couple, he lost his balance and began to fall back. Suddenly his small frame was stabilized by another.

"Whooahh," he heard. He turned and saw Loulla. Their eyes crossed. They had seen each other before, in a photography class once, non-verbally and acknowledged their presence. Boy-child was fascinated, enthralled enough as to forget about Burnsie waiting patiently, and wanted to speak to Louella of love and life and other good things. She wasn't impressed, she had this type before and looked down before passing onward in search of the elusive Theda.

Evaluating The Past Week

Last week the call for a Student Strike went out and many students here on campus responded. Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the Strike was an obvious working force here on campus, then on Thursday night the Strike fell apart. The focus moved then to the occupation of Dickinson Hall and the cry for removal of ROTC from campus and the establishment of a Social Action Center. The latter demand became a reality this past Monday with the University's allocation of the first floor of Munson Hall as the Center. The second demand also may become a reality. For an analysis of the movement this last two weeks, see pages sixteen and seventeen.

pages sixteen and seventeen

Send A Boy To Camp

Merle Miller has stated that "a fag is a homosexual gentleman who left the room," and his comment has led to the imputus of the Gay Liberation Movement. This Weekend the forces of militant homosexuality will gather on campus for a Gay Festival. For an analysis of some of the pressures and admitted homosexual faces in our society see page fifteen. To quote a tired but true cliche "you don't have to be happy to be gay" and it is more true now than ever before.

You Lose, We Win

Sorry to say, nobody was able to identify our five mystery musicians, however, in the future we will hold a similar contest with a bit more recognizable celebrities. This week as always we have a host of new releases being considered by our crack team of reviewers: Bruce Aller takes a look at the latest from Delaney and Bonnie, Mike Kostek handles a pair of reviews on Quicksilver's downward progression and David Peel's most recent contribution, Bill Kroll let's us know of the whereabouts of Garry Burton while Bill Densmore and Jeff Clayton respectively critique Cold Blood and Rory Gallagher. All this and more may be found on the album pages, 18 and 19.

pages eighteen and nineteen

And Apathy Reigns Supreme

There is relief, dear reader, from the barrage of social oriented articles which are liberally sprinkled, although not in attitude, throughout this issue. On page twelve Turning Points are turned over to director Stanley Kubrick and his defense of "X" rated films. Page fourteen has a look at the Amherst Folklore Center and at David Bromberg who is appearing there this evening. Philip Christopher, jumping back a page, analyzes the Pennsychusetts primary and where, oh, where, has Edmund Muskie's strength gone? Beyond are album reviews and two pages of concert reviews. First Mike Kostek treks to the bowels of Springfield, known to some as the Allman Brothers/Doctor John Concert; and Jim Lavrakas covers two campuses for his review of a drunk Dave Van Ronk and a garrulous Little Latin Larry. Frank Johnson explores the world of Stereo journalism, and Weekend fills things out on the back.

Their Truth Goes Marching On (Con't)

As the writer left the building with a friend (who by now had begun to feel more like a bodyguard) he met some of the cadets who had wasted two hours with the Chancellor earlier in the day. They had heard the Chancellor might come that night to talk to the social changers, but they did not know how he would persuade them to leave. It was all really simple, however, and it did not require the Chancellor's presence; it was all part of the deal "to safeguard all the people at the university."

By Tuesday everyone would know. In exchange for their leaving the building the social changers would be given space in another building and funding. In addition, the Chancellor made a "personal" statement expressing his doubts as to the propriety of ROTC on campus, as if by saying it was a personal opinion we could separate it from the official position of the administration with any more ease than we can separate Agnew's personal statements from the vice-presidency. And President Wood of the university was convinced by someone to ask the Board of Trustees to consider the matter of ROTC at a special meeting in Boston.

It was a tremendous victory for the radicals in the "Center for Social Change." There was, of course, the possibility that by being accepted, indeed institutionalized, and funded they would be swallowed whole by the system and rendered an ineffective reform group rather than a full-blown social revolution. But for the moment, they had been delivered an impressive victory. Their tactic had paid off, and had done so handsomely.

The writer was not terribly surprised at the outcome. Such things were in the wind. And anyway it reinforced something he had always believed, something a professor had once told him: "There are only three things that people really respect," the retired army man had said, "Fear, force, and violance." In varying degrees the social changers had used all three and had proved that they are used in a number of ways and under different labels. But it is all the same, the forceful occupation of a building, the possibility and fear of violence. All in the name of good, which we are all for, and all against evil, which we all condemn. Social change is nothing new, the themes remain the same.

She looked up at him and said, "Are you a student here!"

Correspondence's To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

It had seemed that this magazine had seen the last of Frank Baglione following his moronic utterings about the Women's Liberation Movement, so obviously played to the hilt in this publication (which I can't quite take myself to call a rag simply because some of my students fees help publish it). But apparently I was wrong and again Norman Mailer Junior made his ways into Poor Richard's, this time on he front page last week. He may find satisfaction from being glib about some important issues, he may very much enjoy always playing the jester and never taking anything but his own hollow rhetoric seriously, but there are points to which even the most tolerant reader finally finds himself irked. To label the proceedings Tuesday night, when the Student Strike attempted to take some form, in the manner Baglione did was to not look at thesituation with any objectivity. Rather he played up his own silly, preconceived notions, most of which fall short of being worthy of an intelligent mind's consideration.

To pick and choose almost unrelated incidents and tie them together reeks of unprofessionalism. Baglione has about as much ight to call himself a respectable journalist as Mayor Daley does a democratic politician. He uses the language effectively enough, which means to say he makes for entertaining reading, but he is so far consistently off target that his mutterings amount to empty diversion. Baglione, for starters, never addresses himself to an issue, only comments upon why he things things are wrong. His piece on Women's International Day was filled ob biased inaccuracies, most of which hid his most obvious glaring error. He never said anything. Last week, too, the same problem came to pass. Very funny stuff, Frank, but when are you planning on addressing yourself to what people are saying and doing? When are you going to stop commenting on the superficialities of situations and begin to get into issues? It is about time this supposedly enlightened reporter begins to apply some of the intellectual training universities can bring into the minds of small men. The fact that the woman from the Women's Caucus became very emotional in speaking was no reason for Baglione to label her actions ax being similar to those Nikita Kruschev used in 1960. It was typical, though, of the red-baiting conservatives like Baglione enjoy so much. Then to state that Gil Salk was acting out of little else than ego-satisfaction is to not understand anything about il Salk, but then again Baglione doesn't understand anything about anybody who happens to be anywhere left of his neolithic position.

Conservatism is essential to a democracy, but reactionary pettiness is not. The Left in this country has come a good distance since being labeled "dupes" only a few years ago. It is most unfortunate that today these feelings are cloistered in ridicule paragons of virtue Baglione seems to expound in reams. Sometime in the future may Baglione look back upon his infantile forays in nastiness, may he see himself as the small-minded, ego-centered, self-righteous bore many of us find him. Poor Richard's is a fine idea, it is too bad its pages are demeaned with the often slanderous attacks of Baglione.

David Casside

To the Editor:

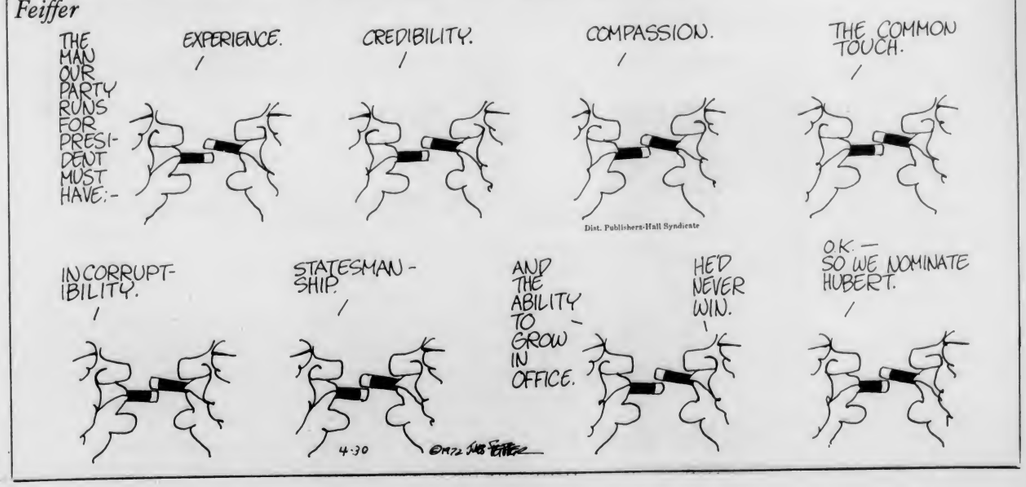
Last weekend concluded Earth Week '72. As predicted in last week's Collegian, it has come and gone without the fanfare it aroused two years ago. However, there is no less cause for people's concern to slacken--our earth's problems are far from solved. Regardless of how insignificant one person may seem, I agree with John Kirkpatrick and Josh Gordon that, "There should be no doubt that the individual can make a difference." Along with the awareness that developed from Earth Week '70 emerged instances of many companies developing products with false claims of being ecologically sound, In their article, The Unnatural Acts of Businessmen, Kirkpatrick and Gordon informed the individual how he may help the environment by more careful shopping. Due to false advertising, you may be using products which actually are harmful to the environment. Since ecology affects every one of us every day, it is the individual's responsibility to become more conscious of his personal obligation to take care of the earth.

Jacquie Barth

To the Editor:

The sensibilities of the students on this campus have been subjected to the juvenile bombastic fascism of Frank Baglione for an entire year now and I have finally gotten pissed off enough about it to write this letter of protest. If you ask me the kind of vendetta which Baglione comes out with should not be published in any self-respecting newspaper (which of course Poor Richard's is).

Not one of his articles which I have tried to digest (after which I invariably gulp down three Alka-Seltzers) has been in the least bit constructive. All he seems capable of doing is attacking things without ever saying anything positive about anything. Two good examples of this were his recent articles on the women's march and the strike meeting on Tuesday night. How dare this infantile punk criticize those fine sensitive people who participated in these actions from his self- righteous ivory tower. What has this bastard ever done to help the oppressed poverty-stricken people of this world? Most likely never a god-damn thing! His perverted sense of ethics is so pathetic that it makes one want to vomit all over the pages which carry his mutterings.



If you ask me, Baglione is just plain sick and should promptly admit himself into an insane asylum. His depravity has ruined my breakfasts for too many weeks. I am sure that in such an institution he would find himself far more at home than he does now on a University campus.

There is probably some psychological explanation in terms of repressed childhood desires which account for Baglione's junk, but this does not justify his polluting the minds of the rest of us normal people.

Turning Points

The following is a letter from Stanley Kubrick, published in The Detroit News on April 9, in response to that newspaper's recently announced policy of banning all X-rated and unrated motion pictures from their editorial and display advertising pages.

The same policy exists in The Cincinnati Enquirer; The Cleveland Plain Dealer; The Boston Herald-Traveler; The Oklahoman Times, Oklahoma City; The Desert News, Salt Lake City; The State Journal-Register, Springfield, Ill.' The Reno-Evening Gazette and Nevada State Journal, Reno, Nevada. Other restrictions, notably meager advertising space, are also imposed by The Miami News; The Miami Herald, The San Diego Union & Tribune; The American & Statesman, Austin, Texas; The Ft. Worth Star-Telegram; The Houston Chronicle; The Arkansas Gazette, Littlerock and The Scranton Times.

If you or your readers are concerned with this issue and are familiar with any of the above-mentioned newspapers, a letter written to the editor would be an important and effective way of making your views felt.

Dear Sir:

The Detroit News terms its decision to refuse to give space to advertising, publishing or reviewing "X"-rated or unrated rilms "a modest declaration." To me, it seems rather to be an irrational diktat. In its emphasis on protection and purification, on purging the public mind of what "in our judgment," are motion pictures of a pornographic nature, it recalls the words of another arbiter of public morals and national taste who said: "Works of art which cannot be understood and need a set of instructions to justify their existence, and which find their way to neurotics receptive to such harmful rubbish, will no longer reach the public. Let us have no illusions: we have set out to rid the nation and our people of all those influences threatening its existence and character."

The speaker was Adolph Hitler, commenting on two art exhibitions in Munich, in 1937, one of "approved" German art, and the other of so-called "degenerate" art. In this day and age, the Detroit News censors may feel better equipped to make such fine distinctions – though I do not envy their task. But what they are doing is, in essence, the same.

A film is made to be seen by the public. In order for this to be done, the public must be made aware of its existence. When you decide to see a film, you do not turn on the radio or television, hoping to see it advertised; you look in the newspaper. There is no substitute for newspaper advertising in informing the public of a film's existence and its whereabouts. If a newspaper denies some films of which it does not approve the right to advertise, while allowing competing films to purchase as much space as they like, then the newspaper is effectively suppressing the films it does not like.

For all practical purposes, a film is banned when the public is prevented from knowing of its existence or whereabouts. To start to ban films – or books, or plays, or any medium of free expression on the grounds of offensiveness is to take the first step on a course that history shows has ended in a suppression of many other liberties.

For any newspaper to deliberately attempt to suppress another equally important communications medium seems especially ugly and short-sighted. I am not a Constitutional expert, but I should guess that this is a violation of the First Amendment. It is certainly an act inimical to the principles of freedom without which the newspaper itself could not exist.

It is important to understand that the "X" rating is designated by the Motion Picture Association of America and does not stigmatize or condemn a film, but merely places it in the adult film category, allowing no one under 17 (18 in some states) to view it. This category is consistent with the U.S. Supreme court opinion that only the morals of minors are vulnerable and must be protected. There is no power, legal or otherwise, which should be exercised against the rights of adults to select their own entertainment.

In addition to the anti-democratic principles involved in the position of the Detroit News, the indiscriminateness and arbitrariness of its edict is illustrated by the banning of my film, "A Clockwork Orange," from its display advertising and editorial pages. The film has been awarded the New York Film Critics prize for "Best Film of the Year" and "Best Director of the Year," and it has been nominated for Academy Awards as "Best Picture," "Best Director," "Best Screenplay," and "Best Editing." Yet the Detroit News censors would indiscriminately defame and discredit all "X" films because they do not conform to what they judge to be the standards of their readers; but even if they are so sure of the rightness of their judgments of a vast variety of fiims, are they so overwhelmingly certain, in this age of diverse social attitudes, of what their readers regard as "offensive" to them? Many readers may find their purification program offensive. They may find that they are censoring their readers rather than their advertisers; that they are imposing their judgment in an arbitrary and exclusive fashion, upon the right to be informed, yet at the same time, to exercise free choice, which is one of the reasons, and by no means the least important one, why one buys a newspaper.

High standards of moral behavior can only be achieved by the example of right-thinking people and society as a whole, and cannot be maintained by the coercive effect of the law. Or that of certain newspapers.

Yours very truly,
STANLEY KUBRICK

The Detroit News announces today that, effective next Sunday, it no longer will publish display advertising — or give editorial publicity to — X-rated motion pictures and those other unrated pictures which, in our judgment, are of a pornographic nature.

Delayed for one week to give theaters time to find alternative advertising space, a new Detroit News code includes:

Rejection of display advertising, regardless of copy content, from general entertainment movie houses when such advertising is in support of films carrying the X-rating of the Motion Picture Association of America (MPA);

An "information only" restriction applicable to our daily Movie Guide under which houses periodically showing X films will be permitted to list only the name of the theater and picture, the cast, the fact of the X rating and the hours of performance;

Complete exclusion from display advertising and the Movie Guide of all material from those movie houses which habitually show only unrated "adult" films or those with MPA's X rating;

Removal from our entertainment pages of all publicity stories, reviews and other promotion material (including listings in The News' own film ratings) of both X-rated and the unrated pornographic films. General news developments concerning such pictures, of course, will be reported.

We anticipate varied objections to this program.

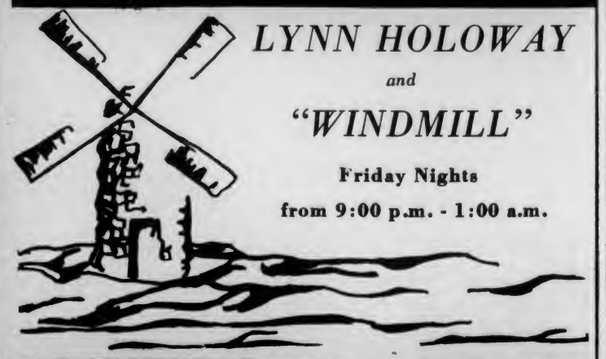
Some will fault us as "not with it," as defenders of a defunct moral code. Our answer is that, in our view, a sick motion picture industry is using pornography and an appeal to prurience to bolster theater attendance; quite simply, we do not want to assist them in the process.

It may be said that we are restricting exhibitors' "rights" to publicize films which the courts have refused to ban as obscene. Disregarding our views on the "nothing can be done about it" court approach to obscenity, we would reply that no judge so far has said that a newspaper is required to help sell tickets for such films.

Many will feel we are not going far enough, that the X-rated should be barred from our Movie Guide and that similar bans should apply to many films with R or other ratings which also may be offensive. Our answer is that we will continue the Movie Guide listing so that neighborhood movie patrons who do not wish to attend an X film can be advised and avoid it. We agree that some R and other movies also are offensive but, for the time being, we plan to concentrate our restriction on those films which the industry itself classifies as unsuitable for nonadult viewers.

We anticipate no movie industry cleanup as a result of our decision. Although we are the largest newspaper in the country to have taken such a step, we recognize that other advertising vehicles are available to the exhibitors both within and outside Detroit. Perhaps the only result will be in our own satisfaction in a modest declaration against the theory that makes hardcore sex, voyeurism and sadistic violence the prime ingredients of art and entertainment in the 1970's.

News of another bootleg: In England, a bootleg Who album called Closer to the Queen Mary. It's a recording of their last American tour, six tracks in all. Included are songs from Who's Next and one unrecorded or unreleased song entitled "Naked Eye." It's expensive, selling close to nine dollars.



The latest with John Lennon is that his next album will be all live. One side will be called Live at the Fillmore East with Frank Zappa, the other is Live at the John Sinclair Benefit in Detroit. John, the last we heard, has just completed another pro-Irish song, called "Sunday, Bloody Sunday."

The Band's live album is just about ready to be released. The recording was taken from their concert at the New York Academy of Music, late last December. Also expected to be included are some tracks with Bob Dylan, who happened to drop by during their New Year's Eve show. Dylan, meanwhile, is thinking of touring this summer. His new album on Columbia should just about be ready, too.

Keith Richard on bootlegging: "Bootlegging is a drag. It could have been a really groovy thing. I don't see how it ever had a chance. It immediately went into the hands of rip-off artists. Bootlegging is a fantastic idea, if you've got a reasonably good recording of a concert, put it out in a plain cover and charge a reasonable price. There were people charging more than a regular release. Which is a fucking rip-off."

The Pennsylchusetts Primary Nixes Muskie

By PHILIP CHRISTOPHER

"Think where man's glory most begins and ends, and then say my glory was I had such friends."

Senator George McGovern, quoting the Irish poet Yeats, savored the sweet taste of overwhelming victory here in Massachusetts last Tuesday night. By sweeping the Bay State and collecting all 102 delegates to the Democratic convention, the South Dakota Senator achieved what seemed virtually impossible only two months ago. . .he became the undisputed frontrunner for the Democratic nomination.

In Pennsylvania, meanwhile, Senator Hubert Humphrey scored the first primary victory of his long career, impressively edging out Edmund Muskie and injecting a much needed boost in his comeback campaign.

But the real winner last Tuesday has to be George McGovern. In Pennsylvania's presidential preference count he scored fourth, yet only one percentage point behind Muskie and Wallace, the second and third place candidates. In the delegate count, however, McGovern came in a strong second, capturing 37 to Muskie's 31 and Wallace's 2. Humphrey swept first with 58 delegates. McGovern's upstaging of last Tuesday, then, is based on the fact that he cornered over 60% of all delegates elected in the Massachusetts and Pennsylvania contests.

According to political analysts, last Tuesday was the beginning of Phase II in the presidential primaries. It was the first assault on the large Eastern states with their masses of blue collar workers and minority groups. It was here, in the Northeast, that candidates would see the writing on the wall.

Edmund Muskie was the first to read. Tuesday's results can be interpreted as stunning, perhaps fatal. The "Man from Maine" was unable to salvage even honor as results poured in. With the backing of the established Democratic machines in both states, Muskie had predicted a poor showing in the popular vote yet drove home the fact that it was delegates that were important. . .and that they were.

Undoubtedly the underdog, Muskie must now decide just how long to play the game. His claim that he is everyone's second choice is beginning to sink. As primary after primary tags him a loser, less will be inclined to turn toward him at Miami. The Democrats, wracked in 1968, need, above all else, a candidate with appeal. Whatever Muskie's may be, it's not showing.

In Florida, he blamed his poor showing on regional issues and the racist attraction of George Wallace. In Wisconsin, he charged that Republican crossovers inflated the vote totals of McGovern and Wallace in an attempt to embarrass the party. In New Hampshire, where his showing was less than desired, he attacked the media for picking on the frontrunner.

But in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania, Muskie could drag out no excuses. He was soundly wiped. The two states represented the nation as a whole as no other states possibly could. Massachusetts provided the left of center audience while Pennsylvania provided the candidates with a population or workers. Both states had large minority groups: a heavy concentration of blacks in the Philadelphia area, Irish, Italians and Puerto Ricans in Boston. It was as close to a microcosm of the nation as could be expected with the exception perhaps of a farm vote. Muskie ran poorly with all walks of life. His political endorsements, which he spent a year collecting, were meaningless.

The Maine Senator now travels to Ohio, a state very much like Pennsylvania. There he will meet head on with Hubert Humphrey and George McGovern. Again flaunting the support of Democratic regulars in the Midwestern state, Muskie continues to hope against reality.

Hubert Humphrey, on the other hand, is riding his hopes to more solid realizations. His victory in Pennsylvania will undoubtedly strengthen his support within labor unions across the nation. Last Tuesday Hubert looked the serious contender for the first time. With an expected victory in Ohio, Humphrey could easily stem the McGovern tide and enter the convention in July in the strongest position.

Humphrey, nevertheless, has an uphill fight. The pains of his 1968 defeat to President Nixon are not easily forgotten. Combined with Muskie's sharp drop and the inability of other moderate candidates to emerge, the extremes (McGovern and Wallace) are faring better than expected.

And that has been the story of the campaign to this point: what is called the anti-establishment vote. Unlike the 1968 campaign, this vote does not center on solely one issue, nor is it made up simply of one group. There is general dissatisfaction throughout the grain of American society and primary results are reflecting this mistrust in government.

Neither McGovern nor Wallace, in the minds of the voter, has been associated with those in power. Hence their spectacular ability to draw the votes of the discontent from all walks of American life.

The frontrunner: George McGovern

McGovern recently has been trying to change his image as a leftist candidate. Judging his success is difficult. Are his blue collar supporters simply striking out against the "politicians" that have delivered nothing but more promises? Or is he actually building a permanent base outside of the anti-war movement? The results from New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Massachusetts tend to support the latter.

But McGovern is now saddled with all of the problems of the frontrunner. Leaving the East, where he must have expected most of his strength, he must now sustain the surge so as not to peak in the same position Muskie did: nowhere.

Up until this point, McGovern's strategy, besides being the most successful, has been the shrewdest. He has carefully chosen his targets and has continually shown expertise in attacking them. His speeches, while being unexciting, have been consistently aimed at issues which grate the behinds of all who sit in this dear nation. Having chosen his states for maximum gain, he has until now avoided any serious "losses."

The momentum is definitely his. Even second place to Humphrey in Ohio can be considered adding to his bandwagon, as Humphrey enters the state with heavy union support. While McGovern is now in a strong position, it may be said that Humphrey is in the better position. For if the South Dakotan falters in the weeks ahead, the former Democratic nominee stands to pick up the momentum and ride it into the convention, now only two months away.

Prospects for an open convention seem more feasible now that Massachusetts and Pennsylvania have voiced their concerns. Surprisingly enough, Muskie more than anyone else now needs a truly open convention if his "second choice" strategy is to have any hope.

With McGovern, Wallace, Humphrey and Muskie sharing the primary delegates, one would tend to predict that there will be no first ballot nominee. However that would be discourting the large number of uncommitted delegates which are presently eyeing developments like vultures waiting for the last bead of sweat to dry. If either Mcgovern or Humphrey enter the halls in Miami on heavy waves from California and/or New York, the large uncommitted bloc might end the suspense with a first ballot romo to the favorite.

Late Flash

Earlier in this article we had mentioned Edmund Muskie's predicament was in deciding how long to continue playing the game. Minutes after the pages left the typewriter and were on the inevitable path to the editor's desk, the Man from Maine announced an early morning press conference.

Eloquently facing the often hard-ass bite of reality, Senator Muskie all but called it quits. He announced that he was dropping out of the primary circuit and leaving his committed delegates to re-assess their position. Cautiously leaving himself open for future consideration, Muskie nevertheless realized that his star light, star bright had fallen below the horizon. A strong, almost drooling desire for the presidency still exists within the man and yet any chance, as he readily admitted is now greatly diminished. Money had run out, support had evaporated and the candidate had worked the horse to a sweat before reaching the stretch.

In re-assessing the positions of the two remaining major candidates, one sees clearly how Humphrey can expect to gain much of what was once Muskie's support. On the other hand, the former nominee seems headed toward the same fatal strategy which recently stabbed Ed Muskie in the lower left gut: the entering of too many primaries. Next week, Humphrey plans to campaign in both Ohio and Indiana. Meeting Wallace head on in Indiana leaves McGovern free to accelerate his momentum in Ohio. A win by McGovern ther would certainly swing much of the uncommitted bloc away from Humphrey. However, were Humphrey to concentrate on defeating McGovern, the frontrunner, instead of toeing with Wallace, whose support is limited.... we might be graced with a 1968 rerun. Onto Ohio.

Folklore Center Worth A Visit

BY BILL DENSMORE

The Amherst Folklore Center has been operating weekends and on several weekdays continuously now since May 1971. It is housed in a not-so-converted church all-purpose room and kitchen for which the co-founders of the Center, Buzzy Levine, Bob Holzapfel, and Paul Chartrand, have an indefinite lease. The quiet, inviting atmosphere seems incongruous when matched with the high, beamed ceiling and disc lamps of the room. Performers work from a makeshift stage halfway down the long wall. "We tried putting the stage at one end but that just crowds everybody in even though we can seat more people. And the performers don't like it 'cause they can't feel the audience," says co-founder Chartrand. Lots of wooden chairs go where you want them to. When I was at the Center, they were arranged in a half moon around the stage. But says Chartrand, "we'll have hundreds of cushions in a week or so. We're making 'em now. Also, we're gonna get some of those empty spools (telephone cable holders) for tables. There's a lot we can do for this place — we're just realizing that."

The artists that come to the Center are usually respected, fairly well-known folkies, although "we've had some rock bands too," adds Chartrand. "Last summer a local group played to a group of about three-hundred." Just this year, the Center has had the Holy Modal Rounders, Jim Kweskin, Jeff & Maria Muldown, and Happie and Artie Traum.

The atmosphere would remind me of the Boston college coffee house circuit in the early '60's where Judy Collins, Tom Rush, and Tom Paxton got their start. There is something special going on here that is precious in our knock down, drag out, screw-the-bastard society. The music here is for music's sake, whether there's an audience or not. The people who run the Center seem to be involved in more than just making a buck, although a couple of packed houses could change that. The purpose of the "Folklore Center," at least in the words of one of its co-founders, is to "give something to the people that come that they can take away from here when they leave."

The night I was at the Center, Paul Siebel played. He's a fine folk-based singer-songwriter from Woodstock, N.Y., home of the Band, Happie and Artie Traum, and of course, Bob Dylan. Siebel made a joke out of his home town of Attica, ("All the guys I went to high school with are prison guards today. We don't see eye to eye.") and then sang "My Town" in tribute to it. As is typical of small time musicians, Siebel played a standard fare of songs from his two albums, ("Woodsmoke and Oranges," and "Jack-Knife Gypsy") including his best known compositions. Of course, it is to the man's credit that he writes his own material, but one wonders if he is not beginning to stagnate (at age 34) when he comes to a concert and doesn't play any new material.

Siebel arrived in Amherst after being brought from Woodstock by a local musician, Frank Clark. The Prarie Oysters, a country rock band from Worcester, had opened the evening's entertainment with their talented but familiar brand of the "Grateful Dead" sound. Frank called from in town to say that he and Siebel would arrive in about a half an hour. An hour later Frank, accompanied by a tipsy Paul Siebel avec sideman greeted Bob Holzapfel at the door of the Center. It seems that the duo had arrived via the friendly neighborhood tavern. Siebel had a couple of sixpacks and retired to the kitchen for five or ten minutes to make a dent in one of them and warm up his voice. By the time he got on stage he was relaxed, but in control of the situation, and proceeded to do an unusually long set which lasted almost an hour and included ten songs. He talked to the audience of less than one-hundred, rather than at them, but his conversation was something less than witty, and was in fact sometimes hard to understand because of the Bud can between his lips and the audience. Mind you, Mr. Siebel wasn't drunk, just tipsy.

When I asked him after the concert if this had been an important performance for him he shrugged his shoulders, suppressed an impish grin, and boomed, "Yea!" Siebel was evidently not happy with his "pecuniary remuneration" (reeks of Micawber) as he kept flipping through his wallet in disbelief before he finished a last beer. When last seen he was fighting off multiple verbal barrages from his side-kick guitarist, who evidently owned one of the vehicles they'd come in and wanted to be sure to hit some local bar before one a.m. closing time ("You know this isn't New York City — you can't drink until four in the morning!").

I talked with co-founder Bob Holzapfel about the origins of the non-profit, unincorporated Amherst "Folklore Center." "When we started there was no place like this around at that time. . .there was no place you could go to except a rock gig."

I asked Holzapfel what their method of booking acts was, "We write record companies or individual artists, or sometimes when an artist comes here he'll know of somebody else. Mostly we get people by word of mouth... Our goal is making sure each night is a far out musical night."

Holzapfel and the others started the Center "because we've all been really interested in music for a long time," and it appears as if that interest hasn't flagged. "Our biggest trouble is that we don't have any storage space," mused Holzapfel.

The usual admission charge is $1.00 or $2.00 for nationally known performers. Despite that, according to Buzzy Levine, the Center sometimes has trouble breaking even. Since there are few overhead costs, and the staff is paid only intermittently, most of the admission fee goes to advertising and the cost of the performer. The kitchen, which serves various health and regular foods like cider, banana bread, and spice tea, pays for itself by fairly reasonable prices. Thus, despite limited financial success, the Center seems to push on, sustained by the spirit of its staff, some of which have left in search of more financially rewarding jobs.

It is indeed encouraging to find an oasis of inexpensive, quality, folk entertainment in a town full of either intellectual escapades or trivial films, pubs, and parties. The Amherst "Folklore Center," though by no means a Boston coffee house, shows every sign of becoming a definitive hatching ground for New England folk talent, as well as a no-hassles, dependable way to while away the night.

About David Bromberg

David Bromberg is a musician you're likely to find almost anywhere.

He's a guitarist and composer who's been around for several years as an accompanist, but recently he's begun performing solo, winning acclaim at the Philadelphia and Mariposa folk festivals and at last year's Isle of Wight festival in England, where he was called back for several encores.

Although he's basically a guitarist (he began playing 11 years ago when he was 14), David can play almost any fretted instrument, including banjo, dobro and mandolin.

The versatility which has led to his recognition as one of the most proficient and persuasive young artists around also shows itself in his picking styles where he moves easily from flat-picking to Travis picking to a jazz style.

David has recorded with such artists as Bob Dylan, Jerry Jeff Walker, Tom Rush and Tom Paxton. He has been seen live almost everywhere, with performers including Chubby Checker, Ramblin Jack Elliot, Reverend Gary Davis, Rosalie Sorrels and Doug Kershaw.

His songs, too, reflect that same versatility. From pulling his listeners' legs with a tune like "Bullfrog Blues" he can slide gently into a touch of country blues like "Trying to Get Home."

David began his career hanging out around the Village while he was attending Columbia University, always carrying his guitar, always ready for a jam session. He soon became known as a sideman for Jerry Jeff Walker and did the fancy single-string lead guitar work on three of his albums. His work on Dylan's "Self Portrait" and "New Morning" has also drawn attention to his ability.

Now, after the Village Voice has called him one of the "real show-stealers" at the Philadelphia festival and Rock magazine saw him as "the hit of the first night" at the Isle of Wight, Davis is on his own, playing a relaxed repertoire of blues, country and western, ballads and ditties that all reflect his performing genius.

Coming Out Is Twice The Fun

BY JACQUELINE LETALIAN

On September 24th, 1970, a small personal advertisement appeared in the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, stating quite briefly:

"Anyone interested in extending the Boston Student Homophile League into the Amherst area contact. . ."

This modest ad brought less than a dozen people to a church in Amherst for what turned out to be the first meeting of what is now the Student Homophile League at the university. From that group of less than one dozen people has grown an organization with participants now numbering well over two hundred.

In the two years of the group's history here at the university members of the group have performed a vital educational and informational service for well over three thousand students both here at the university and within the Western Massachusetts area in general. During this same period of time, the group has attained status as a Recognized Student Organization with funding from the Student Senate at the rate of $800.00 annually. The funding is used primarily to continue service to this campus on an educational and informational level, to purchase books and periodicals on the gay life, and to operate a small ten foot by ten foot office on the balcony of the Student Union. The league, in addition to serving the university community in general, acts as a support group for area gays. Meetings are held on almost a weekly basis throughout the school year, usually on Thursday evenings in the Campus Center. Topics for lectures or discussion at the meetings have varied widely and have included such areas as the Homosexual and the draft, venereal disease, and sex roles and role-play.

Last year at about this time a gay festival was held here at the university, with members of homophile groups from as far away as New Jersey and Pennsylvania attending. This weekend a similar event will take place here in the five college area.

Last semester, in the 10/22/71 copy of the Collegian, I wrote a letter-to-the-editor concerning an incident about people I picked up hitch-hiking and who made some joking, derogatory remarks about homosexuals (fags). I also asked some questions, raised some doubts that most Gay people ask and feel. The letter was, for many, a complete surprise because, except for my very close friends with whom I had been in touch between August and October, no one had known about my coming out. I think some of the reactions I received as a result and some of the experiences I've had since are an essay in themselves which may further enlighten the ignorance and fear about homosexuality and bring an understanding of only a few of the problems faced by Gay people.

I received, via letter to the editor, a compassionate apology from the three hitch-hikers at whom my letter was directed. I did get a job despite the fact that my employer read that letter; the response from members of the Gay community and close straight friends was supportive and encouraging. For the most part, direct responses and reactions were positive.

However, the revelation in the letter seemed also to bring out the meanest, most cowardly sorts of individuals. Several male students from the floor on which I lived last year got drunk one night and thought it quite within their limits of stupidity to harrass (then) off-campus roommates, who are straight, about my being Gay. The letter was also mentioned in passing at a meeting and one fellow, whom I had known, said that he felt there was nothing to apologize for and that he certainly wouldn't have done so. It also fell within the emptiness of cowardice and small-mindedness of other individuals to question my former roommate in the dorm(-who is also straight); she was not prepared nor did she know because last year I thought I was straight, or at least, I hadn't come out. And, there was even some question at work how much my homosexuality would effect and involve the place where I work (I haven't figured out if that meant my attitude toward other women with whom I work or my political activities or my public writings). Since then, too, I have found myself socially retreating more and more into Gay life and groups, cutting myself off from straights.

It is also an on-going sadness that my parents, while they have not disowned me as many parents of Gay people do, have not accepted the fact that I am Gay and that I am happy and "normal." It is embittering to know that Gay individuals and bars (for example) are easy prey for the police (in election years) and the syndicate, to blackmail and harrassment, to loss of jobs and housing. It is angering that it is unacceptable for me to dance in a straight, public place with my lover or hold hands walking through the Hatch. (For those reasons I have almost come to hate seeing straight couples.)

I have become tired of going into a Gay bar and being cruised by straight men, who either because they are frustrated or want to make a Lesbian, and come to the bars to seek out their prey. I am angry about a law which declares, in essence, that I am illegal, that my love is unnatural and perverse, that I am an unfit mother solely because I am Gay. (I would like to say that all of this is my paranoia, but I have seen it happen too many times, and had it happen to me too many times to fall victim to such an accusation.) And, I know, too, that some will be polite, some will say "big deal"--all I have to do is be quiet and unpublic, to be a good little silent person. Some things like harrassament aren't really such a big deal, but why should I and other Gay people have to put up with the nuisance; and some of the problems are not so small because they can have a profound effect on our hopes, they can break our lives into fragments.

What Gay people want is to be happy and we cannot do that if we are always angry and frustrated by the cruelty and misconception of straight society. What we want is to be let alone. . .to love as we choose, to stop hiding and lying, to stop being afraid, to be no different publicly than we are privately whether we are the stereotypes (dykes and queens/butches and femmes) or the ones you could never pick out in a crowd. We do not want to have to deny any part of us either our homosexuality or those myriad other facets of our personalities (which tend to be suffocated if we are known as being Gay). We want to be whole and that cannot happen as long as we are a generalized stereotype, as long as we are against the law, as long as we are mocked and disowned.

While my experience has broadened, enlightened and embittered my initial thoughts--my resolve in that letter has remained the same: I have seen the paranoia and ignorance that pervades our lives in closets and alleys, homosexual and heterosexual, and I've decided that I cannot and will not live with that--that I cannot accept less than myself--that I cannot deny the people I love. Maybe, our stereotypes will dissolve into the beautiful reality of loving each other--and maybe, the words sexual preference will fade away until there's only one word, "love."

Weekend Activities

Dr. George Weinberg, psychiatrist and author of the newly released book Society and the Healthy Homosexual will speak this Friday, April 28th as the opening event in the series of events this weekend labeled as the Five College Gay Festival Weekend. Dr. Weinberg's speech will take place at two o'clock in the East Lecture Hall of the Academic Building on the Hampshire College Campus. The lecture is open to all free of charge.

Friday evening at Hampshire will be the sight of a gay party open to all area gays and with guests expected from many Student Homophile Organizations from Boston to New Jersey. Admission to this party and to the activities on both Saturday and Sunday has been set at $2.00.

During the day on Saturday here at the Campus Center of the UMass conferences and workshops will be held. The workshops will deal with various subjects related to sexuality in general, sexism, feminism, and social change. Participation in the conference is open to all who have paid the $2.00 registration fee for the entire weekened. Registration may be done either previous to the weekend at the S.H.L. office or at the conferences themselves on Saturday.

A dance, featuring Rush will be held on Saturday evening in the back of the Hatch and is open to the entire campus, free. Sponsor of the dance is S.H.L.

At noon of Sunday a picnic is to be held in Leverett, on privately owned, well secluded and heavily wooded land. Food at the picnic is to be provided free to all who have registered previously for any part of the festival.

The Strike 1972

A Conscience Institutionalized

BY BOB NESTI AND GALEN TINDER

The University institutionalized a social and political conscience this past Monday with the promise of funding of a social Action Center and the allocation of the first floor of Munson Hall as its office. There was an obvious feeling of righteous victory amongst the "people" who still occupied Dickinson Hall late Monday night following the announcement by the University. Members of the Vietnam Vets Against The War and the Woman's Caucus had occupied the building the headquarters for ROTC on campus, for nearly a week. The "Siege" became centered on two demands, both offshoots of the larger, abortive strike demands, which were:

1. Removal of ROTC from campus.
2. Establishment of a Social Action Center by October 15, 1972.

There was a sense of self satisfaction amongst the haggard faces who now spoke quietly, amongst happily, in small groups.

The joy was noticeably restrained considering the groups had succeeded in obtaining major concessions in regard to both demands from the Administration. Their victory climaxed a week of strike activities which, despite their obvious failure to paralyze the University, did manage to create a rash of petty annoyances. It began the previous Tuesday evening, coming off the immediate lull of a three day weekend and the more pronounced two-year hiatus in student activism. Again President Nixon was mostly to blame, this time the increasing bombing levels over North Vietnam to points not equaled in four years. The moral indignation of the concerned again manifested itself and a call for a student strike was issued.

As with most events of this sort, they begin in heat and subsist on inflated facts, nasty rumors, and blind determination. There was, however, a problem this year in mobilizing numbers. The events in Vietnam, although disheartening, hadn't the immediate emotional impact Nixon's invasion of Cambodia and the Kent State Killings had two years ago on the student's psyche. Burned, too, by the ineffectual results of that adventure in commitment, many took a more cautious approach to the issue. If there was going to be a strike, its emotional commitment would come culmitatively, rather than immediately as it had two years ago.

Still there was enough support to fill the Campus Center Auditorium on the evening of Tues., April 18, and there was enough excitement and interest generated to at least precipitate talk of some mass student action. (For a more complete analysis of this meeting see last Friday's Poor Richard's for the story "Eric Comes Home."–Editor) The hope for mass action banked on how many UMass students would be angered by the President's latest action and more than five hundred crowded into the Auditorium to vote on the need for strike. The week had, thus far, been a more than active one. Earlier that day the Minority Caucus of The School of Education, known also as the Third World Caucus, had effectively closed down that department's "Marathon Week," and the previous evening eighty members of assorted leftist groups gathered to determine a course of action against the recent escalation of the war and plan for student participation in the April 22nd march in New York and Los Angeles. Student Government Association President Larry Ladd announced plans for a student referendum to determine campus strike action for later that week.

It was inevitable that the causal relationship between what was happening at the School of Ed. be tied into the larger issues of Vietnam and Tuesday's meeting became more concerned in relating issues than defining demands. Until this point the strike was to be on three demands, which were: an end to the bombing in Vietnam; withdrawal of all U. S. troops and air support from Vietnam; and Amnesty for War Resisters. Others at Tuesday's meetings had more on their mind than a political reaction to the President. Members of the Women's Caucus demanded the third demand be cut, since it exhibited the "sexism" of the group who proposed it, and replaced with Freedom For All Political Prisoners. This demand was passed with nary a whimper of disapproval and rather innocently set the stage for the eventual splintering of the Strike forces. To this was added the fourth and final demand, again by the Woman's Caucus, this to end all forms of racist and sexist oppression on the UMass Amherst campus. The Strike then became centered of four demands, tied together effectively by the rhetoric of the leaders.

Sometime after this mass meeting and before the one planned for Wednesday afternoon, three people were chosen to be co-chairpersons of the Strike Steering Committee. The three, the previously mentioned, Larry Ladd, Johnetta Cole of the Third World Alliance, and Joanne Levenson of the Women's Caucus, apparently were chosen by an Ad Hoc Steering Committee of volunteers following Tuesday's mass meeting. The thirty or forty who attended this meeting, held somewhere in the Campus Center, also decided upon Wednesday agenda. Those present thought it correct that both the Third World and Women's factions receive a chairperson along with an undetermined member. This undetermined member was Larry Ladd. Although not present, Ladd was chosen because he had expressed a willingness for the duty and felt himself apart enough from the issues to chair the proceedings adequately.

Tuesday's meeting rather regrettably showed a genuine lack of cohesion amongst the diverse forces which based the Strike. The weakness, although not immediately apparent, became more so Wednesday afternoon when the second mass meeting of what was labeled the Strike Steering Committee was held in the Student Union Ballroom.

The move to strike had received a good press in that morning's Collegian, with full front page coverage of the closing of the School of Ed. Marathon, a report of the events on Tuesday and a favorable editorial. Over one thousand people crowded in the Ballroom on the cloudy afternoon. The meeting decided specifically to hold three major workshops that day on the primary strike issues and plan Thursday and Friday's activities. Yet overnight there had been a move away from the original reasons for a strike. Only twice over the four hour afternoon meeting was the war mentioned. The splintering was now beginning to manifest itself. More time was spent relating issues than on their specifics and a Strike with clear objectives became muddled in terms. In tying together a diverse range of social ills, the Strike weakened its position and effectively remained stillborn. For the Strike to have worked, it needed leadership, which obviously wasn't coming from the weakly-linked Ad Hoc Coordinating Committee.

The Movement was spreading itself too thin, attempting too much, with too few results, and all this became overwhelmingly apparent.

Then it became clear that the strike was not only resting on very shaky grounds, but that its chances for any further success were very dim. Without taking into consideration the individual merits of the non-war related demands (and the third demand, to free all political prisoners was a very dubious one) it can be said that the cornucopia of social ills which was used as the base of the strike were too wide in scope and far too vaguely connected to be a feasible basis upon which to build an effective, University wide strike.

In order for any mass political movement to be a successful one it needs a solid foundation around which it can concentrate its energy and resources. This is particularly the case when one is dealing with a group of people, such as that which exists at this university who tend naturally toward apathy. This foundation was not supplied by either the coordination committee or by the specific issues which were introduced to supplement the basic war issue. Any mass political movement must have something specific toward which it can direct itself and around which it can gather the kind of drive which is necessary to maintain such a movement. It is in this practical sense that the people attempting to organize the strike failed critically. The only issue which could have gathered the necessary mass support was the issue of the war. The war has an immediacy which can be felt while the other issues introduced do not. By adding on other demands the strike not only splintered the commitment of those actively involved but lost any hope of attracting the student body as a whole to its cause. The only two moves which spake of any excitement over the interim period since Tuesday was the occupation of Whitmore, a rather ineffectual exercise in civil disobedience, and the occupation of Dickinson Hall.

About six a.m. Thursday morning a coalition of Vietnam Veterans Against The War and members of the Women's Caucus occupied the Hall, a small brick building near the center of campus which houses classrooms and office space for both Army and Air Force ROTC. They acted following an all night meeting at which it was decided that ROTC hadn't any place on campus. They planned occupation of the building until the Administration or the Federal Government authorized removal of the program from campus. The two groups hoped to halt all classes, including many political science discussion sections, and turn the hall into a community action center which would include, among other facilities, a Day Care Center. Their action was illegal for only a brief three hours for sometime after nine Chancellor Randolph Bromery gave his consent for the occupying forces to use the building for the remainder of the Strike.

Yet while the Steering Committee voted tnat Wednesday afternoon to continue striking on the three inter-related demands, the respresentatives of each of the three met to somehow lend an organization shape to the strike. This so-called Ad Hoc Coordinating Committee was comprised of thirty-odd volunteers who decided to break the leadership down to a core group of fifteen, which would somehow guide the striking forces until the larger body took action. Here was the first major instance of the power plays which eventually brought an end to the Strike. The group which gained most from all of this was the Women's Caucus as they received seven uncontested seats on the Ad Hoc Coordinating Committee. The other eight were chosen by lot in a move which effectively diminished the Anti-War forces strength. Although not overt, this was the first sign of the lack of trust which was inherent in the 1972 Strike. The purpose of the fifteen now was to decide on the form and aims of the Strike and two members of the group drew up a ten-point proposal from which came trouble Thursday night. The contended point came with the ninth proposal, which dealt with the division of power amongst the three groups. The original point suggested that it be divided equally amongst the three groups. An amended proposal suggested the anti-war forces, who originally hd called a strike, be given the majority - eight out of sixteen possible members with the other eight being equally divided between the Women's Caucus and the Third World Alliance. This proposal was voted down Thursday afternoon.

The ten point proposal was introduced at the start of Thursday evening's meeting. It had literally appeared off the Student Mobe mimeograph machine minutes prior to the seven p.m. gathering in the Ballroom and was fresh information for all those present except for the fifteen who had earlier ratified it and anyone who had caught wind of it. It was presented for ratification by the entire group and was placed open for amendments and debate by Chairperson John Brentlinger. Tom Moriarty of the Student Mobe introduced the previously rejected amendment to the group as a whole. He argued that the scope of the Strike, in fact the entire student movement for the past seven years, was based upon the Vietnam issue, and by spreading the demands out, the focus was lost. He said later this was his first association with the ninth proposal as it stood on paper and he thought it an oversight on the part of the Central Coordinating Committee. The amendment was taken to the floor for further debate.

During Moriarty's proposal undercurrents of the division began to appear. They finally exploded, when a dungareed jacket man came to the microphone. He began reasonably enough, stating that he felt the Mobe had done much of the groundwork for a Student Mobilization and deserved more than a 3390 representation on the Coordinating Committee; but when it was pointed out from the platform that Women played an equal part in the anti-war movement, he exploded. The man literally ripped into motivations of the Third World Caucus and the Women's Group saying, point blank, that they had creeped out of the woodwork to become part of the Strike. This was greeted by some loud applause and prompted a walkout by some members of the Third World Alliance. After some more strong words, a vote on Moriarty's proposal followed - and, despite all the anger, the motion passed. Now the Women walked out in protest to the obvious "sexist" and "racist" policies of the entire group.

Chairperson John Brentlinger announced that Johnetta Cole had left the room because of a number of sexist and racist remarks made by various persons in the discussion. Upon Brentlinger insistence, the remaining Blacks left the hall. Moriarty then returned to one of the two aisle microphones and accused both the Women's Caucus and the Third World Alliance of playing politics with the Strike. Chaos seemed the only pattern to what followed. The schism which had earlier been homogenized in the hope of unity now tore the room or at least the leadership apart. On the whole, the five hundred plus in attendance sat back to watch the intragroup bickerings, complaints of the three factions and witness the collapse of leadership. This was most unfortunate, for instead of giving the Movement a direction, it left it splintered. Now was perhaps the only moment the Leadership could have united the near mortally wounded forces, and, instead the group received the mutterings of John Brentlinger who resigned as chairperson "until the blacks and women actively support the strike."

Although the group did vote again, for a third time, to include the demands of racism and sexism in the Strike and to deny themselves any power as a decision - making body until the two splintered groups returned, the Strike had effectively ended.

Members of the Third World and Women's group returned to the stage. The first had disavowed relationship with the Strike, the others followed out of what was labeled "temporary solidarity." Rather than effectively work towards the end, those on the stage chastised the main body for their obvious insensitivity to the interrelatedness of the issues. The Strike, the group was told, couldn't simply be centered on the War issue; that all the four points arrived at Tuesday were integral to the Strike. The Strike now became focused on "getting the connections between the issues together" in the minds of the collective masses.

The group was coerced into having guilty feelings about a simple, blunt political maneuver. This guilt even ended up on the front page of the Collegian that Friday morning when an amazing piece of jongoism, substantiated with cliches, was presented as a responsible reaction to the events that Thursday. This front page editorial was one of the first moves in the re-evaluation of the Strike, but even this wasn't impetus enough to sway the majority of students away from rejecting the Strike in a student referendum held that Friday. The Referendum conducted in dorms, fraternity and sorority houses, and the Campus Center was a three question referendum, which read as follows:

Question one stated that the strike should be ended on Friday. Question two stated that the strike should be continued through the week and ended then. Question three allowed for the strike to be continued for the week and then another referendum would be held this Friday to determine whether the strike should be continued after that.

The results of the vote of approximately 40% of UMass undergraduates officially ended the strike with a pluralism of the first question overcoming the combined total of questions two and three. This news didn't hit the campus until Saturday and only then by radio or by rumor. Thus the Strike ended and the establishment of an on-campus movement with two specific demands began. Nine hundred gathered at Westover Air Force Base, the third largest in the country to participate in active civil disobedience demonstration. At it ninety people were arrested for blocking an industrial gate. The Anti-war forces were mobilizing for New York that Saturday and a week of these activities climaxed on the Avenue of the Americas that Saturday with 100,000 demonstrating against Nixon's recent escalation of the war.

Things here on campus finally began to coagulate. Specifically the occupied Dickinson Hall became the focal of attention. Throughout the decline and fall of the Strike, the hall remained occupied by the Vietnam Vets Against the War and by Members of the Woman's Caucus. Now with the student majority rejecting major action, with the coordinating committee dissipated in bitterness, and the forces remaining either recovering from Westover or marching in New York, members of the two groups decided to hold Dickinson indefinitely. The Hall was titled the Center For Social Change, (or The New Center For Social Change - depending upon which blackboard you read) and the siege of the ROTC building became the major focus of campus political activities.

The takeover of Dickinson Hall then became the focus of the groups which had spintered from the Strike. The Veterans and the Women agreed to occupy the hall jointly; later they were joined by the Men's Caucus who merged with the Women's Caucus to form the Coalition Against Oppression. The takeover was announced as permanent. Its purpose was to end ROTC on campus and to turn the hall into a center for Social Change.

Negotiations with the Administration begin Sunday morning. Negotiating teams met in morning, afternoon, and evening sessions and consisted of members of the Administration and the Coalition Against Oppression. Although these negotiations centered on the uses of Dickinson Hall and the future of ROTC on campus, an unverified source has told this reporter that members of the Military Science program on this campus were rather ungraciously ignored by the Chancellor and the Administration negotiating committees. A number of the cadets went over the Chancellor's office that Sunday afternoon and were greeted by Bromery outside the Chancellor's Office. The cadets were quite upset with the occupation of Dickinson Hall and threatened quite openly to reoccupy the building.

Perhaps this minor confrontation led to something, it is hard to promise; but the situation facing the Administration was an extremely difficult one. On one hand they had to deal with the forces entrenched in the hall, adamant in their two demands. On the other side the ROTC cadets were most disturbed by the occupation of their building. The chance for confrontation, in retrospect, seems dim; yet as of Monday it was a dangerous possibility. At Dickinson, on Monday, these reporters heard reports that ROTC cadets were told by Viet Vet members that they would be physically prevented from attending their classes on Tuesday. The cadets, too, hadn't far to go before reacting to the occupation.

Monday the negotiations continued, now in separate sessions. The Administration first met with the Coalition, telling them they wouldn't consider the dual demands until Dickinson was vacated. Chancellor Bromery told the cadets this in a later afternoon session, closed to the press and public. Bromery further told the Coalition that they could keep the building until ten that evening, but he wouldn't call any forces to reoccupy the hall until probably early Tuesday morning. As further negotiations continued, the Coalition decided to remove itself from the building and occupy the space promised them by Bromery. This decision came when the majority of the group felt the two issues were more important than the occupation of the building. It felt the two demands, removal of ROTC from campus by September 1, 1972, and the authorization of a Social Action Center by October 15 took precedence over the issue of occupying the hall, although this was not a unanomous position. When it was announced that Bromery would be coming down the Center to see just what was happening, a call was issued for manpower to mass at Dickinson and in less than a half hour the number of people at Dickinson Hall increased by eight times its original size. Once the proof in numbers was visible, these coordinating operations divided the manpower into workshops upstairs. The four workshops became reflections of the sentiments of those attending after the Coalition explained its position. The debate was cool and quite passionately lucidly presented from both sides. In one workshop, attended by some forty to fifty people, two men addressed themselves specifically to the question of whether the Coalition was making the right decision in leaving the hall and presented an impassioned and cogent argument for staying. When it was suggested that Chancellor Bromery was in quite a difficult position, he reacted strongly, stating that he had empathy for the Chancellor but his position was irrelevant to the issues which the Center was concerned with. The debate between the two forces stabilized the workshop and for the first time, during a week marred by indecision, people from below were talking about tactics.

Downstairs the more mundane issues were holding sway. Nearly every Coalition or student dignitary (and that term is used loosely here) milled about, apprehensive of the Chancellor's arrival. He never arrived, instead came news of the Coalition's apparent victory. The negotiations had ended and upon the group's expressing a willingness to vacate Dickinson Hall and allow "business as usual" to continue there until the end of the year, the Administration gave in on one demand and gave its personal support for the second. A center For Social Change was authorized, given a probable chance for funding and space on the first floor of Munson Hall. Chancellor Bromery also expressed grave reservations "concerning the appropriateness" of having ROTC on campus. The mood was one of subdued victory; many of the people present had a determinedly haggard look to them, as they had concentrated their major efforts over the past four days and would have continued indefinitely in securing their demands. They had proven their success, Dickinson, beyond some general cleaning up, was essentially the same building they had taken over that previous Thursday. The building had been kept up to standards which were befitting the group's responsible action. And the split on Thursday had finally climaxed in substantial action.

It was a victory for a Left-Liberal tradition here on campus. It seemed almost the first quantitative result of the Strike some two years ago and of all student movements here on UMass. It also proved that political activism, when it takes the form of illegal action, and the occupation of Dickinson Hall was most definitely an illegal action, wasn't going to be viewed that way by the Administration. The school shrewdly viewed it as an internal problem, such as say, the rowdy apolitical activism which occasionally plagued universities in the late Fifties and early Sixties. Presented then as an internal problem, it never became clearly defined along sharper lines.

The same thing seemed to have happened with the closing of the School of Education Marathon. Essentially those in administrative positions, in both situations, said to the groups that they recognized their protests as legitimate and only had to deal with pressures from above. Dean Allen's worries came not from this campus but from forces outside which were important in determining future development of his so-called "plantation." The same is true of Bromery, who was forced into an uncomfortable position that was solved mutually between the parties.

To believe that this school's Administration gave up much this past Monday is to not fully understand the politics at play here. There was a most definite possibility that ROTC was going to be phased off this campus in the near future. In the Report of the President's Commission on Campus Unrest the group finding stated,

". . .We recommend that the Department of Defense establish alternatives to ROTC so that officer education is available to students whose universities choose to terminate on-campus ROTC programs. . ."

And this was being put into practice by the Department of Defense, or at least it was stated in the New York Times of May 28, 1971, that thirty ROTC programs at fifteen New York-New England universities were being phased out by 1973 and military planners were looking to smaller colleges in the country to make up the loss. Although UMass wasn't one of these schools, it seemed likely that when the renewal came up next year for ROTC to continue on this campus, it would have to be completely granted by the Federal Government. The Administration would refuse any funding authorization and, in all probability the ROTC program would have fallen away.

In many ways the student population here at UMass hasn't moved anywhere since 1970, except perhaps to become a bit more hardened on the rightness of issues and a bit more cynical in general attitude (and this article is, admittedly, a genuine reflection of the latter.) The demands have an astoundingly same ring to them; students here couldn't be mobilized on any issue but the War and when was the last time anyone here has argued that we should remain in Vietnam indefinitely.

With all that's happened over the past two years, there is an astounding inertia of apathy present here on campus. It is hoped that the Center For Social Change will be the first step away from this stagnation (and these pages will next week present a definition of the Center). It is hoped that the forces who occupied Munson over the weekend will not be coopted by a cumbersome and stifling bureaucracy. It is hoped that the Center will not fall apart simply because the adventure of something new will eventually pass. It is hoped that the Center doesn't fall victim to the pettiness and bickering which seems to plague every organization here on Campus; in short, it is hoped that the Center will not reflect the genuine laxness of past student movements.

The actions of the Center have thus far exhibited what best be labeled this diverse group's inability to apply practical politics toward their intended goals. The Center, in a letter in the Collegian, supported the students presently occupying Massachusetts Hall at Harvard University in protest to that school's ownership of Gulf Oil stock. Gulf Oil, along with Poloroid and other major U.S. corporations own companies and operate in the Union of South Africa, a nation which has the most inhumane system of legal segregation currently exhibited on the planet. Yet to believe that, by forcing a University to sell their stock in a company which participates in immoral behavior, you either improve the University's moral character or wipe out the problem is, at best, simple-minded. Chances would be good that if Harvard (or Amherst or whomever) sold their stock, it would be immediately bought by someone whose interest probably were far more mundane than changing the world for the best.

Yet it seems that only in emotionalism can the Movement subsist itself. The action at the Board of Trustees meeting again proved this point. Although that the majority of the students who disrupted the meeting were from UMass-Boston. it can be assumed that those of similar feelings, and those who attended from the Center, participated with them in solidarity. We have come two years since the last major student movement against ROTC on campus existed and during that priod, little was done towards that end. It seems odd then that there be such feeling of immediacy towards this demand, and the Board of Trustees be forced to make an immediate statement. Change is hardly ever immediate, the fact that there was change this past week came not from the stimulating radical politics, but from an almost belated reaction to the complacent politics this campus (and others) have been a victim of since 1970. The Center for Social Change is a natural extension of a slowly-expanding social consciousness. It is hoped that it start slowly and work towards constructive ends and not spread itself thin in moral self- righteousness. Everyone knows things are wrong; rather than wallow in guilt or point a finger, we should exercise all the possible political options open to us, which are inherent to the democratic process.

Delaney And Bonnie Uniformly Brilliant

D & B Together
Delaney and Bonnie
BY R. BRUCE ALLER

Bonnie and Delaney got more roots showing than a mangrove tree. They were road-weary by the time they hit "Shindig" with friends Leon Russell and Billy Preston. If you think I'm making this up, the videocassettes will soon be released, featuring these fine musicians, pickin' and boppin' in their regulation "Shindig" leathers (usually backing Bobby Sherman in an adenoidal tribute to "our blemished love"... generally followed by a Clearasil commercial).

After the bottom fell out of the "Shindig" market, the "Shindogs" hit the Southern concert trail, signing up backwater musical prodigies until they had the line-up necessary to cut their first album for Elektra, "Acccept No Substitute". This somewhat uneven album was not without influence--the seers that could look beyond the deth of psychadelia knew these people would be cashing in their chips very shortly. The "seers" in this case included George Harrison, who took Billy Preston under wing, and Chris Stainton, who had to see Leon Russell right away about a horse he had, name of Joe. Thus, started the wholesale attrition of personnel that has proven the curse of the Bramletts, but a periodic shot in the arm for the rest of the music industry. In fact, the action got so hot for a while that TWA's London-Atlantic flight started looking like a taxi-run to the brass at A & M and Atlantic.

Meanwhile, Bonnie and Delaney's reputation continued to grow as a kind of "traveling Holiday Inn to the stars" ("Spend a night or a week! the Bramletts") and they hit the road with Blind Faith. The rest is-how you say-history. As the tour progressed, Clapton was spending less and less time with Blind Faith and more and more jamming with the hillbillies. It was Delaney Bramlett, in fact, that encouraged Eric to "loosen up", and sing a little; be "more out-front." They got along so famously that Clapton asked them to come overseas to tour. By the time this strange apprenticeship ended, shy retiring Eric had mustered enough moxie to steal the Bramlett's rhythm section! Just being outfront I suppost. But if Delaney and Bonnie lost their band (again), the world gained Derek and the Dominoes, a regretably short-lived experiment, but a band whose demise left free agents Jim Gordon, Bobby Whitlock, and Carl Radle as everybody's favorite session men. But fret not. Bonnie and Delaney haven't fared so badly. For one thing, the "friends" all come tumbling home when its album time. In this fashion, the Bramlett's churned out two albums for Atlantic: "To Bonnie From Delaney," a spotty work that was more than vindicated by "Motel Shot," an intimate gem that had to be a harbinger of things to come.

And it's come, kind of, "D & B Together" is the inauspicious title Columbia has pasted on the Bramlett's premier outing for that label. Columbia has provided two grocery lists of "Friends" and "Other friends" that made it back for this one. Unfortunately, that's all they've provided, so it's rather hard to determine who's doing what (let alone where they're doing it). At first glance, these "Friends" look like strangers, but the truth is they've been here all the time, each appearing on one or two previous albums. Some lightweight research reveals that Darrell Leonard plays trombone; Chuck Morgan, drums, and Jerry Jumonville, a swell alto saxist, has his name misspelled. Also listed among "Friends," DeWitty, York, and Clayton have all played with, or at least, gotten coffee for, the Memphis Brass. This is all worth mentioning since: A) The horn work on this album is beautiful throughout and, B) Playing for the Bramletts is like playing for the Toledo Mudhens, and these people will doubtless make the big leagues someday, so we might as well learn their names now.

Delaney gets help plucking on the album from column B, "Other Friends": Bobby Womack, Joe Hicks, and the late Skydog Allman. Also on board: Jim Gordon pounding them pagan skins and Billy Preston pounding that Christian organ. Of course, there is the omnipresent, all-pervasive force, "the chorus." But to their credit, the Bramletts somehow got by without omnipresent, all-pervasive Jesse Davis.

Side one opens with their single release of some months back, "Only You Know and I Know," which is certainly the definitive version of that song. A marvelous, snake-charming clarinet (Jerry Jumonville?), some expressway-skiffles drumming (Jim Gordon?), and the perfect harmony of Bonnie and Delaney (that everywhere abounds on this album) save this one from overfamiliarity. One longs to say the same, but somehow cannot, for "Comin' Home," which is also included here, but without being improved upon in any way. Incidentally, the Bill Drake A.M.-oriented F.M. stations have inexplicably chosen these two cuts for airplay. Imagine how thrilled the Bramletts are by this travesty, eternally fated to tour with the same tired material.

"Wade in the River Jordan" opens with some volcanic organ playing that has to be Billy Preston's, but this isn't enough to save it from an excess of shrill "chorus." This is gospel the way they play it in Hazel Park, Michigan, opening a Chevy dealer. ("Righteous Fred's Gospel Daze are here!") I'm sure this cut will appeal to some, but it passed me by.

Fortunately, the remainder of the album is almost uniformly brilliant! "Sound of the City" and "I Know Something Good About You" are both fine funky pieces that suggest Dr. John's handiwork, but no! Both are co-written by Delaney and Joe Hicks. Joe Hicks last surfaced on the Bobby Womack "Communication" album, an L.P. apparently recorded the same session, if all the shared personnel is any indication. The only Joe Hicks I can visualize is a little mousey guy who used to jam with Les Paul and Ernie Ford (if such a thing as "jamming" with Ernie Ford is possible). I'm probably mistaken, but no matter. . .Joe Hicks is one funky dude, even if he looks like a rutabagus! It's during "I Know Something Good About You," in fact, that this album's moment comes. Listen to Delaney warble: "Good Morning'" and to Bonnie as she jumps in with "How you doing?" I've listened to this cut so many times, that I walk around all day, like an empty headed carrot, singing the same two lines, over and over.

"Well, Well" has the same drag-tempo funkiness as the two songs done with Hicks but this time it's all Delaney, and it's just great. "I Know How It Feels to be Lonely" is probably the second best effort on the L.P. (after "Superstar," which is effortless), and the most ambitious. There's even a layer of strings here to compliment the chorus and a bizarre McLaughlin-like guitar (actually Bobby Womack's if I'm not mistaken), under Bonnie's beautiful voice. This song is probably a big production on the road too, and I'd love to see it. "Comin' Home," which closes the side, is located conveniently here for easy reject if you simply can't stand it another time.

Side two opens with "Move Em' Out," their latest "new" single. There are a few unfortunate "yeah, yeahs" during the sax break that you probably never heard on your car radio, but it's still a fine tune. "Big Change Comin' " is very reminiscent of "Soul Shake," and is a good chance for the chorus to strut their stuff. . .kind of a warm-up for the fourth slice on this side, but we'll get to that in a moment. First there's "A Good Thing" which is a fine piece of Delaney raunch, over all too quickly. In fact, it's after this cut that you realize that there are a lot of short cuts here! But no matter, here comes that fourth cut: "Superstar." I would've traded all my socks to see Karen Carpenter's face the first time she heard Bonnie do this! Karen might get the Gold Record, but it ain't worth its weight in goat-turds now that Bonnie has finally put to wax her own beautiful tune (co-authored by Leon Russell).

The very swell "I Know Something Good About You" has already been discussed, so we can examine the album's final song, "Country Life." A nice homespun little ditty about "Bonnie, Rebecca, and Me," this tune gives us a chance to hear Delaney's own mellow voice with a clarity not shown before. The tempo change and the rather gruesome strings could put one off at first, but it's basically harmless and the song gets better with each hearing.

A Delaney and Bonnie album is usually better than you could have hoped for, given the chameleon nature of the "group," but this one's a special treat. If there's such a thing as life-affirming vibrations, this album is soaked in 'em! I suppose that Sonny and Cher Bono are the reigning "All-American couple," a shining example of family and decency I'm sure, but for my money, I'll take the Bramletts.

Street Music And Sheet Music

BY MIKE KOSTEK

The Pope Smokes Dope, David Peel & The Lower East Side Apple SW 3391 time: 39:59
Comin' Thru, Quicksilver SMAS-11002 35:45

When John & Yoko blew through New York City last December, they met lots of new people and made some friends like Abbie Hoffman, Jerry Rubin, Chuck Berry, Elephant's Memory (John's new backup band) and one band of crazies, David Peel & The Lower East Side. David Peel is a native New Yorker who leads his rabble in gross tunes on the streets of New York and who have two albums already released on Elektra, Have A Marajuana and The American Revolution. They have average voices (which is to say rotten) and play street instruments, bongos, washtub bass, acoustic guitars, etc. Peel and company appeared with John and Yoko on a visit to the David Frost show and sang two songs from his then upcoming album, which he was very careful to plug and explain that John and Yoko would be producing it. For Apple, of course.

I find a fascinating parallel between David Peel and Wild Man Fisher, who is sort of Peel's L.A. West Coast counterpart. Two of our most gifted and creative artists, Frank Zappa and John Lennon, have found time and motivation to [illegible] their [illegible] admitted "crazies" and what's more, John and Frank both produced their respective albums. Both have rotten voices to sing their simple songs with, while Fisher is a unique product of Los Angeles and Peel could only be from New York. Why Zappa and Lennon chose to preserve Fisher and Peel on vinyl is anybody's guess, but I view it as Frank and John's attempts to capture something new, a "street person", possible products of no age, no society other than our own. If there is an urban American street music, this is it.

The Pope Smokes Dope is an album that's hard to take, hard to play. Variations on "McDonald's Farm" with a reefer here, a clap there, are not conducive to enjoyable repeated listenings.

At best, the air is filled with an infe[illegible] insanity and joy; at wo[illegible]rably embarrassing. The simple chants and weak rock variations sung in ugly ways belong in the street, not in a small cubicle. The songs are utterly simple affairs whose meters can be figured out by scanning the lyrics. Try it:

The Pope smokes dope, God gave him the grass
The Pope smokes dope, he likes to smoke in mass
The Pope smokes dope, he's a groovy head
The Pope smokes dope, the Pope smokes dope.

God is high on mescaline,
Satan's high on smack
Pope in Rome get stoned on grass, Jesus freaks are back
Jesus Christ a super-hippie never shot up junk
Popes in Rome get stoned alone, priests in church get drunk.

Imagine the most Brooklyn cab driver getting drunk and yowling out his favorite school fight songs and you'll have an idea of what David Peel sounds like. It's all kind of sad.

This album will always be an interesting footnote to musical history, as I can't think of any other album John Lennon has produced outside his own. Of course you can give your parents fiendish nightmares by playing them The Pope Smokes Dope as it contains embodiments of some of the worst fears of straights. I mean, "I'm proud to be a New York City hippie/I'm proud of living with the cock-A-roaches/I'm proud of living in a garbage can" is almost guaranteed to drive them to feats of passion.

It all boils to this: what a-peel the album has lies in Peel's limited writing talents, and I judge only five out of the twelve songs on here to be interesting enough to stand up to repetition.

The new Quicksilver album Comin' Thru is awful. Ever since Dino Valenti, a self-styled folksinger that couldn't sing, joined the group, it's been down, down, down. Their last three Valenti albums at least had something interesting that served to negate Dino's presence and make them only half bad. It might be a nice piano run by Nicky Hopkins, or a fine cover, or four or five good songs, usually written by someone other than Dino. Sad to say, Comin' Thru has none of these. Nicky has been replaced by a fine name, Chuck Steaks, but little talent, and it turns out that all songs on the album were written or co-written by Dino, save one.

That cut, "Doin' Time In The U.S.A." is the only worthwhile song on the record with its Santana multi-rhythms and soaring harmonies. All the rest sounds like stoned-out-California sunshine freaky Muzak. Dino's off-key, off-pitch warbling about his black cat mojo gets offensive after awhile. Italian voodoo mojo anyone? With an insipid tune here, horns stolen from Van Morrison there, Comin' Thru is a sure bet for my "worst ten" album list.

Actually there was a dramatic foreshadowing in terms of this album's Valenti-rankness. Inside the cover is a list of credits of the people who played on the album.

Topping off the list is DINO VALENTI, while the rest are written in normal lettering, like Gary Duncan.

My next door neighbor is a Beatle nut, and explains away Lennon's producing David Peel by saying that "John's always been interested in weird stuff, you know." Right, but I just can't think of any excuse for Quicksilver's interest in Dino Valenti.

Albums

One Of Two Isn't Bad

By JEFF CLAYTON

Deuce: Rory Gallagher; Atco SD 7004

This album really is terrible. Rory, as you will remember, used to play lead for the ill-fated Irish blues band Taste. Taste hung around for a couple of albums, having been discovered in a little dingy smokey pub and declared promising, blah, blah, and then everyone lost interest and the band broke up amid shouting scenes, leaving Rory to fend for himself. He chose to repeat the old Taste format, hiring considerably less distinguished bass and drum men, and bucking for a little of that superstar status. Too bad. Taste had a certain drive to it, but this bunch has--nothing.

For an aspiring superstar guitar, Rory hasn't got that much to offer. His sole contribution to the literature is the development of a well-controlled ultra-high little squeaky overtone which he uses to good advantage in something like two of his limp compositions. Otherwise, he's technically facile and conceptually pretty barren. It's a shame, when he seems like such a nice guy. On stage he works quite obviously hard. He's eager to please. But his guitar is so thin--never has a Name-operated Fender sounded so powerless. When you remember the density and texture achieved by our Hendrixes and Claptons and Allmans and Wests and so on...the Gallagher slide sounds a little better nourished, but the chops are sooo pedestrian...just not very effective...

Anyway, how do you feel about some guy who sits in a smouldering little city in the Emerald Isle with a Levi jean jacket on his back and a Stratocaster in his lap singing about how he misses the delta, and how he's a riverboat gambler with the jack of hearts, and how he's done time in Sing-Sing. A lot of people in the UK feel that, by God, this is the blues. People here, too, maybe. Don't you get a little twinge when the Stones turn on their phoney Southern accent? It just ain't right.

Rory Gallagher

I'd be perfectly willing to take this kind of cultural blood-sucking from Rory, except he's got nothing to say for himself. He's just repeating the old formulas. To be strictly fair, the last two tracks "Out of My Mind" and "Crest of a Wave" almost get off the ground. But not quite. He can't sing, either.

What A Bloody Long Day It's Been: Ashton, Gardner, Dyke & Co.; Capitol SMAS-862

These are some London lads with somewhat more on the ball. Tony Ashton's vocals are pretty arresting; he can sing or scream with equal authority, and his keyboards are kinda nice, too. In fact, all the boys show good technique and the production is also what it should be. The sound is what you'd expect to get if you mixed nasty fuzz-tone chordal rock guitar with a super-smooth British pop horn section and a honky-tonk piano, and it grows and grows on you.

Here's why some people have been saying nice things about this record. The first side is remarkably solid for a first LP. "It's Agonna Be High Tonight" and "It's a Drag, I'm a Drag" lead off, two strong cuts 180 degrees apart. The first is a pleasant ditty you could easily imagine Tom Rush or someone doing, and it's such as you might want to put on for the little woman when she comes over, but "Tit's a Drag"--gosh. This is the most violent, overtly threatening piece in at least two weeks. Leaves Black Sabbath and Alice Cooper in its wake for sheer physical threat, though those two have their own strengths, God knows. Here, frantic horns perform tight runs over a bass of such momentum that it bulldozes everything in its path. Everything. The edge that Ashton puts on his voice is equally devastating. Lyric, arrangement, both impressive. It won't cause your eardrums and knees to dissolve simultaenously in helpless hot rushes, but if you sit down and put it on, it will slowly and professionally push you up against the opposing wall. It may be refined, but it's bigger than you are. Turn it up.

"Still Got a Long Way to Go" is another surreal country mush-mouth song with lots to recommend it. Definitely something good here. "Falling Song" is a jazz-oriented reformer's lament, at times akin to some sugary Chicago numbers. I wish they hadn't done what they did with the strings, but there's still a lot of lean meat on the track.

Side Two is the dark side. "Ballad of the Remo Four" is tuneful pop with a blues slant, and "Rock and Roll Boogie Woogie" is exactly what you think it is. Fair-to-good. "Got to Get Back to You" is like watered down Van Morrison, and pretty forgettable. The title track hands pretty heavy on one intriguing little passage, but it comes through alive and kicking. Nice British pop. Not so the last: "I'm Going to a Place" is four minutes of opulent mush. On the whole, however, it's not a bad performance a-tall, and next time I see something of theirs I'll give it some close scrutiny, whereas I might have said, "Who's this?"

Worth A Few Hard Earned Francs

PARIS ENCOUNTER-Gary Burton & Stephane Grappelli
By BILL KROLL

The cover of this record has a picture of Stephane Grappelli and Gary Burton with big smiles on their faces and they've got good reason to be smiling.

"Paris Encounter" is a very different album. On one hand we have a 29-year-old American vibraphonist, and on the other, a 64-year-old French violinist - a pretty unlikely combination, but when they get together they put down some pretty nice sounds.

Before hearing the album, the first thing that came to my mind was the Jean-Luc Ponty - Frank Zappa team - up on "King Kong", but the two records are actually worlds apart (although both are quite good). For one thing, the only jazz violinists that I was familiar with were Ponty and Sugarcane Harris and they both play electric violin. Since Burton's music is a little more subdued, Grappelli does not need this extra amplification and the sound is quite different, which results in a very refreshing change. Also, Burton and Grappelli play in a more conventional jazz vein and use only a small combo (vibes, violin, bass, and drums), while Ponty and Zappa do considerably more experimenting with instrumentation.

Probably the best things on the album are the up-tempo numbers including "Daphne" (written by jazz guitarist Django Reinhardt), "Coquette", and even an old Bobby Vee tune called "The Night Has a Thousand Eyes." On these sides, both Burton and Grappelli throw off some remarkably clean licks, however, on some of the slower, blue numbers, things occasionally drag, but not really that much. "Sweet Rain" is one of these slow tunes that really shines with Gary's vibes nicely conveying that vague feeling of sadness a rainy day can bring.

The main problems with this album are the sidemen and the recording itself. Steve Swallow is on electric bass and he also wrote several of the songs on the record; his playing is at least adequate and on most cuts is a good deal better, but the drumming of Bill Goodwin leaves much to be desired. Since neither the violin nor the vibes are very good rhythm instruments, when one solos, the other is often found resting. The meter on these solos can get pretty far out or be altogether non-existent, which leaves the bass and drums to establish the rhythm pattern of the piece. The bass can be ruled out in most instances since it is usually doing extended runs. Nevertheless, the job rests pretty squarely on the shoulders of Bill Goodwin, and on almost every number, he seems to be struggling vainly to set up a coherent rhythm.

Another big flaw is the manner in which the drums are recorded. It sounds like they are being played in some distant cave and if you listen closely, you can actually hear an echo on the drums which sounds totally ridiculous. Add this to the fact that 95% of Goodwin's strokes are on the hi-hat and cymbals and what you get is a constant "SshhSshhsshh" in the background with an occasional tap on the snare. So many times I wanted to hear a nice authoritative "whump" on the bass drum, but I don't think I heard more than three light taps throughout the entire record.

If you've ever heard Dave Brubeck's drummer, Alan Dawson, or if you saw Charles Crosby drumming for Rasahn Roland Kirk last week, you'll immediately notice the difference. These men realize that the assorted drums in a drum kit are there to be used. In fact, Kirk has one guy on stage who only plays tambourine, maracas, etc. to help establish the rhythm.

Now I realize that jazz doesn't require the steady, repetitive patterns of rock music, and I'm not saying that Goodwin should resort to Ginger Baker-type histrionics, but he should lay down some sort of stable beat.

This defect is really too bad, because the record is a potentially great one. About all you can do to alleviate the problem is to cut back on the treble somewhat, but this is not totally satisfactory because it takes some of the bite off of those beautiful violin lines.

So, if you can put up with the drums (they're more noticeable in some places than others), this record features some fine work by two great artists and it might be well worth your while to shell out a few hard earned francs for "Paris Encounter."

A Fine Jazz Rock Group

"Cold Blood" by COLD BLOOD (Reprise)
By BILL DENSMORE

This is the third album from the jazz based group and with the exception of two songs which suffer from over-production, is a consistent effort. This time around, Lydia Pense, the group's lead singer, has surpassed plain sexiness to become a truly powerful performer.

The first Cold Blood album was funky, and included some fine organ chords and lengthy cuts. It was also the debut lp for a label called "San Francisco" which only released five or six lp's before it folded. After the second Cold Blood album, "Sisyphus", a generally repetitive and boring album which included the much played "Too Many People", the group must have realized the pattern they had fallen into. Now they're on a new label with a new producer and arranger-Donny Hathaway, whose own recent live lp is a monumental achievement in low-key electric piano. Two Hathaway tunes found their way to this new Cold Blood, "You Had To Know", and "Valdez in the Country".

"You Had To Know" is soul all the way, with a piano introduction just like many recent Aretha Franklin tunes. Miss Pense sounds like a mature Donny Osmond; her voice is as pure, but better controlled. Here's a tune you'd expect to hear on a snowy morning driving through downtown Boston listening to WBZ.

"Valdez in the Country" is unlikely Hathaway. It's a three- and three-quarter minute instrumental with solo sax and trombone. It's beginning is Cold Blood's token attempt at duplicating Santana's sound- but they succeed. Everything falls into place on this cut, an appropriate one for the final song on the second side. This one you'd expect to hear on a sunny afternoon driving through downtown Boston listening to WBZ-FM.

While Cold Blood has always had good arrangements, they sometimes lacked the initial quality material to make the arrangements work. With Donny Hathaway's two unique additions, and James Taylor's "Lo and Behold" the group now has enough material to prevent this lp from being boring.

"Lo and Behold" has been interpreted twice before by Kate Taylor and Tracy Nelson respectively, but I think I like Lydia Pense's attempt the best. She's got as much range as Tracy Nelson but employs it less dramatically. Miss Pense lets the able musicians of the group work with her instead of behind her, and the result is strongest assertion of the song yet, "Everybody's talking 'bout the gospel story/Some shall sink and some shall rise."

"Down to the Bone" follows "Lo and Behold" but is connected to it by an organ bridge. This an original, as are the other six songs on the album. Most of it suffers from altogether ordinary guitar work though the lyrics are catchy.

"My Lady Woman", "No Way Home", and "Inside Your Soul" are pleasant but undistinguished. They neither add to nor detract from the overall quality of the album. "All My Honey", though is different. "Honey" refers to a seductiveness which Lydia Pense aptly conveys on this cut.

"I can feel you commin', and it won't be long;
My heart is runnin', and my love is strong,
But it's right, don't you know
it's all right;
When you wake up, you won't be alone--
You can take all of my honey..."

I guess what I miss on this album is the blues side of Cold Blood typified by "Let Me Down Easy" on the first album they released. Cold Blood has become another jazz-rock group-but a fine one at that. If you can listen to jazz-rock then there'll be no disagreement between you and this album.

Numbed At The Paramount

Live Performance: The Allman Brothers and Dr. John in concert at the Paramount Theatre, Springfield, April 22, 1972.

BY MIKE KOSTEK

This was the concert originally scheduled for April 6, but Greg Allman took sick, and it had to be postponed until last Thursday night.

As usual, the Springfield crowd was its stupid, drunken, obnoxious, ugly self. However, the seats were reserved this time so there was less of the football-rugby action outside the door. Since we went to the ten o'clock show, most of the nasty, ugly, super-repellant ones, the Funker Boogie Rippled Red teenyboppy bent on having a "good time" went to the seven o'clock show. This is not to imply that the over-sixteen set at the ten o'clock show had much more sense or musical appreciation, but somehow there seemed to be a more civil atmosphere in the hall, but then again I must be getting numbed to Springfield.

At 10:30 (a half hour wait is pretty good time for the Paramount) Dr. John's band began to play. I was very interested to see how Dr. John would translate his Mardi Gras-funky-wry humored-voodoo songs into a live show. His band consisted of sax, drums, guitar, organ and another partial drum set whose "special guest drummer" was Jai Johnny Johanson, second drummer for the Allman Brothers.

The band was beating out a funky blues, and the terrible singer was telling us that "Docta Jawhn will be a-comin' on now. Here he comes! Here he comes!"

And sure and he did. Dr. John Creaux (a.k.a. Mac Rebennack) knows that half of any live performance is of course the visual impact (why else do The Who and the Stones carry on so?). Only a color movie camera could do justice in describing Mac as he swung, trotted, funked and boogied out onto the stage, leading his two girl choir and a bass player. But oh my brothers the good Doctor! Even from RGHT S 119 he was a visual delight, so resplendent was he in white tuxedo, silk vest, white ruffled shirt, silver boots, black tie, black cape with red velvet lining, thin silver chain around his neck and sporting a top hat with a carnation and tall yellow feather and of course a white double-tipped cane. Dr. John Creaux, the impeccable Southern gentleman had come to play!

To start things off, he reached for his electric mandolin and went way back across five or six years to the first song on the first side of his first album, the infamous reputation-maker, "Gris-Gris Gumbo Ya Ya." I remembered the first time I had ever heard the record, years before. I remember that VOICE, so low and evil and errie. So much dark voodoo in that spoken intro: "They cawl me Docta Jawn, known as the Night Trippa. I got some gris-gris here in my sack that will cure all yo' ills."

I couldn't wait to see the effect the song would have on the audience. "He'll show 'em" I thought, "Just wait until he gets those voodoo chants going and that deep dark schized-out Leon Russell voice of his. That should really wow these creeps."

The opening chords of "Gris-Gris" concluded, and the Doctor made ready to say his piece. But the sound that came out was flat and powerless! And the music was all wrong! The single most powerful part of John's recorded work is the interplay between him and his great female choruses. Here he had only two in the chorus, and they came up sadly lacking the power punch that Dr. John's crazy cajun music needs so badly. The final strike was the mixing. The instruments were out of proper perspective as the two drummers emerged most clearly, then the bass. Dr. John's voice and piano, the two most important parts of his music, were lost in a wimpy mash of sound. It takes perfect elements to make his voodoo atmosphere work, and a bad-voiced Doctor coupled with one-too-few in the chorus coupled with only a fair mix coupled with a poor sound system makes for an ineffective hour of pleasant music.

One good moment came when he said "My chops are givin' out, but we got to keep on keeping' on, so we'll just get a little fonk in the air," and he sat down and played some fine rag-time boogie rockers. Good plunking.

The Doctor's performance was typified by his "Patriotic Flag-Waiver." When he sang "Send all them Commie draft-resisters over to Vietnam/You know if they protest over there Dr. John won't give a damn" his voice was too burned out to give the needed inflection and raucous subtlety to make it plain he was role-playing, and I'm sure that half of the audience thought he was some crazy Fascist. Anyway, most dismissed Mac as a lukewarm opening act, which is a shame, as he could have been tremendous with a good voice and proper sound planning.

His departure was as spectacular as his entrance, with the band playing his rolliking "Mardi Gras Day" as Mac took out his red silk handkerchief and swung it round and round his head Preservation Hall Jazz Band-New Orleans-Mardi Gras style as he swing, trotted, funked and boogied out.

Although he was severely hampered by all of the aforementioned problems, it was still a joy to be able to experience a little Southern "fonk" and New Orleans soul. A beautiful hour.

But it was the Allmans that everyone came to see, and so they came on stage to tumultuous applause at the witching hour and whipped into their perennial opener, "Statesboro Blues." The crowd went nuts and fell all over itself trying to stand up and leap into the aisles.

After Dr. John's subdued set, the Allman crew came on like gangbusters. The Doctor's reception had been only a shade more than perfunctory, but they were wild and unabashed for the Allmans.

If you have any of the records of the Brothers recorded live then you know how they sounded, as they recreated their live sound exactly as on the records. They were crisp and clear and perfectly mixed. Each instrument could be heard in proper context.

Power is the word, and they've got it and know how to use it well. Always a guitar-bassed band, they have been slowed by Duane Allman's death, but the band was still tight and exciting as they ran through some of their classic numbers: "One Way Out," "Stormy Monday," "Done Somebody Wrong," and "You Don't Love Me." About six fools in the crowd yelled themselves hoarse calling for "Blue Sky," but the only thing they played from the Eat A Peach album was "Ain't Wastin' Time No More."

As time and the songs went by it became obvious that the star of the show would be Dickie Betts, the lead guitar player in departed Duane's spot, and who plays extraordinarily clean and crisply. In almost every number Dickie would step out with some fine runs which would set the audience a-howling.

Of course the obvious comparisons between the old and new bands must be made, and since Duane was about the best guitar player in America, Mr. Betts has a lot to prove. Before the band had a great bench strength with Dickie on rhythm guitar stepping in whenever he could, and it made for great variety without stretching anyone's ability. In a way it's like the Beatles' singing. Together it was so nice to hear their varied harmonies and trading off as lead singer on different cuts. Now that they each make solo albums it's not so pleasant to hear the same voice singing every cut on an album. So it seems that the boys are a bit less super, less powerful without Duane. Duane seemed to be constantly bubbling with a certain fire and recklessness and came out with about ten ideas a second. In contrast, Dickie plays cool, carefully calculated guitar lines and seems to come up with about eight ideas a second.

As long as they continue to play the same type of material, e.g. power based bluesrock, I'm afraid that they will never be as good without Duane. Still damn good though.

The concert ended much too soon, after a mere hour (surely one of the shortest Allman concerts in history, as they are infamous for their four hour sets). However, they had to catch a plane and left the audience howling for much more.

It was an abrupt ending, for their killer number was their last, "Whippin' Post," which was a twenty minute showcase for Betts as he showed amazing skill with slide guitar. A great, great performance by all, with Greg Allman changing the last line from "Good Lord I feel like I'm dyin' " to "Everybody knows there's no such thing as dyin'." I could almost believe that all of the crazies there knew and felt what he meant.

Van Ronk : Nobody Listened

Little Latin Larry At "Home"

By JIM LAVRAKAS

Dave Van Ronk

Dave Van Ronk walked out onto the stage at Smith College rolling drunk last Friday night. From the start his performance at Green Hall was as much like his performance at UMass last year as A State of the Union Address is to the Dean Martin Show. It was one of those singularly strange concerts that many people found a complete waste of time while other people understood that by listening less to the music and more to the drunken illuminations of Van Ronk they would come to know a sad yet wise old "folk singer" of a distinctive kind.

Van Ronk's stay on stage was a short one with his moods changing frequently and his music following his moods. Rarely did he cater to the shallow audience who demanded "Cocaine Blues" nonstop throughout his performance. The crowd was utterly rude (not due to any excess of dope or alcohol as was the case at other area concerts) walking up and down the aisles while he was trying to perform and throwing catcalls at the same time. One cute fellow amused his friends with the witticism that Van Ronk was nothing but a "fat troll". Witty indeed.

Sometimes he would laugh at a statement he had just made; his laugh was a mucuous-smothered wheeze that blew forth and made one shiver. Yet, because his time on stage was full of fearful and funny surprises about a sensitive and frustrated man the time "wasted" listening to him was really well spent.

"What the hell are you doing here?" he said to open his performance. "Mr. Nixon is killing people and you're sitting here to see me...I'm not impressed." His voice had slowly assumed a reproachful tone. He attempted to start his first song but only succeeded in huffing and puffing and making stupid faces (to the delight of the cretinic crowd) while his fingers moved clumsily up and down the neck of his guitar.

"I have a theory," he said. He recounted a vision he had had of Nixon and Kissinger strategy talking. Kissinger told the President that the enemy must be "neutralized", and that now was the time to resume the bombing of North Vietnam. Kissinger then pointed out to the President, so said Van Ronk, that now was the time to start because "Van Ronk is on the road." What connection he was trying to make was anybody's guess. The story was, to say the least, unintelligible, yet it was just one of the many incomprehendible statements he made concerning his feelings about the War and his involvement in the protest.

He told the audience that he was, in fact, financially forced to leave the city. He then asked the audience if they were going to be in New York the next day. It was disturbing to hear him lambaste the crowd (god knows they deserved it, however) for not going to New York and stayed to listen to him instead. (After his performance, when asked if he wanted to be in New Yor, he said, "Yeh, I want to be there but I can't make it, I can't make it. I've got this road tour". One was never really quite sure how seriously he took the whole issue because of his intoxicated thoughts and his inability to give concrete reasons for his not being there.)

Suddenly hysterical, he screamed, "That pig can't do this!" It was a violent outburst that frightened people. The crowd assumed that by "pig" he meant the President, and by "can't do this" he meant the stepped-up bombing of the North. But who could tell?

He quieted down just as suddenly and played his first son, "One Meatball". His voice was loud, and strong, and typically brittle. It was wonderful to hear him in such good form considering the state his metabolism was in.

He went into another screamer, "Go Down Hanna", immediately. After the first two songs he spoke again. "It's nice to see gangs back in New York again. I used to be in a gang." Then somehow connecting this thought with his next he said, "I like the Viet Cong, man. I like their style." He wheezed out a laugh and then went into a dumb version of "Would You Like To Swing On A Star". He dwelled on the chorus with 'or would you rather be a PIG?" with relish.

"Balless Wonder" was preceeded with several dumb faces which the crowd condescended to laugh at. He made the song hard-hitting and a real shocker. Screaming the chorus "now I'm a fucking hero", he brought forth a real bitterness.

Van Ronk promised at the start that his set would be a short one ("there's a rock and roll band warming up behind me", he said, "what do you want to hear me for?"). The crowd once again demanded "Cocaine Blues", his own song which he sarcastically termed "that plastic monument", and when they did not shut up he ignored them and played the beautiful "He Was A Friend Of Mine". He finished his set with "River To Skate Away On" and when the crowd yelled for his return he came back with a wry smile on his face with which he launched into what was by far the most tight, serious, and ultimately, the finest song of the evening, "Song Of The Wandering Angus". He never did brake down and play "Cocaine Blues"-which was a point in his favor.

After he left it was a short time before the commercial and superfluous McKendree Spring came on. Behind the stage it was sad to see Van Ronk, a huge man, towering over all the little drunken stupids, one fellow trying to drag him off to a bar while one young lady attempted to drag him off to her bed. No one was, or had, taken him, seriously (as he had complained earlier in his set). They were grabbing for a piece of him and it was sad to see his half hearted resistance. It would have been more profitable and lasting to have horded some kind of momento other than a hunk of his flesh. For as anybody knows, unlike a memory, flesh just rots away.

Little Latin Larry

Little Latin Larry must have read Frank Baglione on Little Latin Larry, yet he somehow managed to return on Saturday night and entertain his UMass fans. His show was as fun and fine as ever with slight revisions, however, to appease the close-approaching-thirty-year-old members of the crowd. Larry and the Hord returned with a little of Frank's advice, criticism, that is, guiding their show.

The changes in Larry's show were few and subtle, not extreme enough perhaps for some people's taste. The Campus Center crowd loved him anyway, per usual. One of the Latinaires was missing and the music played was mor common to the era Larry and Company tried to portray.

Elvis Presley, the "King of Rock and Roll", Larry called him although Little Richard would certainly dispute that, was the main source of Larry's time warp goodies backwards two decades. "You Ain't Nothin' But A Hound Dog" was the most typical and memorable Presley song. Larry put on his usual stage show with his "main man" ignoring Baglione's earlier cynical observation and reverently getting down on one knee to hand Larry his towel.

Larry's show contrasted sharply with the show put on by the "Fabulous Feces", an obscene group of musicians that hails from Boston. They just could not entertain that crowd of yesteryear. The crowd showed that they were truly "in character" as they shouted "dirty hippie faggots" as "Feces" left the stage.

Larry returned smug and triumphant to the joyous crowd proving once again that there is no better advantage than that of the home court.

Basic Audio

The Literature Of Hi-Fi

BY FRANK JOHNSON

Good scholarship dictates the inclusion of a bibliography at the end of a research paper, where sources may be identified that contain information not endemic to the writer's own. I would be remiss if I did not annotate this column to provide further information for interested readers.

Many readers have asked me privately how I got started in audio in the first place. I usually answer them in terms of the following incidental history; I am including it because it is relevant to our discussion. In so doing, this history will explain why the following bibliography will be helpful.

I first became seriously interested in audio in 1964. At that time I had had no electronics background and only a strong interest in music to guide my ear. I began my study of hi-fi with two basic methods: 1.) I sent away for a Lafayette radio catalogue, and 2.) I purchased the various audio periodicals which contained surveys, ads, and test reports so as to get an idea of the general cost of a good hi-fi system.

The Lafayette catalogue, and its comapnion the Allied/Radio Shack catalogue, offers an excellent introduction to the average price of a good component system, and they also contain much information on how to go about buying accessories and parts for an existing hi-fi rig. They are factual, up-to-date, and, best of all, free (except for a $0.06 postcard). Browse through them at your leisure; get an idea of the language of hi-fi, the meaningful specifications, and the various manufacturers that make component hi-fi gear. Write to: Lafayette Radio Electronics, 111 Jericho Turnpike, Syosset, N.Y. 11791, or drop in at the newly-opened store here in Amherst. For Allied/Radio Shack, the address is 2725 W. 7th St., Fort Worth, Texas 76107, and there is an associate store on Rte. 9 between Amherst and Belchertown, which might stock the catalogue.

In the second category, magazines generally provide the most detailed and up-to-date coverage of new products; they also provide test reports that the catalogues do not. There are a variety of electronics-related magazines available, ranging from Kiplinger's Changing Times to Popular Science. In the following pages, I am listing only the purely hi-fi oriented magazines which concentrate on audio every month (or quarter, depending on circulation). I am also providing a capsule review of each journal's organization and effectiveness, as well as details about subscriptions.

Recently I submitted a manuscript on different listening trends overseas to a British publisher. I was motivated to do this because there are clear-cut differences between U.S. and British hi-fi systems. In general, the British favor do-it-yourself techniques and stress mechanical aptitude, rather than cost-no-object systems. The emphasis is on economy and performance, rather than gloss or cost. Knowledgeable audiophiles often prefer to subscribe to British publications for these reasons. Although the line voltage is different and most of the components are not available for the home market, the articles are generally superior and well-written.

For these reasons, I heartily endorse an overseas subscription to a newly-formed audio magazine in Britain, Popular Hi-Fi. It comes out monthly, and the cost of a subscription, while not excessive, has increased recently because of the dollar devaluation. A sea mail subscription generally arrives 3 weeks late, but it's the only economical means of getting the magazine to you. The emphasis in this exceedingly fine journal is on home setups and its pages contain many helpful tips and readers' contributions. It would be highly recommended if only for a cultural analysis. A sea mail 1-yr subscription costs about $12, and it is available from: Haymarket Publishing Ltd., Gillow House, 5 Winsley Street, London, England (U.K.). This is perhaps the best consumer-oriented semi-technical hi-fi publication available.

Another excellent and more readily-accessible publication is Audio, a monthly U.S. journal that dates back, in various forms, to Radio magazine in 1917. It is styled: "The Authoritative Magazine About High Fidelity," and each month it lives up to its own (and others') expectations. Many readers might find some of the more complicated and technical articles hard to follow, but the test reports are generally the most comprehensive in the industry, and are performed by leading experts (C.G. McProud, Leonard Feldman) not necessarily connected to the magazine itself. Every month industry representatives contribute excellent technical articles, some of which are worth the entire cost of the magazine in terms of their very high scholarship. Audio stresses electronics and soft-pedals music and record reviews. A 1-yr. subscription costs $5, and it is available from: North American Publishing Co., 134 N. 13th St., Philadelphia, Penna. 19107. It is also available on some (not all) newstands. Strongly recommended.

In descending order of excellence in matters pertaining to audio, High Fidelity would follow next. It is published by Billboard Publications, and comes in two forms: the regular edition, and the "Musical America" edition. The former is directed more at audio and recordings, while the latter is aimed at providing additional information about music and performances. Unless one keeps up regularly with continental music events, the former is to be preferred. High Fidelity features generally quite informative articles, and its test facilities are among the most elaborate in the industry. It is hampered by an overabundance of advertisements (how else could they make money?), quite a number of questionable record reviews, and a 1-1 coverage of both audio and classical music. This method of presentation risks alienation of patrons to both camps, and because of this and other reasons, Audio is to be preferred. A 1-yr. subscription costs $8, from Subscription Dept., High Fidelity, P. O. Box 14156, Cincinnati, Ohio 45214.

Stereo Review, put out by the Ziff-Davis Publishing Group, is very similar to High Fidelity, and it is its closest competitor. Its audio articles and test reports sometimes duplicate those of the other magazines, and frequently show radically different and contradictory findings. Julian Hirsch, who performs the test reports, is prone to dismiss a product with the phrase "the best of its kind we have ever tested" with faithful repetition, month after month. Its testing equipment is often not capable of measuring the capabilities of some products, and this fact is acknowledged in the test reports. The editor, William Anderson, writes as if he were on a perpetual ego-trip; the musical editor, James Goodfriend, tends towards musical snobbery (although he is a very capable writer). Larry Klein sarcastically answers serious technical questions, and Rex Reed, irascible theatre and movie critic, is delegated to the task of denegrating just about every record he reviews. Some articles in Stereo Review are informative and well-written, but on the average, its performance is definitely second-rate. A 1-yr. subscription costs $7, and it is available from: Stereo Review, circulation dept., P. O. Box 1099, Flushing, N.Y. 11352.

Two notable small-circulation publications that might interest serious audiophiles are: The Audio Amateur, a quarterly roundup of construction plans and technical tips featuring regular contributions from Reginald Williamson and P. Baxandall, noted British audio authorities. The subscription rates are $5 for 4 issues, from: Audio Amateur, 317 Dickinson Ave., Swarthmore, Pa. 19081. Another limited-circulation journal of interest is the Hi-Fi Newsletter, Box 593, Hialeah, Fla. 33011. A 1-yr subscription to this very informative little magazine, which is recommended more towards the advanced or serious audiophile, costs $7.50.

Magazines fulfill the important task of providing regular coverage of new products and important audio developments. The weakness of relying on them is occasional manufacturers' rhetoric and inaccuracy. To fill the gaps, the following comprehensive bibliography is suggested.

Acoustic Research puts out two very informative books on audio which are now classics, having first appeared well over a decade ago. They each cost $1, and no home stereo system should be without them. Some valuable information for the audio series was researched from them. The first is entitled "High Fidelity Systems," by Roy F. Allison, vice-president of AR, (1963) New York: Dover Publications. It is basically a manual for proper operation of a home music system. A more advanced companion volume is Edgar Villchur's "Reproduction of Sound"(1962) New York: Dover Publications, directed more towards the theory of audio reproduction. Both are good buys for the money.

A rather dated but still eminently useful book, which covers virtually all aspects of hi-fi, is the Hi-Fi Stereo Handbook by William F. Boyce (1961); New York: Howard Sams Co. This volume is a comprehensive background that elucidates both the simple and the complex subjects which magazines and many other books do not. Although its age renders it more useful to a vacuum-tube-oriented approach, much information is quite relevant nonetheless.

For an electricity background, the following book is recommended, but it may be out of print: "Radio Electronics Made Simple," by Martin Schwartz (1956) Mineola, N.Y.: Ameco Publishing Corp. In uncomplicated but quite readable language it describes the intricacies of AM radio transmission and simple amplifiers, plus elementary circuits. For a brilliant analysis of the complexities associated with FM multiplexing, read Norman Crowhurst's "Fm Stereo Multiplexing" (1961) New York: Rider Publications. His comprehensive but abstruce Understanding Hi-Fi Circuits (1957) New York: Gernsback Library, is less useful, but offers an insight to vacuum-tube amplifier circuitry.

A classic on the subject, Abraham B. Cohen's Hi-Fi Loudspeakers & Enclosures (1956) New York: Rider Publications, is entirely authoritative, and is a "must" for the interested amateur who wants to build his own enclosures. At the end of the book several construction details are provided for those handy with wood. It costs $5. For help in reading those seemingly incomprehensible electronics schematics, "Read Electronics Diagrams" (1956) New Augusta, Ind.: Editors & Engineers Publishers, is recommended.

TV and radio servicemen usually keep a copy of the latest RCA Receiving Tube Manual (or the companion, RCA Transistor Manual) on hand for date on tubes and transistors. For $1.25, these books are probably the most technical data you can buy for the money. Electrical values and circuits are included in them, and they are available from RCA Technical Publications, Harrison, N.J. Their complexity, however, would tend to restrict their use to potential engineers or servicemen. They are still good to keep on hand if needed.

The above bibliography is by no means definitive, and it is suggested that interested audiophiles consult local bookstores or hi-fi shops for additional and possibly superior, works. Lastly, occasionally consult consumers' publications such as Consumers Reports, but don't place too much faith in the findings; recently CR has been involved in several lawsuits for misrepresentation of fact and unsolicited sarcasm. Finally, always pay attention to what the dealer tells you, but don't let him do your thinking for you. He knows the intricacies of many products probably better than you ever will, because he makes his living selling them. However, when it comes to selecting your own components, rely on several sources, not any one in particular.

Next week we'll offer a brief article on minor trouble-shooting. Also, there is a pending condensation of all the Poor Richard's audio series in the form of a single manuscript, to be published probably next fall. For those of you who are interested, this series was a revision of a previous book I have written on the subject, and, depending on the interest of both the public and the publisher, I hope to have it available as a reference. Leave word in Poor Richard's office if you would be interested in purchasing such a book, which will be available in limited-edition, paper-bound form.

gangster films and does so with what may be best labeled the biggest of them all. Nearly every last piece of Puzo's mammoth chronicle of the rise of an Italian Crime syndicate is present in this spectacularly refreshing three-hour entertainment. The film also marks the return of Marlon Brando as one of our leading film actors in the titled role, and the supporting performances from Al Pacino to James Cahn, are all equally fine. The film, like The Last Picture Show, shocks us into realizing just how good old-fashioned, straight-forward narrative can be.

The Hot Rock (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton)

Investigation Of A Citizen Above Suspicion (Saturday, Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:30 and 9:30)

An Italian political thriller which has received a far better critical reception than this boring and grating drama deserves. A police official murders his girlfriend for no apparent reason and in the end little value. The direction is fast and cumbersome, the script, recently nominated for an Oscar, was vague, and the acting was mediocre. Its most grating aspects were the incoherent structure and the pounding, noxious music score. Despite its accolades, such as a Grand Prize at Cannes in 1970, a much overrated film.

Klute (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

Jane Fonda gives the finest performance of her career as a high class call girl being terrorized by a perverted murderer. Donald Sutherland plays Klute, a midwestern detective who helps track down the murderer. The script is taut and evokes memory of the best of Hitchcock; unfortunately the direction, by Alan J. Paluka, is overly stylized and too melodramatic for the film to be exceptional. Still well worth seeing for Fonda's performance and its excellent evocation of New York's freaky milieu.

The Lion In Winter (Friday, Mahar, 7, 9, 11)

Katherine Hepburn and Peter O'Toole match wits in this screen adaptation of William Goldman's dynamic, if not a bit too contemporary, look at the relationship between King Henry II and his Queen, Eleanor. The performances and the bitter rancor are marvelous to watch, even if they are probably historically inaccurate. The story concerns what happens when Henry calls back to England his three sons and his caged Queen to bitterly fight out who the aging king's heir will be. The dialogue sounds like misplaced Albee and the situations are as wry as they are entertaining. The performances are the film's chief virtues, especially when Hepburn and O'Toole are center-screen. O'Toole plays a much more mature and better thought out Henry than he played in the earlier Becket and Hepburn is her usual fully professional, completely captivating self in her Oscar-winning portrayal. The film is a large, entertaining historical pageant, well acted and plotted.

Macbeth (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)

Roman Polanski has re-created Shakespeare's classic story of murder, guilt and revenge with a flamboyant style that includes his own imaginative touches as well as a traditional rendition of plot. The film is visually stunning, but often astonishingly gory. Polanski revels in the grotesque with his usage of nude, misshapen witches, and in the sensual with his Lady Macbeth, who sleepwalks in the nude. The acting, for the most part is extremely well done, but without the dynamic force or strength of conviction necessary to do justice to Shakespeare's masterpiece.

M*A*S*H (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)

The most memorable film comedy of last year and the best military satire since Kubrick's Dr. Strangelove in 1964. Robert Altman has structured a loose, profane, comedy about the way three surgeons manage to keep their sanity during the Korean War. Their behavior may lead you to think the war was one big frat party, nonetheless their exploits are both hilarious and irreverent as they nearly quite literally shoot the bird at the Army. The scenes of gore occasionally shock the audience, but place the film in its right context. Featured are Elliot Gould, Donald Sutherland, Tom Skeritt, and Sally Kellerman

Summer Of '42 (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

This nostalgic ode is quickly becoming this year's Love Story in terms of popularity. How a boy becomes a man, with a little help from Jennifer O'Neill, is seen in this rose-colored look at a young man's sexual awareness set one summer in Maine. Director Robert Mulligan has accomplished the rather difficult job of sustaining the same emotional tone throughout.

Sunday, Bloody, Sunday (Sunday, Academy of Music, Northampton)

John Schlesinger has had a career distinguished by fine films with remarkable performances. His latest film is remarkable in every way possible as it not only contains three of the finest performances of the year, but also the year's best script and the most successful directorial job. Schlesinger has captured every nuance of Penelope Gillait's wordy wonderfully entertaining script; Sunday explores human relationships to such a fine degree that it makes all other films look childish by comparison. The relationship explored is one between three people, two men and a woman. Bob Elkins, a young artist is having affairs with Alex, a young businesswoman, and Dr. Daniel Hirsch, a middle-aged physician. Peter Finch is finally given a role of deep complexities and handles it more than ably. Glenda Jackson plays Alex with a humorous mad restraint, finally escaping from being type cast as another loon, and Murray Head has the pivotal role of Bobby and makes quite an impressive debut with it.

Tales From The Crypts (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

The first satisfying horror film in four years, or at least since Night Of The Living Dead, is this genuinely frightening, ingenious, and intelligent excursion into the supernatural. It is a set of five horror tales as five tourists trapped in a crypt are given visions of what they would do if released. Quite original and scary with a fine cast led by Ralph Richardson, Nigel Patrick, and Patrick Magee.

What's Up Doc? (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)

Peter Bogdanovich's second successful attempt at recreating the great style of the classic Hollywood directors, this time the witty, sophisticated comedies of Thirties. Here the director is Howard Hawkes and the film What's Up Doc? exemplifies most is his Bringing Up Baby. The plots are nearly the same; in the earlier version Cary Grant played a scatterbrained young man who becomes romantically intrigued with the sophisticated Katherine Hepburn. In this recreation, Ryan O'Neal and Barbra Streisand attempt to replace these two masters at sophisticated comedy and fail quite simply in the process. Their failure at imitation though is refreshing and allows for their innate charms to shine, as does the comedy which is a supple blend of the sophisticated and slapstick and from the opening title sequence featuring Streisand singing Cole Porter's "You're the Top" and ends with Porky Pig saying, "That's all folks." The film is a reverent vibrant evocation of the great Hollywood comedies.

Weekend

Music

David Amram

Musician David Amram will be artist-in-residence at UMass Friday through May 5 under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council. He will present two public concerts in addition to seminars, lectures, and other programs.

Amram has been described as being comfortable in both Philharmonic Hall and Fillmore East. He is currently heavily involved in folk and eastern music and will offer a concert of this music Saturday at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall at UMass. The concert is billed as David Amram and His Friends Sing Folk and Eastern.

Amram will be joined by his quartet for a jazz concert May 4 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets for the two public concerts and a full schedule of his activities may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, UMass, 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the door before each concert.

Some of Amram's activities during his residence are: a drop-in folk coffee house at the Blue Wall Cafeteria in the Campus Center at 10 p.m. Friday; a reception in the Campus Center at 5 p.m. Sunday; assembly program at Amherst Regional Junior High School 10 a.m. Monday; lecture on "No More Walls" in Thompson Tower 104 at 8 p.m. Tuesday. Also: rap session at the Aesthetic Center, School of Education, 10 a.m. May 3; open jam session and improvisational workshop in Old Chapel, 6:30 p.m. May 3.

David Bromberg

David Bromberg, singer, songwriter, and composer, is making his final appearance at the Amherst Folklore Center tonight for two showings, 7:30 and 10:00. The music is easy low-down, shitkickin' bluegrass and Bromberg has established himself in the upper ranks as a fine guitar-picking country musician. The Columbia recording artist was once a studio sideman but has now earned his way into the spotlight of fully professional performances. -- Well worth it!

McKendree Spring

Mount Holyoke College will sponsor a free evening concert Saturday, April 29, at 8:00. Unfortunately the group performing is none other than the polluted McKendree Spring. They are no more than a crowd pleasing electronic band that offers little in the way of professional musicianship. Characterized mainly by the likes of an electric violin, McKendree Spring could hardly continue an act if there were to be a power shortage. If you like top-forty feedback you'll enjoy the nightmare, if you're after more tasteful sound, stay away.

Todd Rundgren

Todd Rundgren, Reprise recording artist, will be performing in a free concert Sunday afternoon at three o'clock near Alumni Stadium (South end). Being at one time the mainspring of the group Nazz, Rundgren is billed to be a crazy, fast-moving, fire-work fingered guitarist. His eight piece band may be found playing anything from the brightest Ravel to the heaviest of any electronics, however Rundgren himself is the performer to watch. Two Boston area groups, Keady, Smithline and Baltimore and Brother Ralph will fill the bill.

Symphony Band Concert

The UMass-Amherst Symphony Band under the direction of Larry Weed, director of bands, will present its final concert of the season Sunday.

David Amram will guest conduct his "King Lear Variations." Amram is musician-in-residence at UMass part of this spring semester, through a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts and the UMass Fine Arts Council.

He has composed about 100 orchestral and chamber works, written two operas, and conducted about 100 symphony concerts. He plays eight instruments and was the choice of Leonard Bernstein to be the first composer in residence at the New York Philharmonic.

The Symphony Band will also perform a tone poem by William Schumann, "George Washington Bridge," and "Deserts" by Varese. The brass and percussion sections will be spotlighted in Schuller's "Symphony For Brass And Percussion" in four movements, and "Concerto For Percussion" by Toshiro Mayuzumi.

The program, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass, will be open to the public, without charge.

Doc Watson on WFCR

A conversation with North Carolinan guitar picker and folk singer, Doc Watson will be featured on this Saturday afternoon's Folkroots on WFCR (88.5FM) from 1 to 2. Also featured will be early music of Doc Watson along with his family and friends, and an old tape of Southern field hollers, folk songs and folk tales. Folkroots can be heard every Saturday on WFCR.

Theater

Canterbury Tales

The UMass Theatre will close out its 1971-72 season with a theatrical event that most theatre goers seldom have the opportunity of participating in, the world premiere of a theatrical production. On May 4-6 and 11-13 8:30 p.m., Bartlett Auditorium, The UMass Theatre will present Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, from a production concept arrived at by Marya Bednerik and Janet Craft.

Six of Chaucer's most popular tales are explored for their dramatic quality by an ensemble of six performers under the direction of Ms. Bednerik and Ms. Craft.

The six tales were selected for their variety of expression and humor. They are The world famous Wife of Bath's, The Prioress's, The Millers's, The Pardoner's, The Clerk's and The Merchant's.

Working with only six performers enables the ensemble to display a variety of talents in a variety of roles. Each performer singularly and in ensemble is given the opportunity to explore the dramatic possibilities of Chaucer's poetry through dance, movement and voice. The method of working on Canterbury Tales is untraditional in that the performers are led to their themes by improvisational work.

The Tales themselves provide a variety of motifs and themes. Three Tales, for example, The Miller's, The Merchant's, and The Clerk's, are concerned with three divergent views of marriage. The Pardoner's tale is an expression of man's attempt to kill death.

Despite such "profound" sentiments, the tales, true to Chaucer's work, are based in comedy and entertainment.

Tickets are available at the Bartlett Box Office, reservations may be made by calling 545-2579. As seating is limited it is advised that those who plan to attend reserve their seats early.

The School For Scandal

The Restoration comedy by Richard Brinsley Sheridan will be presented tonight, tomorrow, and Sunday evening at 8 at the Theater #14, Smith College. Additional performances next weekend. ($).

The Cocktail Party

T. S. Eliot's poetic contemporary drama will be performed tonight at 8:30 and tomorrow night at the Kirby Theater, Amherst College.

You're A Good Man Charlie Brown

Films

A Beatles Concert

The Beatles are coming to campus this weekend, on film of course, in a movie that has surprisingly enough escaped any public recognition. It happens that on their first American tour Capitol Records released a promotional film, intended for television production; however, mysteriously, it was never shown. The movie itself depicts the Beatles in their first concert appearance complete with shrilling and screaming spectators in their very early days of 1964. Strangely, the movie is in excellent condition being well preserved and lasting approximately forty minutes. Most of the material comes from Meet The Beatles, their first album, reflecting those days we initially were introduced to them on the Ed Sullivan Show. If you're interested in old Beatles' nostalgia, you'd be wise to witness a rare film Saturday night in Mahar. There will be showings at 6:30, 8:00, 9:30 and 11:00.

Todd Rundgren will be playing with Keady, Smithline and Baltimore' and 'Brother Ralph' this Sunday afternoon at the Stadium Fields from 3 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. The concert, needless to say, is free, officially deemed the 'Spring Weekend' of 1972.

A Clockwork Orange (Showcase Cinema, West Springfield)

Stanley Kubrick's masterful and devastating "horrorshow" of our immediate future deals with a society where criminals are subjected to behavior conditioning that strips them of their free will. The story concerns a juvenile delinquent thirty years hence and how his exploits lead him to become a dupe for both psychologists and politicians. This young man, Alex, has three primal drives: violence, rape, and Beethoven, specifically the Ninth and spends most of his free time participating in his obsessions.

City Lights (Campus Cinema Hadley)

City Lights is among the four or five of Charlie Chaplin's finest movies. Chaplin, who wrote, directed and starred in this story of a tramp who falls in love with a blind girl, once again shows his acute sense of the close connection between humor and pathos. Simply watching Chaplin on screen is a delight for he injects this sense into his every movement whether it be that of tipping his hat or of simply walking down the street. All Chaplin fans should be sure to see this classic film.

Cool Breeze (Amherst Cinema.

The latest attempt to cash in on the new Hollywood superhero, the cool Black detective found in Shaft makes for some good Saturday night diversion with a fine cast led by Raymond St. Jacques.

Fiddler On The Roof (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

A mundane version of the longest running musical in Broadway history. The disappointing epic comes away by director Norman Jewison who has employed needless flashy techniques in the transition. The musical becomes bottom-heavy and static when blown up on a Super Panavision screen and blasted out of twelve stereo speakers. The show itself has grace, charm, and a natural warmth that are all but culminated here. Instead every moment reeks with phony folklines and cornball routines. The excellent Bock-Harnick score has been homogenized in musical interludes embarrassing at best, even Topol, generally considered the best of the stage Tevye's, becomes a glaring caricature of a poor, Russian peasant.

Frankenstein (Friday, Campus Center Auditorium, 7, 9, 11)

The most famous horror film of all time and a classic of the genre. A film adaptation of the Mary Shelley novel about a slightly neurotic doctor and his lumbering monster. Boris Karloff's Monster rightly remains one of the most famous characterizations in film history, and the film is really quite wonderful.

The Godfather (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Mario Puzo's sprawling bestseller reaches the screen as one of the most impressive and satisfying American films in quite some time. It is literally a cornucopia of everything a social drama should be filled with. A strong plot, nostalgic settings, warmth, and violence. Under the skillful direction of Francis Ford Copolla, the film revives the seemingly lost genre of the

Letters To The Editor

Impressing Your Life-Style

To the Editor:

It is time for me to act, but before I must articulate why.

As an American citizen, conscious of the discrepancy between the ideals and reality of this democracy, I feel it is necessary for me as an individual to try to incorporate its ideals into my life. I do not wish to be passive as were the massive majority of Germans during WWII-this war has not yet effected me nor my family personally, but facts concerning the war and its relation to problems within the U.S. do affect me.

First of all, ideally I envision a peacefulworld. The continuation of this war and all other wars removes that possibility and makes its attainment continually more remote. I believe in Peace because simply it does not seem right for people to be born to be killed. Death is soon enough, why cut life short? And in this war particularly, Americans do not have the right to mingle our interests, to superimpose our wants, our philosophy on another people who are struggling to live and to create a new life, for themselves and their The number of American soldiers who die during any one week has decreased, but if I conclude correctly, it is because the war is becoming more and more mechanized, therefore efficient, so while expert military men control the bombs from within safe army bases, the Vietnamese are slain, wounded, or killed. It seems incredible that we can call this war a humanitarian gesture, a fight for the survival of democracy, when we arbitrarily kill others to maintain our status as the number 1 nation of the world.

And if we dared look a hundred years into the future, I think we would be frightened of the terrible revenge Vietnam may take upon us. For the war we not only attempt to force a way of life on a people, we also are destroying any possibility of life.

The war in Vietnam relates closely to problems within this country. I recognize this fact, but today add my person to preventing the war itself and from now on, must work for the attainment of peace, in particular the immediate abolition of this war.

Claudia Apfelbaum

Bromery's Facade

To the Editor:

The Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts has had a specially convened meeting to decide on its policy towards ROTC and military recruitment on campus. In a highly pragmatic attempt to alleviate the crisis on the two major campus' of the University stemming from the increased carnage of the Vietnamese by American planes and bombs, the Board ironically stated at the commencement of the meeting that it could not make any decisions at that time concerning the ostensible reason for the meeting. The meeting was deemed "special" and thus all decisions were left to some future date.

I would like to suggest that there were some highly cynical reasons for calling the "special" "powerless" meeting of the Board. Firstly, the meeting was called to take the responsibility for the lack of decision-making away from the Chancellor of the Amherst campus and place it on the shoulders of a "powerless" Board at a time when the Amherst campus was faced with a potential crisis in the form of an occupation of the ROTC building and the demand for using that building for a distinctly antithetical reason: to set up a Center for Social Change. By moving the Center to another place on Campus while pawning off the responsibility for deciding on the fate of ROTC on the Board (who then deemed themselves powerless), Chancellor Bromery has maintained a liberal facade while shirking all responsibility. Similarly, President Wood, beseiged by students from the Boston campus, found it simple and pragmatic to place responsibility for non-decision on a personality-less, unknown Board which proclaimed itself "impotent" to decide anything.

A second pragmatic reason for shifting the responsibility to the Board was to gain time for the Administration. If the decisions concerning the crisis can be postponed another couple of weeks, ROTC will again be planted in their building while the perceived immediate "crisis" may be quieted down as Nixon plays his usual political games, as the university community gets "used" to the bombing and carnage and as the students who initially created the problem by sitting-in in the ROTC building get involved in completing their papers and preparing for final exams as the end of the term approaches. Thus, the Board calls for a non-binding "referendum" to see what the "sense" of the Amherst campus is, and tries to set up its next meeting to consider the issue late in May. Unable to pull off such a disgustingly obvious ploy, the Board then calls a meeting for May 11, near the start of finals. The question now is: is the next meeting of the Board another one of their "special" meetings in which they deal with a crisis by saying that they are powerless to do anything about it? If it is, then that meeting is another sham. If the meeting is not "powerless" then the question arises: why was this last special meeting unable to deal with the issues? I would suggest that the student body is being manipulated by a conniving and dishonest administration which has no real desire to deal with the issues which the sit-ins in the ROTC building brought to light.

David Rosner

Vocal Majority

To the Editor:

It seems to me that the majority opinion among the students at the University of Massachusetts is that ROTC should be kept on campus in its present form. Those group who occupied Dickinson Hall and prevented classes from being held there did not, I feel, act with the support of the student body.

On Tuesday, petitions were circulated which stated that those who signed wished to see ROTC taken off campus. Starting at noon, another group of students started their own petition, advocating the retention of the program in its present form. In nine hours' time, valid signatures of 2588 students and faculty members were obtained for the pro-ROTC list. Other names have been added since.

In its coverage of the Board of Trustees' meeting in Boston, the Collegian saw fit not to emphasize this support, and instead concentrated upon the demands of a group of people, mostly from Boston-- people who at best have only marginal knowledge of the situation in Amherst, and indeed of the ROTC program itself.

I wish to thank those who have supported the ROTC program, and who hopefully will continue to do so.

If bungling bunglers bungled to the top, think what would happen to the rest of the soft-ball world.

When one promises something to someone else, or if one threatens someone else with something, it should be upheld. Then again, there is always the UMass campus where nothing ever seems quite normal.

It is remarkable how some people, not even related to the military are able to play with our lives.

Spring Day-An Explanation

To the Editor:

There is a tradition at the University of Massachusetts that can be traced back to the original inhabitants of this beautiful valley, the UMie Indians. On one spring day each year, the Indians would all meet in an organized attempt to purge their bodies and minds of the problems that had built up during the preceeding harsh, New England winter. This one day of debauchery prepared them for the few remaining weeks of spring toil before their annual summer migration to the Cape.

The tradition has been passed on from generation to generation in this area even though the original tribe has long since disappeared, most have died of cirrhosis.

We, the last remaining descendants of this happy tribe, ask each year of the present-day UMies to join with us in somber celebration on that one day. This year, services will be held at the stadium with bands and beer and people galore.

So drop all your troubles, including your classes, and listen for the Chapel bells to chime. SPRING DAY is coming!!

Civvy Influence In Army

To the Editor:

Please allow another viewpoint in the R.O.T.C. controversy to be brought to the attention of the University community. This is simply the opinion of one person, I represent no organization.

I am a graduate of one of the Army's Officer Candidate Schools and served for two years as a lieutenant (one of those in Vietnam). I have what I consider to be a valid, objective criticism of the end-product of R.O.T.C., the "ROTC Lieutenant." From both casual observation and intimate daily contact with R.O.T.C. Officers from mid-1969 to mid-1971, such lieutenants were (in my opinion) generally ineffective leaders, most had been mediocre students from mediocre Universities, were unable to unwilling to understand problems the enlisted men faced, were adverse to taking responsibility, were contemptuous of the senior NCO's and career officers, and as low-level authority figures were often less than even Army standards would require.

However, the source of these officers must be upheld, (even though the R.O.T.C. Officers I observed were for the most part pathetic leaders). If it is anything that all students (including strikers, "chairpersons", ego and power trippers of all descriptions), are united in desiring it should be increased civilian influence on the military R.O.T.C. Officers and draftees represent virtually the only inside influence on the military that we have. The U.S. Army in Vietnam changed dramatically into a questioning, thinking Army due in great part to the influence of these R.O.T.C. Officers and draftees.

I am appalled that the University Administration is willing to consider the removal of R.O.T.C. from the campus. R.O.T.C. does not teach people how to kill, it may not even produce good platoon leaders, but it does provide civilian imput to work within the Army system. This influence must be maintained. R.O.T.C. represents an opportunity to a career. No one has the right to refuse that opportunity to those who desire it.

So you denim-clad, gum-chewing UMass Army, before you sign that "Abolish R.O.T.C" petition in the hopes of furthering your activist image-please consider my observations.

Demanding Retraction

To the Editor:

Campus Center janitors have been called thieves and by inuendo drunks-it is a lie! Robert Touake's article quoted a student bartender at the Blue Wall. "Cindy explained that the taps are locked as a precautionary measure. "...'before the taps were locked the janitors would drink a keg of beer among themselves during the night'."

In management's version Mr. Touake misrepresented himself as a termpaper writer and then created the quote in his mind basing it on two facts: there are tap locks and there are janitos. Management, as related by concerned campus employees, states that Mr. Touake lied about himself and lied in the quote.

We want a full retraction from whoever invented this story of beer theft, and a full apology: from Mr. Touake if he did it; from Cindy Tenanes and the management if Ms. Tenanes is at fault.

And The Retraction

To the Editor:

I would like to clarify a statement concerning the Blue Wall bar which ran in an article in the Wednesday, April 26th, issue of the Collegian. The reason that we lock the beer taps at night to secure our commodities. We lock all commodities and all the rooms in which they are kept every night. These measures are not directed toward any particular group of people nor are any group of people, and specifically the janitors of the Campus Center, suspect of taking our commodities for their own use, as was suggested by the newspaper article.

Challenging Major Is Created

By ARNOLD NEWBERGER

A new major has recently been created, which will be known as the Center for Interdisiplinary Studies in the Social Sciences and Humanities. For people who are sick and tired of large and impersonal departments and are interested in a fresh approach to the study of social problems, this major offers a welcome alternative.

At the undergraduate level, the Center will offer a number of programs leading to a Bachelor's Degree in Arts. Some highlights of this new program include special senior year interdisciplinary team-taught seminars open only to participants in the Center and close supervision of student progress by participating faculty members. You will not only see the professor, you will be able to talk with him as well.

The prime mover of the center in philosophy professor Robert Paul Wolff. "The programs will be open to all interested undergraduates, but they will be demanding, and intellectually rigorous, so that in practice only serious and committed students will find a home in the Center."

The program is sub-divided into 3 sections: An undergraduate program in Social Thought, a program in Psychology and Literature and a program in Political Economy. A major in this Center will be no heavier in credit requirements than ordinary departmental concentration requirements.

Each of these programs will take the interdisciplinary approach that will be the distinctive mark of the Center, so that students enrolled there will be taking courses in Sociology, Psychology, Anthropology, Philosophy, Economics, History, and Literature.

The following professors have expressed tentative interest in teaching undergraduates who enroll in the Center: Michael Best, Howard Gadlin, Simon Rottenberg, Milton Cantor, Jerome King, Robert Paul Wolff, Sydney Kaplan, Fred Will, Michael Wolff. Others include Richard Holland, William Connolly, Guenter Levy, and Jules Chametsky. Well-known professors from the five-college area will also be teaching at the Center.

Any student who will be a sophomore or junior next semester and is interested in this new major can get further information at the CASIAC Office in Machmer E-27 on Monday. Information will also be available in the Student Union on Monday or Tuesday.

Nutritionist To Speak

Adelle Davis, the controversial nutritionist whose theories are rejected outright by some and sworn on by others, will be at UMass Monday. She will speak on "The Rewards of Nutrition" at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. A coffee hour will be held afterwards for discussion and questions and answers.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is the sponsor and the program is open to the public without charge.

She is the author of four best-selling books, "Let's Cook It Right," "Let's Have Healthy Children," "Let's Get Well," and "Let's Eat Right to Keep Fit."

Senator Brooke Coming To UMass

Amherst, Mass.–A talk by Massachusetts Senator Edward W. Brooke, "Listens and Responds: Issues 72," will be given at the UMass in Amherst Friday, May 5, at 11 a.m. in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The G.O.P. senator's speech, sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council, is open without charge to the public. Senator Brooke will answer questions from the audience after his speech. A coffee hour at 10:30 in Room 163 of the Campus Center will precede the speech.

Previous to his election in 1967, Senator Brooke served as Attorney General of Massachusetts for four years. A native of Washington, D.C., he received his LL.B from Howard University in 1940 and served as an infantry captain in Europe during World War II. The Massachusetts senator received his LL.M. from Boston University in 1948, and was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar the same year.

Among his many honors is an honorary degree from Portia Law School in Boston, Doctor of Laws Degree from Catholic University of America, Distinguished Service Award from the Amvets, and the Spingard medal from the NAACP.

Faculty To Support Westover Group

By HOWARD M. ZIFF

Faculty members who want to demonstrate their anti-war feelings at the gates of Westover AFB will hold a planning meeting at 12:15 p.m., today in Room 607 of Bartlett Hall.

The meeting is sponsored by the Faculty and Staff Committee to Stop the War.

At least a dozen faculty have already pledged to demonstrate at Westover on May 4, a national moratorium day, and subject themselves to arrest.

Members of the new Committee to Stop the War, formed on this campus over the last weekend, were circulating literature and contacting friends throughout the Five College area urging them to join the May 4 demonstration.

The Westover action is just one of many activities planned for May 4, the second anniversary of the murder of anti-war students on the campus of Kent State University.

Plans for other activities, including workshops and a silent vigil, will be discussed at a meeting at 12:15 Monday in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

More than 70 faculty, staff and students have joined the committee. Professor Jules Chametzky of the English Department stressed that it hopes to involve the entire campus community in its activities.

At a meeting Wednesday the new committee unanimously endorsed a message to the Board of Trustees urging a speedy end to ROTC here and immediate withdrawal of academic credit for the military program.

It also commended Chancellor Randolph Bromery and the new Center for Social Change for their "peaceful and fruitful" negotiations following the occupation of Dickinson Hall, Chametzky said.

Faculty and others interested in participating in the Westover demonstration are urged to attend the meeting today or contact James Matlack of the English Department.

SWIP Meets Tomorrow

The SWIP (Southwest Internal Planning) Conference, postponed last weekend in support of the strike, has been rescheduled to begin this Saturday morning at 10 o'clock in the Berkshire Dining Commons. The conference will continue on Sunday in the Hampden C.C.

The Southwest Assembly organized SWIP in an effort to encourage community participation in the future planning of Southwest, focusing on programs designed to effect social and environmental change.

The conference will concern itself with twelve areas of vital concern to the SW community. Workshops will be held in: S.W. Student Union; Racism; Sexism; Unicameral Governance; Human Sexuality; Counseling; Media and Communications; First-year Student Programs; Cultural, Social, and Dorm-run Service Projects; Environmental; Political Action and Awareness; and Academic Programs.

Among the programs currently being considered are; a S.W. radio station, a S.W. newspaper, library, culturnatives center, social action programs involving the surrounding community, a duplicating center, Human Resource Center, a theatre, outdoor recreational facilities, etc.

Discussion will not be limited to these programs; creative and imaginative solutions will hopefully be the result of our meetings.

The Southwest Assembly invites and urges all members of the community, interested in its betterment to come and participate.

Some Tea Party Gossip

The Tea Party, a proposed progressive third political party in Amherst, has scheduled its first convention and birthday party for Saturday, April 29 at 8:00 PM in the Campus Center Auditorium.

The convention will make "radical and modest" proposals on issues of concern to the Amherst community.

The event will combine spirit, business and pleasure. Spirit will be provided by Reverend Eric Walgren of the Universal Life Church in an opening convocation and address. The birth and development of the Tea Party will be the business of the convention and a musical celebration will ensure the pleasurable aspect.

All Amherst citizens concerned with issues of quality of life, protection of liberties, self-government, and social change are urged to attend.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Johannes Kepler, born under Capricorn, Dec. 27, 1571, was not only a great astronomer, but also a brilliant astrologer. His horoscope interpretations were skillful and accurate. As much as modern astronomers hate to admit it, Kepler's works reveal that his astronomical discoveries were for the purpose of aiding in the accuracy of his astrological forecasts.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be factual where money promises are concerned. Mate, partner may be involved in plan which is costly. Draw in reins. Review information. Avoid wishful thinking. Take inventory. Delve into mystery. You gain if perceptive.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Check individual who makes claim to numerous credentials, references. Protect yourself in clinches. Take special care when it comes to affixing signature to special documents. Caution now is your ally.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Recognition due from past efforts. Aries is involved. You are repaid for being a good and patient listener. Associate, coworker confides problem. Don't cast first stone. What you give will be returned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Creative juices flow. You are able to imprint own style. Accent is on change, travel, variety. Stress independence, originality. Lead rather than follow. Differences can be settled. You emerge with greater prestige.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Maintain moderate pace. Hold off on decisions concerning property, home, basic security. If you are not sure, do nothing. Spiritual outlook is accented. Find out why you are here--and where you are going.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept.22): Be versatile. Have alternatives at hand. Avoid spreading efforts in too many directions. One who spreads rumors is trying to goad you. Sagittarian could be involved. You get backing from surprise source.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If persistent, you collect what you need. Genuine bargain is available. Traditional methods, however, may not suffice. Be willing to utilize innate ingenuity. Track down leads. Ask questions and obtain answers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain hint from Libra message. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Cycle is such that you can get what you go after. Key is to know what it is you are seeking. You may be called on to make special appearance.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Co-operate in project aimed at helping those who are handicapped. Taurus and Libra persons figure prominently. Maintain low profile. Let others reveal their policies.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Promises may be empty. Know this and demand collateral. It is not easy to fool you, but you can do a pretty good job of fooling yourself. Realize this and go after facts. Then you land on your feet.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Practical approach now served your best interests. Placate family member who resents career ambitions. Make intelligent compromise. Avoid any tendency toward extremes. You have more going for you than might be imagined.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your extrasensory perception works overtime. Heed inner feelings. Don't be dissuaded by one who is skeptical and jealous. Plan for vacation. Be open to change and travel. Refuse to be shackled by nonproductive routine.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you surprise many with your wit, originality. You are going to make changes in domestic area, including residence. If single, marriage is on horizon, with November a key month. Married or single, life is due to take on a new glow. Be ready--and happy.

Netmen Trample Amherst

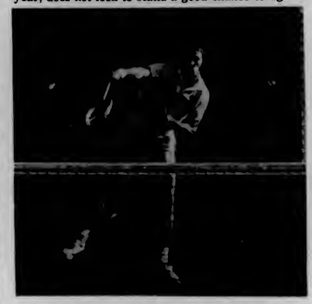
By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Visions of a repeat danced in the heads of the Redmen netmen, as they advanced into the second half of the Amherst match with a 4-2 lead. At UConn the lead flew away, as UMass dropped all three doubles matches. Nothing of the like was to happen yesterday afternoon though, as UMass downed their cross-town rivals 6-3. It was one helluva nice win for the Redmen.

First off the court came second singles and Amherst had the 1-0 lead. Quickly Robert Schpeiser, at number six for UMass evened it up. Fred Braley, putting it back together for the big match against Amherst, made it 2-1 Redmen with a 6-4, 6-4 win.

First singles tied it at two, as Ted Donahue fell in straight sets. Then it was Mark Brass and Steve Ferber, at fifth and fourth singles respectively looking for those two other big points. Brass finished his man off first, with a 6-4 victory in the third set. And alas, Ferber came through, with a 6-7, 6-2, 7-5 victory. So again, as at UConn, it was 4-2 Redmen going into the doubles. This time they didn't blow it.

Chris Coffin teamed with Donahue, and right from the start it was all over. Coffin and Donahue, were all over Ryan and Blood, the first doubles team of Amherst. It was 6-2, 6-3 UMass and that made it 5 points for the Redmen.



Mike Phillips joined Schpeiser at third doubles and they capped off the UMass win with the sixth point of the day with a three set victory.

While 3-1 in conference play, the Redmen are 6-2 overall, and while the singles lineup appears pretty much set, Coach Kosakowski is still mixing it up with his doubles combination.

Kosakowski had to love this victory. Amherst has always had a tough squad, and this year the Redmen brilliantly capitalized on their vulnerability. Right on down the line each Redmen contributed, and excusing the bitter cold and the horrendous wind, it was a beautiful day for tennis for UMass.

Yes, the cold, something the Redmen would just as soon be playing without. Not that the wind helps a whole lot. The combination of the two makes tennis at times unbearable and hopefully this coming Saturday, hey that's tomorrow, the sun will stay out, and the temperature will rise, as UMass faces Holy Cross in their second to last intercollegiate match of the '72 season.

It's Holy Cross tomorrow and Springfield on Wednesday, both pre-empting the Yankee Conference Championships one weekend from now. And following those Championships come the New Englands. They'll be held at Amherst College, and Amherst, who finished fifth in New England last year, does not look to stand a good chance to again make the top five. Either that, or the Redmen should do exceedingly well.

One of the Redmen Varsity Netmen Doing His Thing.

Home courts might not seem to make any difference but glance at the home and away record, (4-0 and 2-2) and one gets a chance to see that the home court does make a difference. In addition, if one as much as glances at the singles' men individual records they'll hardly be a loss to be found. Thus, being hosts of the Yankee Conference should come in handy; in fact, it should be useful tomorrow afternoon.

Notices

SOCCER JAMBOREE
The first Annual UMass Spring Soccer Jamboree will begin on the Boyden fields at 12:30 p.m. this Saturday April 29th. It will be a Round Robin Tournament with teams entered from Central Conn., BU, Queensboro Community College, UMass Soccer Club, and the UMass Varsity. Games will consist of 2 twenty-five minutes halfs.

RECREATION SCHEDULE
The recreation activity schedule for the women's gymnasium will be reduced beginning Saturday, April 29. Use of the basketball courts will be discontinued during the week and on weekends for the remainder of the semester. Use of the weight room and golf range will be discontinued on weekends, but will remain open during the week. The recreation activity schedule for the WOPE swimming pool will not be affected.
Negligible student use of the facilities at the times mentioned above in addition to diminishing operating funds are the prime factors responsible for this reduction.

WOMEN'S CREW
Women's crew practice will be held at 1:00 on Saturday and unday. There will be no bus on Saturday, but there will be one leaving from Boyden on Sunday.

The UYA staff would like to stress the need for Spanish-speaking students, Black students, and all other Non-White students. Students who would like to participate in the UYA program for September 1972 thru September 1973 must attend a meeting Tues., May 2 in rm. 170 of the Campus Center at 7:30 p.m. Students in the program will spend one full year off campus working in an agency that addresses a social problem. Students in the program receive thirty academic credits and a financial stipend from the action program.

First Takedown Tourney Sunday

By JOHN BOCK

Coach Homer Barr is always coming up with ways to keep the wrestling team in some sort of wrestling form off season. In the past, UMass has hosted freestyle tournaments and the like but this time, out of the depths of wrestling 'Oldies but Goodies", comes a takedown tournament. What is a takedown? For the uninitiated or those who still groove to the tune of the Boston Gardens on Saturday nights, the takedown is one of the most important aspects of wrestling because it is how one man gains control over his opponent when both men are standing facing each other.

"This is the kind of thing to have now as this is the time of year when the wrestler is least liable to be in shape," said Coach Barr. "And it is the kind of thing he can do and have fun at (without) having to wrestle for a long period of time." Down in Mat Town, USA (Lock Haven, Pa.,) the Bald Eagle Takedown Tournament is a big annual affair, and UMass is more or less using the LHSC format.

The tourney is to be held Sunday, April 30, 1972, at the Boyden Wrestling Room. It is open to all wrestlers under twenty years of age. The weight classes are 106, 115, 123, 132, 143, 154, 165, 180, and Heavyweight. Weigh-in is between 11:00 and 1:00 with wrestling starting at 2:00 p.m. The international "bad" point system will be in effect with the accumulation of six "bad" points eliminating the wrestler. An entrance fee of $1.50 can be paid at weigh-in, A.A.U. and USWF cards will be accepted or can be obtained at registration for $1.00. The bouts will be three one and a half minute periods with the next period beginning when a takedown is scored.

This tournament will go well with Coach Barr's Sunday evening clinics that have been open to the public the past few weekends. It gives some local high school grapplers the chance to come down and learn a little about college wrestling and a chance for the varsity to show what has made the UMass team one of the best in the East.

Racing On Sundays

BOSTON (AP) — Thoroughbred racing will be held this Sunday at Suffolk Downs, the first time such racing has been held on a Sunday in the state since parimutuel racing was legalized in 1953, the track announced today.

A nine-race card will be presented beginning at 1:45 p.m.

Sunday racing is permitted under a bill passed by the legislature and signed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent Wednesday.

The track said the bill increased the take from the mutuel "handle" from 16 to 18 per cent. Thomas J. Beedem, general manager and vice president of Suffolk Downs, said the state and the track each will get an additional 1 per cent on week days, and the track an additional 2 per cent on Sundays.

Gridders Scrimmage Tomorrow

Baseball Team Has Critical Double Set

By EARLE BARROLL

It is the most talked about town on the Yankee Conference circuit.

For the UMass athlete, the thought of making an annual six-hour bus ride to Orono, Maine, generates a feeling that maybe that day will pass without it ever having to be lived.

And while most people have come to think of Orono as a town where some classic stories have eminated and a town where Pat's Pizzeria is located, UMass coaches and athletes will be the first to tell you it's no picnic travelling that far with the possibility (the real possibility) of putting a loss on the record.

Maine is not a wonderland of victories for the opposition. The athletes at UMaine have a feeling of wanting to get at those spoiled scholarship kids down south.

And in recent years they have made headways into the world of "for real".

This afternoon the UMass baseball team will kick off a two-day road trip at Orono (a single game tomorrow). Baseball has been perhaps the most consistent sports story at Orono over a set number of years.

Two years ago, the Redmen went north and suffered a double loss to the Black Bears and in the position they (the Redmen) now occupy this will indeed be the most important series of games this season.

The Redmen will also have to face Maine's Mike Jones today or tomorrow. He's a good one, and in his last outing he lost at UConn, 1-0, on a squeeze play in the bottom of the eighth.

When speaking of Maine there is Dick MacPherson, head UMass football coach. Mac was born just outside of Orono in a little town called Old Town.

Tomorrow afternoon his second spring practice at UMass will come to an end with the Red-White scrimmage at Alumni Stadium. Kick-off is 2 and there is no admission.

This game will be preceded by a state-wide football clinic at Mahar Auditorium beginning at 8. Over 250 coaches and high school players are expected to attend.

No odds have been set on the game itself. There is no inside track as to ringers, sleepers, etc. But good football is in store at the stadium tomorrow.

All-east candidate Paul Metallo (hb) will be leading the White squad against the forces of Red led by quarterback Piel Pennington who has fully recovered from last year's shoulder injury.

Lacrossemen Attempt Rebound At Williams

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The UMass lacrosse team will attempt to rebound from its big game loss to Brown earlier in the week tomorrow afternoon at Williams College. The face-off is set for 2.

Williams should not be too difficult an opponent in comparison to say a Brown, but they have been one of the better teams in New England this year.

Even though they have only won one contest to date (M.I.T.), their losses have come to pretty good lacrosse schools: Harvard (8-5), Princeton (10-9), Rutgers (11-5) and Washington and Lee.

Williams has a strong midfield in McGavin, Dietrick and Gallagher, however, the attack and defense are not particularly outstanding.

UMass Coach Dick Garber is confident that his team will recover from the Brown loss, but while he has no worries about his attackers and defensemen, he does feel that his midfield does need some improvement.

Dambman 2nd At Olympic Trials

By JOHN BOCK

Freestyle or not Freestyle, that is the question. Carl Dambman, UMass' two-time NEIWA Heavyweight Champ, would answer Freestyle--since that is the only style he can wrestle when he travels to Minnesota this summer to wrestle in the Finals of the United States Olympic Trials. Carl earned this right over the last weekend as he took a second place finish at the new England District Olympic Trials held at Springfield College.

Carl wrestled at the 220-pound weight class and won three bouts before falling victim to the superior freestyle talents of John Logan. Logan was a New England Champion for Wesleyan College a few years back and is presently doing graduate work at the University of Pennsylvania. He is well acquainted with Freestyle wrestling and its emphasis on takedowns and pinning points, as he has represented the United States in last year's Pan American games and has attended and won several freestyle tournaments.

Dambman is not that proficient at freestyle wrestling because it involves actively going in and taking a man down and Carl prefers to use defensive takedowns (waiting for the man to come to him, letting him make a mistake and then taking him down). He also picks up points by controlling his man in a referee's position and then pinning him. Freestyle doesn't give points for riding a man in this fashion and consequently if he can't be pinned in the allotted time, then the wrestler has wasted a lot of energy for nothing.

In speaking with Coach Barr he said "Carl has a lot to learn about Freestyle wrestling and way beaten by a man that knows the style very well."

Carl plans to work out with the Head Coach at Amherst College, Henry Littlefield, who is an acknowledged expert at freestyle wrestling, as many of the Amherst wrestlers participate in the style off season.

"I will go to Minnesota and wrestle, even though the competition is a little better at this stuff than I am. I expect to win a couple of bouts, too, and the experience will be good," explained Carl in a recent interview.

MAT MATTER: Two other names that should be familiar to UMass wrestling fans turned in first place performances at Springfield. Donny Fay of Lock Haven, now wrestling for the New York Athletic Club easily won at 114-1/2. Harvard ace Richie Starr beat Dartmouth's outstanding sophomore, Charlie Estin, at 180-1/2 to place first at that weight class. Both men will travel to Minnesota in hopes for an Olympic Berth.

ROTC Petitioning To End Friday

By JIM DEMPSEY

At a special meeting Sunday evening, on the issue of ROTC, it was decided that the pro and con petitioning would continue and a meeting with the Board of Trustees will be arranged. The petitioning will end on Friday May 5 at noon and the petitions will be delivered to the Student Senate for validation.

These results will be tabulated and sent to the Board of Trustees in time for their meeting on May 11. Student Trustee Larry Ladd will be at that meeting, voting in accordance with the results - if they are conclusive. At this time pro and con ROTC petitions have close to 3000 signatures apiece.

Each side is hoping that a separate meeting with the Trustees can be arranged, to which each group will send three representatives to present their cases for and against the ROTC program.

The merits of the referendum and the petition were argued back and forth, with it being decided that the petition is the more effective method of the two to measure campus opinion.

Referendums have been used 6 times during the past 3 years on the issue of ROTC with a dismal turnout of less than 50% each time, in favor of keeping ROTC on campus.

Chico Marcus opposed the use of the referendum on the basis that people are confused about the issue of ROTC. People need to be educated about ROTC to eliminate the current opinions by many of the people on both sides.

Marcus added that some of those who are in favor of ROTC believe that those against it want it kicked right off the campus. Some of those who are against ROTC believe the cadets are a bunch of killers.

Neither of these opinions is valid. As Larry Ladd pointed out, the decision to eliminate ROTC should be based on the matter of academic credit given for this program.

Both the Student Senate and the Faculty Senate have voted to terminate academic credit granted for the ROTC program.

Dr. Robert W. Gage speaking against the notion that all ROTCers are "killers, said he is not in favor of abolishing ROTC from our country's college campuses because the program provides civilian input into the army and navy.

Gage said he is not in favor of all the input coming from our military academies. He said that "the best solution would probably be to have some kind of ROTC program off campus." He mentioned the Marine ROTC program as an example for th Army and Navy ROTC programs to follow. The Marines hold their program of campus during the summer.

Larry Ladd in a statement to the Collegian, said he is firmly opposed to the granting of academic credit for the ROTC program, but he is committed to support the decision of the student body.

He said, "The ROTC program is a government controlled indoctrination program that is not subject to the usual academic criteria...if we are to create a university based on free and independent thinking and learning, we should not allow ROTC to receive credit, for it is not consistent with those ideals."

The main crux of the problem now, is that the Board of Trustees have for the moment refused to deal with the situation. Larry Ladd indicated that their only out at the last meeting a week ago was that there was no conclusive measurement of the Amherst campus opinion presented to them yet.

It was pointed out that the Trustees let the issue die during the summer the last time. Several people added that they wouldn't allow this to happen a second time. They indicated they will push for an official decision right into the fall semester, if necessary.

They will not quit either until the administration takes a definite stand on the issue (which almost guarantees the same action by the Trustees) or until a definite decision is made this month by the Trustees.

All students are strongly urged to carefully consider the issue and sign the petitions before Friday.

News Analysis

Mike Best Reappointment Rejected

By ANNE DRANGINIS

The divisions that have plagued the Economics Department for several years were reemphasized last Tuesday night when the personnel committee voted 5-0 not to reappoint Dr. Michael Best. Drs. Robert Cole and Robert Eagly were previously denied reappointment this year. Students concerned about the situation in the department are beginning a campaign to keep these teacher at UMass, which includes a petition, publicity, letters, and delegations to administrators.

Best, Cole, and Eagly would seem to have little in common. Robert Cole received his doctorate from Northwestern University and was a tenured professor at Washington State University before coming to UMass a year ago. He has also published some articles.

Eagly has taught at several universities and has been an associate professor here since 1967. He has an extensive list of publications that includes two books.

UMass is Best's first teaching appointment and he has not yet published much. But his student course evaluations are the best in the department, and a recent meeting of the graduate students voted unanimously to support his reappointment.

If the department's criteria for appointment emphasized professional experience, Cole would provide that. If they demanded mountains of publication, Eagly has published more than any other member of the department except one. if teaching skills and the ability to reach students were necessary, Best would have a secure job.

All that the three seem to have in common is their approach to the study of economics. Cole and Best are members of the Union of Radical Political Economists. Eagly's field is history of economic thought which, according to one member of the department, is hardly considered a field of economics at all by the department's administration. The emphasis of the department is on quantitative techniques and micro-economic theory.

Both Cole and Eagly claim that their approach to economics is responsible for their problems with the department. Eagly said that the prejudice of the department is not strictly a political one, but is more a methodological bias. He described himself as politically "eclectic-neither left nor right."

Dr. Cole added that one way to disagree methodologically with the leadership is to be radical: "It's not that they're against radicals; they're just against fuzzy thinkers. And by their definition, radicals are among the fuzzy thinkers."

The case of Best should already be familiar to many students. When he was denied reappointment last year, students initiated a campaign to get him rehired. His courses are among the most popular on campus and he is known for his speeches at anti-war rallies. Given his obvious popularity as a teacher, why is Best having so much trouble keeping a job here?

Dr. Best said that last year the reasons given were his competency as a teacher (this was before the course

Dr. Best said that last year the reasons given were his competency as a teacher (this was before the course evaluations came in) his competency, as an economist, his "inadequate quantitative background", and the quality of his graduate school training. Best pointed out that his undergraduate training was in mathematics and physics (as well as economics) and that he scored in the 99th percentile on his quantitative GRE. He did his doctoral work at the University of Oregon in economics.

Then his contract was reconsidered. When asked whether the students played any role in the reconsideration of his appointment, Best replied, "Positively yes. The students made all the difference."

James Kindahl, then departmental head, recommended he be given a one year terminal contract in order to give him time to find another job. The administration granted the one-year appointment without acting on the termination.

In the spring, the termination was sent back for reconsideration, and the personnel committee voted 3-0 to recommend a further two year reappointment. The Dean's Council voted 8-0 for the two year reappointment. But Provost Robert Gluckstern granted only a one year appointment.

His stated reasons, according to Best, were Best's "questionable" competency as an economist, his controversiality, and the fact that Gluckstern thought it wise to give the incoming departmental head a chance to act on the matter. Dr. Best noted that the incoming head wasn't given this chance for anyone else's contract.

Best is a member of the Union of Radical Political Economists and has spoken many times against U.S. imperialism. Asked if his case is a political one, Dr. Best answered, "It really is political in the broader sense. The departmental leadership is extremely biased and prejudiced against any kind of economics that doesn't fall within their narrow definition of the subject. They concentrate on on microeconomics and statistics and allow very little room for diversity.

"Not only would Marx be unwelcome in this department, but I doubt Keynes, Heilbroner, and Galbraith would either. Kindahl (now chairman of the personnel committee) himself told me that John Kenneth Galbraith wouldn't fit in here."

Dr. Cole shares this estimate. "Failure to share particular methodological interests has been penalized...A report of a visiting committee (composed of established economists of note) commented extensively on th narrowness of the department."

Economist Sam Bowles is also becoming an issue in the department. Bowles is a professor at Harvard University who is well known for his many publications in both orthodox and radical economics. He too is a member of the Union of Radical of Political Economists.

Best introduced a recommendation into the department that Bowles be given a visiting professorship, after Bowles called him and said he'd be willing to come out here for one semester. He has been recommended by three of the past four presidents of the American Economics Association and by one Nobel Prize winner in Economics.

According to one graduate student, Simon Rottenberg (the present head of the department) refused to consider Bowles for one semester appointment on the grounds that it would take money away from the graduate students. A few days later, one of the deans heard of the possibility of hiring Bowles, and told Rottenberg he would pay Bowles salary himself. Since then, Rottenberg has claimed that Bowles has become incompetent, and is practicing politics rather than economics.

Rottenberg refused to comment on "any individual cases" such as that of Bowles, Best, Cole, or Eagly.

A graduate student in economics who preferred to remain unidentified said, "Not only are there no black people and no women teaching in this department, but even some of the best qualified white males are too much for them." He regards the Bowles case as a very important one for the department.

Long standing divisions within the faculty are widening, with other professors joining the students and teachers in their critique of the department's policies. The report of the Visiting Committee to the Economics Department is as true now as when it was written more than a year ago:"... the fact must be faced that today there is deep division among the members of the department...Given the present situation, we think it unlikely that any present member of the department can gain the kind of confidence and trust which the leader of the department must possess."

Don't Dump In The Water

Several inquiries have been made recently to the Amherst Conservation Commission about protection of watercourses and ponds in the area against dumping of refuse and debris in inland waters. The Conservation Commission refers the public to Massachusetts General Laws, chapter 270, Section 16 which declares that whoever places, throws, deposits or discharges, or causes to be placed, thrown, deposited or discharged, any trash, refuse, rubbish or debris in or upon coastal or inland waters or within twenty yards (60 feet) of any such water shall be subject to a fine to

If a motor vehicle is used in committing such a nuisance, the Registrar of Motor Vehicles may suspend the driver's license and the registration of the vehicle for 30 days.

In the interest of keeping our waterways free flowing, unpolluted, and safe, we urge all residents and corporations to recognize the importance of the above statute and to advise their families, colleagues, and friends of its existence.

NES Picnic Saturday

N.E.S. will hold a picnic on Saturday, May 6th in the orchard. Children from all N.E.S. centers are invited to attend and all who wish to come will be accomodated. We expect to have about one hundred (100) children in attendance, therefore, we will need many tutors to help out with the children.

Buses will pick the children up at the centers at approximately 11:00 A.M. They should arrive here, at the orchard, at around noon and stay until 3:00. Food such as hamburgers, hot dogs, coke, and potatoe chips will be provided by us, but since we are short on funds we would appreciate it if the tutors who attend would make things like cookies, brownies, and cakes.

All tutors who wish to come and help out with games, etc., are asked to drop by the N.E.S. office, room 105 CC, some time this week and sign up with us so that we will know how many people to expect.

Film Festival

The Student Labor Relations Project will present a film festival - films of the Labor Movement-In Room 163 Campus Center from 1:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. today, May 1.

The films are: People's Park, Bullet Bargaining At Ludlow, Oil Strike, Songs of Labor, Wilmington Deleware, Sit--Down, Metropolis and Mother's on Strike. The films are being shown as a celebration of May Day as an International Working Class Holiday.

SWIP Conference Termed Success

By DON BISHOP

After having been delayed for one week by the activities of the strike, the Southwest Internal Planning Conference became a reality this past weekend. The Conference which was called to begin preparations for a Future of Southwest Report, was termed a success by the majority of those 60 odd people attending the two day affair.

The main body of the Conference work was done in 11 pre-planned workshops. The workshops dealt with the topics of: a Southwest Student Union, Unicameral Governance, Cultural-Social and Dorm-Run Service Projects, Academic Affairs, Racism, Sexism, the Southwest Environment, Media and Communications, Counseling, Human Sexuality, and First Year Programs.

Each workshop will present their report to the Southwest Directors Office, with their various suggestions and recommendations and their ideas on the report's implementation, according to Associate Dean of Students Steven Herman.

From the Directors Office, a final report will be drawn up which will be distributed throughout Southwest; to the Southwest Assembly and the various dorms. This final report is expected out in two weeks. It will in essence be a Future of Southwest Report.

Herman hopes to have roughly 18 students follow up on the report this summer, to lay the groundwork for the beginning of implementation in the fall. Looking into the future, Herman sees the report as something to refer back to in order to judge the ultimate success of the conference; in terms of the actual carrying out of the proposals coming out of the conference.

There were a considerable number of proposals coming out of each of the workshops, many of which are innovative and exciting.

The Student Union workshop focused mainly on devising uses for the recently begun Southwest Student Union. Some of the short range plans drawn up in the workshop and presented to the conference were plans to turn the front of the Union (Hampden Commons) into a "human relations center" and the North area into a theater and fine arts performing area.

Out of the Racism workshop came the recommendations that a "Human Liberation School" be set up as part of the relations center, having its primary focus on the problems of racism, according to Herman. Another important proposal coming out of this workshop was that more black staff personnel be appointed in all offices in Southwest and Whitmore, and that the present staff in Southwest support this effort.

The workshop on Sexism called for positive commitments from all Southwest offices against sex discrimination in hiring. Another recommendation calls for the establishment for an intramural program for women in Southwest.

From the Media and Communications workshop came plans for a Southwest newspaper, a record and tape library, a weekly newsletter, and even a long range plan for a small Southwest radio station. Movie projectors are scheduled to be bought as part film series.

These are just a few of the recommendations coming out of the conference which will be drawn into the report, to hopefully become reality in the near future.

Women Plan Demonstration...Faculty, Staff Too

A special demonstration at Westover Air Force Base if planned for today by area women. Guerilla Theatre will tke place with women dressed as dead Indochinese women. Poetry reading, singing and leafletting will take place also. There are a few women who wil enact civil disobedience by blocking the entrance to the base. Over 200 arrests have taken place at the demonstrations up to date. No violence or threat of violence has occurred.

At Wright Patterson in Southern Ohio, another SAC air force base, demonstrators have been maced and teargassed. Continued demonstrations have only taken place at Westover.

During an evening vigil there last week, a man entering the base said, "Keep it up, you're helping us all."

At a meeting in Dickinson Hall last week, a Westover Air Force man reported that three Westover B-52's had already been shot down in Indochina. He also reported that many on base was supporting the action by the demonstrators outside the base. He also said that many men who had refused to board the B-52's had been placed bodily on the bombers.

Nancy Dyer, who teaches at the Common School in Amherst said recently, "There should be a time when women can act together in opposition to the War." Her involvement began when Martin Luther King made public his stand against the war. "Women as a group have something to say about wars run by men — women have always suffered from wars," she said.

The Holyoke Transcript took an editorial position of support for the organizations and people involved in the peaceful demonstrations there. Clergy and Laymen, Committee for Continuing Action at Westover and Off The Runway are organizations contributing to the actions at Westover.

All women are invited to participate. Information about rides can be obtained at the Center for Cocial Change at 545-0829.

Faculty and staff members from the Five Colleges (UMass., Amherst, Smith, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke) will lead a demonstration and will be arrested at the Main Gate of Westover Air Force Base (Chicopee, Mass.) on the afternoon of May 4. The action will be one of a series of protests at Westover against escalation of the air war in Indochina.

Westover is the third largest SAC base in the country. Peaceful demonstrators have already blocked traffic at the base on six different mornings.

May 4 is the second anniversary of the deaths of Jackson State and Kent State. In concert with rallies and commemorations throughout the country, there will be public meetings and silent vigils from noon to 1 P.M. next Thursday at several locations in the Five College area. A voluntary work-stoppage will be in effect for this Moratorium. After 1 P.M. participants will travel by car to Westover Base off Route 33 in Chicopee where the demonstration will begin at 2 P.M.

A brief memorial service will be held, emphasizing faculty and staff members grief at the loss of life on all sides in the war and their outrage at the continuing slaughter, especially through the excessive use of American firepower. Then Faculty and Staff members committed to non-violent civil disobedience will seat themselves in the road, blocking traffic to and from the base. They expect to be arrested by the Chicopee Police. Those who do not plan to be arrested will remain on the roadside by the main gate for legal support activities which will continue throughout the afternoon.

Workshops and non-violent training sessions will be held for potential civil disobedience participants on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, 8-10 P.M., on the main floor of Munson Hall, UMass campus, and on Wednesday, 8-10 P.M., at Eliot House, Mount Holyoke College.

Summer School Limited

By MARILOU BARSAM

Due to the University budget cut, there have been a few limitations placed on the summer sessions program for this year.

Course offering will be limited this summer. First priority in registration will be given to swing shift students, seniors making up credits for September commencement, and area teachers who are required to take courses to obtain master degrees.

Summer school sessions will run as usual for eight weeks, from June 26 to August 18.

Bertha Auten (an acting co-ordinator of the summer program) commented, "the quantity of the courses offered this summer may be limited but the quality of these should not suffer at all."

Each department offering courses in the summer program were all equally affected by the budget cut.

Each department head had to reduce the number of courses offered in their department, in comparison to previous summers.

The budget cut did affect the salary of professors teaching this summer, yet there were no withdrawals made by any of the professors from their summer teaching positions.

A highlight for the summer course curriculum will be the offering of Spanish to area teachers. Due to the requirement for elementary teachers in Massachusetts to be capable of bilingual instruction, the summer school co-ordinators thought this course would be much appreciated by teachers needing the instruction. The course will be the first of its type offered in the country.

Women's Conference At Farley Lodge On Thursday

"Communication and Self Awareness" will be the topic of a three hour women's conference at Farley Lodge, at UMass, May 4 at 7 p.m.

The conference will be conducted by Lois Phillips, a teacher with a B.A. in speech, who is coordinator of Project SELF, a program of the UMass Division of Continuing Education.

"Women, usually socialized into private and isolated roles in society can be uneasy in public speaking situations," according to Ms. Phillips. "Gestures, eye contact and diction are important points to consider in this and in everyday conversational patterns. These will be explored along with the ability to be a critical interpreter of words and body language and to be a confident speaker."

Shari Stutzel of the School of Education media center will videotape parts of the conference for immediate playback. Support groups and speaking partnerships for feedback purposes will also be used to help strengthen communication abilities.

The $2 registration fee, to be paid at the door, will be waived for welfare women and students. Interested women should call 545-0480 mornings.

BUENOS AIRES (AP) - Argentina's national soccer lottery collected nearly $7 million from the first nine games of the season. Besides the winners, the money will benefit public health, housing, social security and a program to help drug addicts.

Workers Fund Starts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bipartisan effort to raise political funds among corporate employees, especially blue-collar workers, is being launched with $100,000 in seed money contributed by 27 major corporations.

Among them is Lockheed Corp. which last year obtained a $250-million federal loan guarantee to stave off bankruptcy.

A Lockheed spokesman said over the weekend, however, that the company's contribution was "very small, no more than $500 to $1,000."

The spokesman, Bill Wilson, vice president for affairs, said the company at present has no active executive political fun-raising program although it is "considering setting one up."

Lockheed was listed in a brochure put out by the Public Affairs Council as among corporations which contributed the $100,000 in seed money to finance a drive aimed at tapping a relatively untouched source of corporate political funds-the-workingman's wallet. The council is made up of public-affairs officers of more than 200 companies.

The drive was launced Sunday with letters signed by the Republican and Democratic national chairmen to 1,500 of the nation's largest corporations.

"All of us realize we must expand the base of political support if we are to maintain an economically viable two party system," said Republican Chairman Robert J. Dole and Democratic Chairman Lawrence J. O'Brien.

The two chairmen noted in their letter that the new federal elections law, which went into effect April 7, for the first time gives full legal sanction to corporate fund-raising activities and provides tax deductions for small contributions.

Other companies listed as backing the drive are Alcoa, Beech Aircraft, Borg-Warner, Black & Decker, Chase Manhattan, Dart Industries, Economics Laboratory, El Paso Natural Gas, Evans Products, Ford, General Electric, General Telephone, Kresge, Litton, and Mead Corp., Minnesota Mining, Olin, Pacific Gas, Phillip Morris, RCA, R. J. Reynolds, Sears, TRW, U.S. Plywood, Wallace-Murray and Whirlpool.

The council has scheduled seminars next month in seven major cities and promises in its brochure to teach corporations all the tricks of the fund-raising trade.

Raymond Hoewing, a PAC official involved in the program, said in an interview that the drive is "broad-based and is not aimed at just executives."

Hoewing said that the workshops would be aimed primarily at teaching techniques of raising funds among blue-collar workers, but that the PAC staff would be available to help with executive-level fund-raising.

One of the things promised in the PAC brochure is privacy.

"It's very important," says the brochure, mentioning numerous techniques such as the double envelope.

Hoewing said the double-envelope involves placing of a check in one envelope marked on the outside for contribution to a specific party or candidate and the placing of that envelope into another that would be dropped in a collection box or handed to a foreman.

Kickoff luncheons and workshops are planned between May 4 and 16 in New York, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Houston, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

S. Viets Hit At Rte. 1

SAIGON (AP) - South Vietnamese marines and rangers fought savagely with the might of U.S. air and naval power behind them Sunday in an effort to reopen national Highway 1, lifeline of the northern front. A North Vietnamese regiment stopped them cold.

As the Northvietnamese offensive moved through its 32nd day, the United States marshalled every available warplane and warship in the Indochina theater for massive attacks. U.S. vessels bombarded North Vietnam's coast and enemy positions in the South. B52 bombers made their heaviest strikes of the war around major battle points in South Vietnam.

South Vietnamese forces and their Cambodian allies along the border fell back from other fronts apparently leaving wide gaps on the western flanks of Saigon and the Mekong Delta.

In the central highlands, South Vietnamese forces pulled into a tight ring around Kontum, said to be a principal objective of the North Vietnamese. U.S. helicopters began evacuating military dependents and civil servants.

A third district town in coastal Binh Dinh Province to the east was in peril. The fall of Tam Quan would extend the North Vietnamese control to the better part of 200,00 inhabitants in northern Binh Dinh and give the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong a rich rice harvest of 5,000 tons.

Landing Zone English, a South Vietnamese regimental headquarters and the only remaining government strongpoint in northern Binh Dinh, came under a two-hour rocket attack at dusk. Aircraft were unable to land and the base was being resupplied by parachute drops from U.S. C130 transports.

Reports from Phnom Penh, Cambodia's capital, said South Vietnamese troops abandoned Kompong Trach in the southern tip of Cambodia, opening an invasion path and supply corridor for the North Vietnamese 1st Division into South Vietnam's Mekong Delta, so far spared the brunt of major attacks.

Sources in Phnom Penh said the South Vietnamese suffered more than 400 troops killed and lost more than 40 armored vehicles in a month's fighting for Kompong Trach.

The Cambodian command reported the fall of the frontier town of Bavet which lies along the Phnom Penh-Saigon Highway at a point where it crosses into South Vietnam. The loss gives the North Vietnamese control of a 50-mile stretch of the highway on the Cambodian side of the border with the exception of the beleaguered provincial capital of Svay Rieng.

Saigon is 40 miles southeast of Bavet.

U.S. commanders summoned up every available warplane and warship in the Indochina theater in efforts to stem the North Vietnamese onslaught and launched massive air and naval strikes across wide areas of South Vietnam as well as North Vietnam.

Fifteen U.S. 7th Fleet destroyers and three cruisers bombarded North Vietnamese positions along a nearly 500-mile stretch of coastline from Thanh Hoa, 215 miles north of the demilitarized zone, to Binh Dinh Province 260 miles to the south.

All available Strategic Air Command B52 bombers in the Western Pacific were diverted from targets in Laos and Cambodia to South Vietnam.

Nearly 100 of the eight-jet Stratofortresses unleashed up to 2,500 tons of bombs on North Vietnamese troop concentrations and staging areas menacing major cities.

The pattern of the strikes showed how close large North Vietnamese forces were to major cities. Some of the raids were within four miles of Quang Tri and within five miles of Kontum.

The bombers struck within 24 miles northwest of Saigon, closest since the big Tet offensive in February 1968.

U.S. fighter-bombers from bases in South Vietnam and Thailand and from four 7th Fleet carriers flew hundreds of raids in all four countries of Indochina-North and South Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia.

Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported from the northern front that about 250 fighter-bomber strikes were flown alone around besieged Quang Tri, the northernmost government defense line.

Since the offensive began March 30, South Vietnamese forces have been pushed from bases and district towns along the DMZ back to Quang Tri, capital of Quang Tri Province.

India And Pakistan Agree To Summit

NEW DELHI (AP) — India and Pakistan completed Sunday their first step toward a peace settlement by agreeing to a summit meeting between Prime Minister Indira Gandhi and President Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

D. P. Dhar, Mrs. Gandhi's special emissary at preliminary talks held for the past four days in Pakistan, returned to New Delhi after working out plans for the summit, to take place in the Indian capital in late May or early June.

"I have reason to believe that we can entertain cautious optimism with regard to the outcome of the summit talks," Dhar told newsmen.

"I think the talks will start on an auspicious as well as a promising note."

A joint statement issued simultaneously in Rawalpindi and New Delhi said the special emissary talks "were marked with cordiality and a readiness on both sides to appreciate each other's point of view."

Such friendly language had not been used by either government in more than a year.

Dhar, India's chief foreign policy planner, also paid a personal tribute to Bhutto, something no Indian official or leader has done since he succeeded Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan at the end of December's India-Pakistan war over Bangladesh - formerly East Pakistan.

"My own impression," Dhar said, "is that Mr. Bhutto is very keen that both the countries should turn their backs once and for all on the unfortuate, tragic history which has characterized the relations between these two countries in the last 25 years.

"I also have the feeling that he is as keen as we are in India to find a smooth path towards the establishment of amity, cordiality and friendliness between the peoples of the two countries."

At the same time Dhar cautioned: "We have got to go a long way to reach a settlement with Pakistan which will bring about an end of confrontation and usher in an era of peace. Serious, sincere, honest endeavors have to be made by both sides."

Diplomatic sources in Rawalpindi said the first two points on the summit agenda would be withdrawal of troops from occupied territories and an exchange of prisoners.

Democrats Stump Ohio

By The Associated Press - Top presidential contenders in Tuesday's Ohio Democratic primary played to their political strengths Sunday, with Sen. George S. McGovern warning the Vietnam war has "infected every aspect of American life" and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey visiting four black churches and marching in a Jewish parade.

The Ohio contest holds Tuesday's spotlight with secondary attention on the Indiana balloting in which Humphrey and Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace are the top contenders for 76 convention delegates.

Sen. Edmund Muskie, who retired last week from active primary campaigning, is on the ballot in both states.

Primaries are also being held Tuesday in Alabama and the District of Columbia. Anti-Wallace forces hope to take of the Alabama delegation from the governor. Local groups are contesting the D.C. race.

Additional presidential primaries are scheduled later in the week in Tennessee and North Carolina.

Humphrey, the only major contender competing actively in both Ohio and Indiana primaries, also spoke to a rally in Indianapolis after urging President Nixon to press for cultural exchange programs between Soviet and American Jews when he visits Russia next month.

McGovern, seeking an Ohio upset over Humphrey that would give his presidential drive a major boost, returned to his effort to woo blue collar support, visiting Youngstown, Akron and Canton after his antiwar speech at a Methodist church on the outskirts of Columbus.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, who is also competing for the 153 Ohio delegates, spent most of Sunday in Washington before addressing a rally in Youngstown, Ohio.

Of the 153 delegates, 38 will be chosen at-large and the remainder in the state's 23 congressional districts. There is no presidential preference vote as such.

In another development in Ohio, Muskie was accused of being "a quitter" by State Democratic Chairman William Lavelle, who is on the ballot Tuesday as a delegate for the Maine senator. If he wins, Lavelle said, he won't vote for Muskie.

Elsewhere, a variety of states held county, district and state conventions over the weekend to pick Democratic and Republican delegates.

More than 75 per cent of the delegates picked at Kentucky Democratic county conventions were uncommitted, with most of them set to follow the lead of Gov. Wendell Ford, who still backs Muskie. McGovern got the rest, and his backers predicted he would win at least eight of the state's 47 convention delegates, 35 of whom will be chosen at congressional district caucuses June 2 and 12 at the state convention June 3.

McGovern apparently was making significant inroads in Jackson's home state of Washington as Democrats held conventions in the state's 39 counties during the weekend.

Jackson appeared Sunday assured of carrying the bulk of Washington's 52 national convention delegates, all but eight of whom will be elected at congressional district caucuses May 20.

President Nixon maintained his hold over GOP convention delegates in conventions in four states, Kansas, Maine, Oklahoma and Kentucky, and is expected to do the same thing in the GOP primaries this week.

In Ohio, McGovern has made a major effort to cut into Humphrey's long-time support in black communities. Humphrey sought to counter that with his tour of four black Cleveland churches before he marched in the Jewish Solidarity Day parade to protest alleged persecution of Soviet Jews.

Returning to Ohio after his brief Indiana trip, Humphrey addressed the annual Youngstown Police Banquet and proposed that the killing of state and local police, firemen and prison guards be made a federal crime to help stop "the alarming increase in killngs of these officers."

McGovern attended services at Epworth Methodist church, then gave his first full-scale speech on the Vietnam war in some time to about 400 persons.

McGovern observed that his long fight against the war had led him to be branded a "one-issue candidate" but noted that most of the nation's domestic problems-economic injustice, taxation, inflation, racism, the environment, crime and "the corruption of government and of politics itself-- are affected by the continuing war.

IRA Offensive Escalates

BELFAST (AP) — The British army reported Sunday that a round-the-clock offensive by the outlawed Irish Republican Army is escalating violence throughout Northern Ireland.

One victim was an 8-year-old girl shot dead in Belfast's turbulent Ardoyne district.

Police said the dead child, Rosaleen Gavin, was on an errand for her mother at midnight Saturday when she was hit by a bullet fired by guerrillas at an army post. Her killing brought the death toll in the province to 316 in 31 months of political and religious strife.

In the battlefield that is Belfast, young children commonly roam the streets late at night despite repeated warnings from security authorities of the peril to their lives.

The shooting was one of 24 outbreaks in 24 hours.

An army spokesman said 12 of the shootings were directed against troops by gunmen of the IRA, who are waging a guerrilla war to unite the mainly Protestant province with overwhelmingly Roman Catholic Ireland to the south.

Other gun battles erupted between the warring Protestant and Catholic communities. The two groups confronted each other during the night in bloody riots in east Belfast that injured 12 policemen and 13 civilians.

Police and troops skirmished throughout the night with Protestant youths trying to assault a Catholic enclave in east Belfast. The youths, members of the "tartan gangs" who wear tartan scarves as badges of Protestantism, rampaged through the streets, shattering windows, looting stores and wrecking Catholic homes.

The Protestants are angry at "concessions" to the Catholic minority since Britain took over direct rule of the province last month.

In Newry, near the border with Ireland, an army patrol narrowly missed being ambushed by four gunmen crouched in a roadside ditch.

The patrol was searching a car when the four men were spotted. They were found to be armed with two carbines, a sniper's rifle with telescopic sights and a quantity of ammunition.

Gunmen fired on an Army patrol as it went to investigate a large antipersonnel fragmentation bomb in the Creggan district of Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second city. The shooting prevented army experts from defusing the bomb, which lay in a field.

In Londonderry's Creggan and Bogside districts, both guerrilla strongholds, several hundred women staged a march in support IRA.

Other Catholic women had planned to march to local IRA headquarters to appeal for an end to violence. They abandoned the plan after hearing about the scheduled counter-demonstration.

Organizers of the cancelled peace march said they had already told leaders of the IRA's nationalist Provisional wing that the bombings and shootings must stop.

Lockheed Boosts Pay Proxmire Calls Foul

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Lockheed Aircraft Corp., which won a $250-million loan guarantee in a congressional battle last year, is preparing to boost pensions to its top executives from $40,000 to $65,000. Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis., said Sunday.

Proxmire, the leading Senate opponent of the loan guarantee at the time, called the plan "a classic case of corporate arrogance and greed."

A Lockheed spokesman said the increase in executive pension ceilings is being made to help offset what he called a disadvantage in holding salaried personnel.

Proxmire said in a statement the proposal will be voted on Tuesday at an annual meeting of the firm's stockholders.

Under the proposal, Proxmire said, pensions for Lockheed Chairman Daniel J. Haughton and other company officials would go from $3,333.33 per month to $5,416.66 per month. Further, he said, it would be retroactive to Christmas Day, 1971.

"These are the same wonderful people who brought us the cost overruns and performance failures associated with the C5A cargo plane, the Cheyenne helicopter, the DE1052 destroyer escort, and a variety of other fiascos," he said.

Recapping briefly the history of the loan guarantee that stemmed from financial troubles over the C5, Proxmire said "for Haughton and company to now seek to raise their pensions from $40,000 to $65,000 is like a welfare recipient moving from a high rent apartment to the Waldorf Astoria."

Proxmire said the pension proposal, as outlined in a proxy statement, also allows Lockheed officials to boost by 3 percent to 15 per cent the pensions of executives already retired.

Test Tube Baby Test Ban Asked

CHICAGO (AP) — The Journal of the American Medical Association says a moratorium should be declared on experiments aimed at development of "test-tube babies."

An editorial in the May 1 issue of the journal says "the time seems clearly at hand" to declare a moratorium on experiments that would attempt to implant into a woman's uterus a human egg which had been fertilized by human sperm in a test tube.

The editorial recommends that "representatives of various disciplines should be assembled to discuss once again the thorny issues raised by genetic engineers."

Physicians, scientists, philosophers and theologians are concerned with moral, ethical, religious and scientific implications of genetic engineering, says the AMA publication.

They are especially concerned, says the Journal, with the growth of fertilized human eggs in test tubes, which has already been achieved, and with cloning, a method of producing off-spring with predetermined traits.

No test-tube fetuses have been fully developed, and experiments with cloning so far have only been used to reproduce frogs.

Experiments in development of test-tube babies are designed to permit women who cannot themselves conceive children to have implantations of eggs taken surgically from their bodies and fertilized in test tubes.

Such an egg would be brought to term in their bodies and delivered.

It is possible, too, that an egg might be taken from the body of one woman, fertilized, then implanted in the body of another woman from whom it is not possible to obtain a usable egg.

These experiments have reached the point where this method of reproduction seems imminent, the editorial states.

Those who favor development of test-tube babies defend it on grounds it would permit fulfillment of the desire of an infertile woman to bear her own child.

Opponents say, among other things, that infertility is not a disease and that implantation of a fertilized egg would be treatment of a "desire". They also maintain that the method involves unethical experimentation on future possible human beings.

Cloning in humans still seems to be remote, the editorial says. Cloning involves the substitution of the nucleus of an unfertilized egg of a being of the same species.

Discounting environmental influences, cloning could result in development of individuals identical to the selected donor individuals.

Protestors Remain In Cornell Building

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) -Anti war protesters occupied the Cornell University engineering administration building for the fifth day Sunday to dramatize their demands for an end to ROTC and war-related research at the campus.

Authorities attempted to serve court orders on some of the activists Saturday night but were unable to locate the individuals cited. Their attempts were then suspended because of a state prohibition against the serving of legal papers on Sundays.

The orders direct the protesters to show cause why they should not be held in contempt of court for ignoring an earlier State Supreme Court temporary restraining order to evacuate State Supreme Court temporary restraining order to evacuate Carpenter Hall.

A university spokesman said the number of demonstrators inside the building had dwindled to about 75 by Sunday. Another 25 to 30 were massed outside, he said. There were about 125 occupying the building Saturday.

The spokesman said two university representatives had met with protest leaders Saturday night but that the discussions were "basically nonproductive."

Cornell President Dale R. Corson has maintained that the university would not "negotiate" with the activists until they abandoned the building takeover. And the demonstrators, both students, have said they would not leave the building until negotiations are completed.

Besides the abolition of ROTC and defense research, the demonstrators also demanded that the university use its influence as a stockholder in the Gulf Oil Corp. to end Gulf operations in Portugal's African colonies.

Minister Offers New Kind Of Marriage

TAMPA, (AP) - A Unitarian minister who calls traditional marriage archaic is offering a one-year "spiritually sactioned" trial marriage to couples who vow to love, honor and practice contraception.

The Rev. Adrian Melott, 25, said he believes that after a spiritually sanctioned year of living together the partners can better decide their future relationship, if any.

The minister said in an interview he considers the ceremony he performs as legally binding as the "oath of marriage." But he adds that there has been no test of the legality of the rite in the eyes of the law. A marriage license is not required.

The rite has proved unpopular with many religions as well as segments of his own Unitarian faith, says the Rev. Mr. Melott.

"Today so many marriages are out of youthful infatuation that last only a few months," he said. "Then you have a woman, 20 years old, alone with a child."

The stocky red-bearded minister performs the ceremony at an alter rail, or in a flower garden depending upon the couple's choice. He encourages the contracting couple to write something of their own for the ten-minute ceremony, and adds to it lines from The Prophet by Kahlil Gibran.

With the traditional vow, "I do," the couple promises to do everything to prevent the conception of a child and "to be together one cycle of four seasons."

No wedding rings are exchanged and there is no reference in the ceremony to husband or wife.

"It is purely a religious ceremony," said the minister. "I think it affirms the need in our society to provide more freedom in relationships and ways of doing things."

Governor Sargent Won't Go

BOSTON (AP)-Gov. Francis Sargent announced Sunday he was cancelling a trip to the Republican Governors' Conference in West Virginia and setting up a special meeting with his budget advisers.

A spokesman for Sargent said the action was prompted by an analysis of budget cuts made by the House last week showing a trimming of over $90 million from an already tight $2.16 billion budget.

The spokesman said Sargent would discuss the impact the cuts would have on state programs.

Sargent was scheduled to leave Sunday for the conference, in Greenbriar, W. Va.

Proxmire Concerned Over Anti-Inflation Policy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. William Proxmire says eight months of anti-inflation controls show the nation might do better by scrapping controls and "learning to live with inflation as the lesser of two evils."

C. Jackson Grayson, chairman of the Price Commission, challenges the Wisconsin Democrat's conclusions.

Two weeks of hearings before the congressional Joint Economic Committee have shown that broad, understaffed, peacetime controls are unfair and don't work, Proxmire said in an interview.

Proxmire, who chairs the joint committee, said the hearings convinced him inflation is not being controlled, that nothing much is being done to reduce unemployment, that the productivity of American industry is worsening and that there has been a failure of economic justice.

Much of the damage now being caused by inflation could be overcome by using such devices as cost-of-living escalators in the Social Security system. Proxmire said and added:

"If we can't find less damaging ways of controlling inflation than either creating unemployment or imposing complex and unfair controls, we should give serious consideration to learning to live with inflation . . . ."

Proxmire said Grayson is now hedging on promises to roll back prices of companies with inflated profits and give refunds to consumers. Grayson denied this.

Proxmire said the commission is turning too late to tougher policies after letting hundreds of millions of dollars of undeserved price increases slip into the economy.

"The wage-price regulations are so prolific, so complicated and so secretive that they have become totally ineffective," Proxmire said.

He said there is overwhelming evidence that the public has no confidence that controls are working.

Proxmire cited the adverse stockmarket reaction early last week after Grayson announced his new policy of price reductions amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

He also said he can understand that some administration advisers might be justifiably but inaccurately concerned that if they scrapped controls for all but the largest corporations and labor unions, "they might appear to be soft on inflation. . . ."

In a separate interview, Grayson denied that he is hedging or has reversed his new price-reduction policy because of stock market reaction and administration pressure.

Proxmire said he was also concerned over charges made by Ralph Nader that the membership of both the Pay Board and Price Commission is heavily overloaded with persons with close, inescapable ties to big businesses Nader said amount to "implicit conflict of interest."

Nixon Arrives In Texas

FLORESVILLE, Tex. (AP) — President Nixon arrived in vote-rich Texas Sunday, paused for some election-year hand shaking with a large airport crowd and then went to the ranch of Treasury Secretary John B. Connally for a social supper and overnight stay.

Connally invited some 100 couples — many of them associated with partisan politics — to the outdoor ranch barbeque.

Among the uninvited were candidates for state office in Saturday's Texas primary. Those included Connally's brother Wayne, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for lieutenant governor.

Although the presidential visit to Texas ostensibly was nonpolitical, his decision to be an overnight guest of the Connallys inevitably was seen as not entirely divorced from the election year picture.

Never before, for example, has Nixon visited the home of a cabinet member. The closest he came was a drop-in last September at the Anchorage, Alaska, residence of fired Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel.

The stop at the Connally ranch, which is not exactly on a direct flight path from the Florida White House to the one in Washington, came as speculation continued about Connally's role in the 1972 elections.

The treasury chief, often mentioned as a potential replacement for Vice President Spiro T. Agnew on the Republican ticket, has said he came into the Nixon administration as a Democrat and intends to leave a sone.

Connally also has said he has been active in every presidential election since 1936 and sees no reason to change his habits now.

The most prominent of Texas Democrats, former President Lyndon B. Johnson, was not scheduled to see Nixon. The White House said a tight presidential schedule would prevent the chief executive from going to the LBJ Ranch, where Nixon's predecessor is recuperating from a heart attack.

Although most speculation cited Johnson's health as the likely reason for the lack of a meeting, some observers wondered if the former president did not prefer, on his native soil, to keep Republican Nixon at arm's length in this election year.

Miami Shuns GOP Convention

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W.Va. (AP) — Some Miami Beach officials are losing their desire to host the Republican National Convention this year and the event may still be held in San Diego, Sen. Robert J. Dole said Sunday.

Dole, chairman of the Republican National Committee, told a news conference "the thinking has shifted" among some Miami Beach officials who earlier wanted the GOP convention in that there, and "I don't think San Diego is out of the picture."

Dole, here for the Republican governors' conference, said at least three Miami Beach City Council members have reservations about hosting the GOP event in August.

The Democratic convention is already scheduled to open there July 10.

The Republican party began negotiating with Miami Beach nearly two weeks ago, nine months after the national committee formally selected San Diego.

Republican officials say they have had great difficulty agreeing on cost and construction details with Peter Graham, owner of the San Diego Sports Arena, where the convention is still technically scheduled to open Aug. 21.

A meeting of the full Republican National Committee has been called for May 5 in Washington. At that time the committee is expected to approve a switch of the convention to Miami Beach.

However, Dole stressed, the City Council there has not yet extended a formal invitation to the party but is expected to meet again Wednesday on the matter.

"I don't have any preference," Dole said. "I just want to nominate Nixon somewhere in America."

Coup Crushed In Kenya

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)-Forces loyal to President Michel Micombero of Burundi crushed an attempted coup Saturday night by "imperialist agents and monarchists" and the nation's former king, Ntare V, was killed, radio reports from Bujumbura said Sunday.

The 25-year-old King, who had returned only last month to Burundi after living in exile in Europe for several year, was slain in Gitega, 60 miles east of Bujumbura, the capital, the broadcasts reported. He had been placed under house arrest after returning.

The former king was reported by the Bujumbura broadcasts to have been killed when an attempt was made by dissident factions to release him.

Street fighting was reported in Gitega, with several persons killed.

Ntare was overthrown by Micombero in 1966. When he returned to Burundi late last month he was accused of leading white mercenaries in an attempt to regain his throne.

The king had spent his years of exile in West Germany.

Uganda's President Idi Amin played a major role in his return to Africa and Amin arranged for the king's return to Burundi. After the king's arrest in Burundi, Amin's government published documents claiming to show that Micombero had assured Amin the king would be granted an amnesty.

End Of Vietnamization Goal For People's Lib. Forces

PARIS (LNS) - The Provisional Revolutionary Government of South Vietnam's press agency "Liberation" (Giai Phong) just released a provisional summary of the results of the first two weeks of the offensive (March 30 to April 15): The People's Liberation Armed Forces, it states, have in that time killed, wounded or captured 30,000 enemy troops, including many higher officers and American advisers. In terms of units, they have wiped out five brigades and tactical groups or regiments, 13 infantry battalions, three tank regiments and ten artillery battalions. They have decimated eight brigades and regiments, three tank regiments and more than a dozen infantry battalions.

In terms of material, the revolutionary forces, according to the Liberation News Agency, shot down and destroyed more than 150 planes, and destroyed or captured more than 1,000 vehicles, including 300 tanks. They also destroyed or captured more than 200 cannons of between 105 and 175 mm., exploded more than a hundred munitions dumps and badly smashed dozens of bases, command posts, artillery positions, airports and ports.

In an interview over the French radio, Madame Binh, PRG Foreign Ministre, defined in these words the aims of the offensive:

"Our general and final objective is to defeat the American policy of 'Vietnamization' of the war. The pillars of this policy -- the Saigon regime's apparatus of repression and the puppet army -- are in the process of breaking down."

One of the key strategic concepts of the liberation army is its reliance on the political opposition, at all levels, to the Saigon administration, which is becoming increasingly isolated and survives only through a policy of unremitting repression and terror. But even the continual suppression of newspapers, the jailing of militants, and the establishment of concentration camps has not succeeded in siping out the opposition in the cities of Saigon.

PRG sources in Paris described some episodes of the current upsurge of the fight against the Thieu regime. At the end of March, for example, thousands of students went on strike, demanding the liberation of their leaders, arrested for criticizing the regime.

Ten of these student militants have been brought to trial before the military tribunals which have largely replaced the ordinary civilian courts. On March 23, students by the thousands demonstrated outside the Tribunal in Saigon calling for the release of the ten.

At one point, a group of students invaded the Tribunal en masse and fought back when the police attacked them. Then, the students cut their wrists and used the blood to write their slogans -- "Freedom or Death!" -- on the walls of the building. One student dared read aloud a declaration against the American war and the fascist regime of Thieu.

Similar movements have been getting under way in other cities of South Vietnam, such as Hue, where many student militants have been arrested or executed for "subversion and treason," The student opposition is re-inforced by that of other groups, such as the Buddhists, the war veterans, peace organizations and women's associations, particularly the Movement for the Right to Live. The leader of this movement, Madame Ngo Ba Thanh, was recently brought to trial in Saigon on a stretcher and actually managed to give a press conference right inside the Tribunal.

As one PRG source in Paris summed it up: "Life in the liberated zones is a constant struggle against the bombs, but life in the cities under the police repression is far more terrible and the resistance of the urban intellectuals is truly admirable."

FBI Asks Docs To Spy

NEW YORK (LNS) -- Recently two "ads" appeared in different medical journals published under the auspices of the American Medical Association (AMA). The unpaid "ad" consisted of a series of three mug shots plus a "wanted poster" rap which requested the help of doctors in tracking down a young woman wanted for conspiracy to transport illegal explosives across state lines. The young woman suffers from a severe form of acne that might "necessitate treatment by a dermatologist."

The running of these ads has raised quite a ruckus in the medical profession. Many doctors-- not those among the AMA elite-- feel that aiding the FBI or any police agency by informing is a violation of the Hipocratic Oath which demands a confidential doctor-patient relationship.

That confidentiality is also protected by legislation in most states. While doctors are required to report gunshot wounds, most other "evidence" revealed to a doctor by a patient is protected by the confidentiality statutes.

However, the FBI has been known to threaten doctors with charges of "harboring" and "accessory" when they refuse to reveal information about patients. Now they have the implied endorsement of the AMA cooperation to add to their arsenal of strong arm tactics.

So far, the major physician's group to protest has been the National House Staff Conference (NHSC) which is made up of interns and medical residents from hospitals across the country. For the most part, the membership of NHSC is young. The NHSC protest followed statements by Dr. Willard Gaylin, a psychiatrist and president of the Institute of Society, Ethics and Life Science, a non-profit organization that investigates the relationships between medicine and religion, society, legal issues, etc. Gaylin also serves on the AMA Judicial Council which supposedly serves as the AMA's "ethical conscience."

Gaylin questioned "whether medicine should be encouraged, or even allowed, to be an extension of the police functions of the society. What happens to the tradition of confidentiality between patient and physician. Such use of the profession by the police would represent the final destruction of the privacy, intimacy and trust of a theraputic relationship already seriously eroded."

Gaylin foresees that if the precedent set by the ads were expanded to include fugitives who might suffer from "life-threatening" diseases like heart ailments or cancer", these people might resist seeking needed medical attention for fear of being turned in.

The Income Tax Bracket Racket Goes On

NEW YORK (LNS) - Now that you've filed that good ole form 1040 and you're trying to figure out how a poor soul like you, who can't even scrape up enough bread to buy the necessities of life, winds up paying Uncle Sam a fortune (at least it's a fortune to you), sit back and take a good look at that noble American institution -- the income tax.

The income tax is supposed to be a "progressive" tax, right? We all learned in school that with a "progressive" tax the rate of the tax goes up as the income goes up. So, supposedly, a person earning $5,000 will pay a lower rate than a person with an income of $100,000. But that's not the way things work.

Actually, Internal Revenue Service (IRS) laws work strictly on a "the more you have, the less you pay" premise. Most politicians push the idea that loopholes are unfortunate "oversights" and, particularly during an election year, they try to convince the American taxpayer that a fair tax system -- minus loopholes -- is just a vote away. But those "oversights" are really calculated efforts on the part of the federal government to give big business a big break.

Take a look at J. Paul Getty, for instance, that fabled billionaire who "earns" $300,000 a day or about $100,000,000 a year. Well, you'd figure that Getty ought to be paying quite a bit in taxes -- theoretically he should be paying the government about $70,000,000 a year taxes--leaving him to scrape by with a meagre $30,000,000 a year. But Getty pays no more than a few thousand dollars a year in taxes.

The reason? Getty gets his money from oil -- and Congress has determined that 22% of the income derived from oil ventures is exempt from taxation. Of course, a worker on an oil derrick doesn't get the same break. He pays -- just like the rest of us.

This oil tax exemption (the oil depletion allowance is what it's called) along with other loopholes allowed Texaco, with an income of $1.1 billion in 1970 to pay only 6.4% in taxes. Standard Oil of California paid 5% and Gulf 1.2%. Standard Oil of Ohio not only paid nothing on an income of $66 million, but got a 10.4% credit to charge off against any future taxes it might have to pay.

Going along with the oil income exemption are exemptions on real-estate investments; interest from a state or local bond; and income from the sale of stocks, bonds, land and property -- known in the lingo as capital gains.

Take a look at these exemptions and you get the feeling that the government didn't have you or your pensioned Aunt Ida in mind when they thought them up. On the contrary, the government is thoroughly committed to aiding and abetting big business.

For instance, in the early 1960's, General Electric and 28 of America's biggest electrical companies were convicted of massive price-fixing and forced to pay damages to the customers they had cheated. Thanks to the influence of well-connected Washington lawyers like Clark Clifford (later Secretary of Defense under Johnson), the IRS permitted the companies to deduct the cost of the fines -- as a necessary and ordinary business expense!

Another hustle -- the sale of capital gains. In order to have capital gains in the first place, you've got to have something to sell -- stocks, bonds, land, buildings etc. If you sell them during your lifetime you pay only one half of the tax you would have to pay on that amount if it were obtained in some other way -- like working for it.

If you wait until you're dead -- your estate pays no taxes on that income. A recent study by two tax experts showed that the average per-family tax savings from capital gains alone went (from $640,000 for families with incomes over $1,000,000 to, $165,000 in the $500,000-$1,000,000 bracket to $120 in the $20-25,000 bracket all the way down to $1 for those in the $3-5,000.

These fiveaways to the rich total about $14 billion a year. And that loss of 14 billion dollars to the federal coffers has to be made up some way -- usuully by squeezing more out of the less well-off.

Another fantastic loophole, the exemption of interest derived from state and local bonds (which comes to about $5 billion a year) doesn't even have to be reported. Most of us couldn't even afford to buy bonds like that. You have to buy them in lots -- usually over $50,000 a lot -- which means you have to have that $50,000 in a lump to spare. Financial institutions like banks and investment houses, wealthy individuals and estates puchase bonds.

As a result, the per-family tax savings from this loophole are about 80 cents for families earning $5,000 - $20,000 and only about $24 savings tax savings from this

As a result, the per-family tax savings from this loophole are about 80 cents for families earning $5,000 - $20,000 and only about $24 for those comfortables in the $25,000 - $50,000 bracket. But if you're really, really rich, you've got it made. The average tax savings on this loophole alone for people who make over $1,000,000 a year is $36,000. And those big institutions -- well, the Bank of America saved an estimated $58 million on their 1970 return this way.

What it all comes down to is this. Out of a total of $77.3 billion in federal taxpayer savings -- be they loopholes, deductables, or whatever -- just $92 million goes to the six million poorest families in the country, whle 24 times that -- $2.2 billion -- goes to just 3,000 families (those who "earn" over $1,000,000 a year).

Another way of putting it is that the U.S. internal revenue codes reward the "work" done by money far more than the "work" done by people.

HUD Exempts Self From Lead Ban

WASHINGTON (LNS) -- After much protest by community groups over the lead-poisoning epidemic caused by peeling lead-based paints in slum housing, the Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) finally ruled against its used in December of 1971.

In their statement, HUD pledged that "in public housing, the HUD-owned properties and in rehabilitation work, any old lead-based paint remaining on walls and ceilings shall be removed or completely concealed with a suitable covering such as drywall, hardboard, plywood...before these surfaces are redecorated."

According to government statistics, 600,000 children under six are poisoned by eating paint chips from lead-based paints. Of these only 50,000-100,000 are medically treated and about 200 die. Lead poisoning can lead to brain damage. On February 18, however, two months after its ruling, HUD quietly circulated an amendment exempting HUD-owned properties from the provision.

"The exemption is only temporary," said Virginia Anderson, a spokeswoman for HUD. "It'll only be in effect until we have the findings of a department study on the extent of and best methods for eradicating lead-base paint poisoning."

The report, which was started last year following previous legislation, is in its seventh final draft. It was supposd to be finished on Jan. 13. According to Congressman William Ryan of NY, HUD owned or was in the process of acquiring 160,000 additional units housing up to 250,000 children.

Hampshire College is seeking candidates who are qualified and interested in the position of January Term Coordinator — an opening available in the new academic year beginning this fall. January Term is a one-month short term between the fall and spring terms in which the entire campus participates. The Coordinator, a one-half time position, administers all academic aspects of the January Term.

It would be helpful if candidates had some knowledge and experience with academic programs and/or teaching, some administrative experience and/or ability, and some experience in working with students, faculty and administration.

For a job description and further information, please call Carolyn Atkinson, January Term Coordinator at 542-4740, or write to Mary Apgar, Chairwoman of the January Term Coordinator Search Committee, c/o January Term Office, Merrill House, Hampshire College.

"Officer, I Want You To Investigate —— Uh, Never Mind"

C.O.P.: Racist Copout

By JOHN CLAYTON

This is a case study on how the School of Education handles education for minorities.

The Career Opportunities Program sounds like a good idea. COP has been set up all over the country to give paraprofessionals in inner-city schools a university education, enabling them to become full-fledged teachers. The School of Ed has COP programs contracted in Brooklyn, Springfield, Worcester, and on campus. As I understood the idea when I was asked to teach in the on-campus program last year, people from inner-city communities would be trained in relevant educational skills to take back with them into those communities.

I was impressed. So that I didn't understand, when I began to teach last summer, why COP students on campus were so angry.

But gradually it became clear. They were angry because--once again in racist America--they had been fooled by the liberal rhetoric of white and blacks. The School of Education, committed to fighting institutional racism, was serving institutional racism by its paternalistic, inhuman treatment of these twenty--now forty--adults.

When they came here COP students were promised an education which would be useful to them in their communities. They were promised a program leading to a B.A. They were promised stipends, books, fees, and tuition. They were promised a role in decision-making. And they were promised simple human concern.

These promises fell through. COP students were given no say in choosing a director; instead, they were given the run-around. In fact, administrators won't say who is the director or even if there is one. When they demanded a share in decision making, they were warded to cool it. An ordinary undergraduate program was simply laid on them--in spite of Ed School rhetoric--and remember, these are adults, paraprofessionals, with special needs. Money for books and fees was withdrawn, and when they tried to find out why, they were double-talked. Never were they allowed to see the original contracts. Neither was I, for that matter. Then they were told that their staying here was tentative--that it depended on the subtle manipulations of administrators, that funds could be withdrawn at any time. Administrators refused to explain clearly how the program was funded. They refused to discuss alternative funding possibilities.

Then, last September--note: September--students were told that no money was being allocated; unless something changed in Washington, there would be no program. Students were furious: "What I want to know is how can you, how can anyone, I don't care who it is, ask people to come 1000 miles to a program and then tell them that they don't even know if they're going to get paid. Or if they're in the program." Students protested: "I got the word that it was all right for me to come because it'd been settled. Money was in the goddamn bank." All the administrators would says was, "You have to face the reality that it wasn't settled." Reality! One student gave the administrators a lesson in reality: "I talked on the director the other day. It was all right for four years. Man, I quit my job and everything. I quit a job of $9000. Somebody's playing a game, man."

Somebody seemed to be playing a game. Students wondered if they were being ditched for complaining about the program. Or if the money had been used for other pruposes. Where was the money coming from to pay the COP administrators if there was no money? Finally, money became available and students remained in the program. But imagine the pain of it: these were adults--many with families--changing their lives and being faced not only with the problems of being a black or Puerto Rican student on a white, racist campus and of stepping into a rigid educational process utterly foreign to them, but faced now with a constant and terrible insecurity. Students still don't know whether they'll be back next year, whether they'll be able to finish their fout-year program. Maybe everything they've put into the program up to now will be pretty much a waste. Not only will the School of Ed give them no long term committments--develops; and then they are told to just leave everything to the administrators.

So they protested. They asked for some commitment by the School of Ed. Let it fund the program elsewhere if it had to. After all, isn't the School of Ed supposed to be committed to fighting racism? And now, more than ever, the students demanded a say in now the program was going to run. And who would be in charge.

The administrators' response? Cool it or you'll blow the whole thing for yourselves. Administrators warned students not to make waves--or they'd be punished. A number of students were specifically warned, "Stay out of politics--you're here for an education. If you get involved in politics, you'll be out of the program."

And it was more than warning. I was told by one administrator-- and names aren't important here because what's at stake is a paternalistic system not accountable to the people for whom it's designed--that students were "mollycoddled" last year; if students were going to get tough, they'd find it didn't pay. The inference was that the administrators of COP--or of the Center for Urban Ed which handles the program--were not going to get students their money for fees and books--as punishment. Even clearer was the administrators' decision not to make special adaptations in the ordinary university program for the COP students. How wierd--an assertion like that coming from a high-level administrator in a school fighting institutional racism! Because certainly the ordinary university program is--as the School of Ed itself points out in its publicity--inevitibly racist. How can a program meant to train inner-city students how to teach children in their communities not be special? If there were no need for a very special program, there would be no need for the program at all--it would mean that middle class white products of the university can do fine in inner-city schools. But that's hardly true.

When administrators talked about the program having mollycoddled it students, they were referring to last year's program. While the basic structure of the program last year was the same, at least those guiding the program were trying to adapt ordinary university education to the needs of their 20 students: finding flexible, interested teachers, avoiding dull, monster lecture classes, giving credit for field experience. But now, this has changed. Last year's staff was changed--studnets call it "fired" though that's not strictly true--and a new leadership was installed without consultation of the students. Now students say that things are worse: that the course work has been almost useless and that no credit is being offered for field experience.

One student in the program told me, "The most racist thing about the School of Education is that all they teach blacks is rhetoric. They don't teach skills which we can use to teach black people in the cities." The School of Ed sees itself as "change oriented"--but change requires more than the rhetoric of the Ed School's PR kit. It requires a program completely redesigned and emphasizing usable skills. It requires the king of students who will reject attempts to threaten them into submission, students who will demand a useful education that can begin to undo the racism of this society.

So the COP program needs to be completely undone--and redone. Instead of semester-by semester insecurity and threats, the students have to be offered a four-year committment by the School of Ed. Instead of the suspicious paternalism of Urban Ed, students need to share in decision making for the program, Instead of hiding the funding process, students have to share in getting and distributing funds. Instead of accountability to Worcester and Washington, it's students and the community--as represented by the Minority Caucus--to whom this program and every program like it have to be made accountable.

Letters To The Editor

What's Best For The Future

To the Editor:

In view of the recent 5 to 0 vote against Prof. Mike Best in the Dept. of Economics, I feel the time has come to ask some very basic questions about the operations of our University, especially the Economics Dept. First of all, I will make the assumption that the members of the Personnel Committee of the Economics Dept. have taken the trouble to read the Future of the University Report submitted to President Wood last December. Second of all, I will make the assumption that they understood what they read on page 72 and 73, under "New Incentives and Rewards For Teaching and Public Service." There it clearly states that given the traditional criteria for advancement and tenure, "...the genuine interest of the faculty in effective and innovative undergraduate instruction tends to be overridden by a reward structure ... based upon research and publication." In addition the report states, "In absence of strong alternatives supported by the University academic professionalism has a kind of self-perpetuating inertia: it is what professors and departments will do as long as the University does not forcefully say what else they should be doing." The first question is, "Will the University forcefully tell the Economics Department what it should be doing to reward Professor Best for his excellence in "stimulating thought and communicating knowledge "as Joe Renan so aptly stated in his letter entitled the "Purge Has Begun" or will reward mean dismissal?

The second question which must be answered is, "What should the role of student evaluations be in making personnel decisions that greatly affect their educational opportunities?" The Future Of The University Report states that, "Some corresponding changes in the sources of information and influence bearing upon tenure and promotion will have to be made..." and that "systematic approaches to the evaluation of teaching need to be developed." In the Best case, he has undergone numerous systematic student evaluations, each time ranking amongst the highest in his department. Yet these evaluations have meant little or nothing to the Department of Economics. Apparently, when students speak no one hears, and no one cares.

I believe the case of Professor Mike Best will serve as both a philosophical and practical test of this University's committment to the words and values expressed by the Future of the University Report. We shall see how this University rewards Mike Best for participation in activities in the residential colleges, community work, Five-college work, and for his unusual devotion to the education of his students. We shall see if the University is trying to reform a system which perpetuates "academic professionalism." We shall see if the University is willing to share its power by letting the students take an active part in meaningful teacher evaluations. So far the Future of the University Report is merely rhetoric, but now it has the chance to become an effective instrument for badly needed change. If Chancellor Bromery, Vice Chancellor Gluckstern, and Dean Alfange fail to point out and correct the inconsistent actions within the Economics Department, I am afraid the future of this University is bleak.

Amazing Offer

To the Editor:

An amazing opportunity will be offered for undergraduates next year. An internship in Educational Administration will be available in one of many univerity offices beginning either this summer or in September. The internship consists of working fifteen to twenty hours a week in an administrative capacity. That means that undergraduates will be involved in high level decision making; they will be given major areas of responsibility. This is an excellent chance to see what it is like to be an administrator, and get some practical job experience at the same time.

Students in the internship program will also be taking a three credit seminar each semester dealing with administrative skills. The seminar will also serve as a support group. Intern members will be expected to provide the greater university community with workshops on the insights they have obtained.

This year interns were paid 625 dollars per semester. Pay for next years program has yet to be negotiated, it should be somewhere around the same level. Also, we hope to have funds to pay some interns during the summer.

The program is committed to the recruitment of women and minority students for next years program.The committment should not discourage others from applying.

Applications are available in Room 219, School of Education, and must be completed by Friday, April 28. Questions should be directed to Bob Brick, 546-5166.

Bob Brick

Act!

To the Editor:

The hassle over the reappointment of Mike Best focuses on three major issues:

1) How effective are students in determining the hiring and firing of faculty members?

2) How effective are students in determining what courses are offered?

3) How severely does the prevailing ideology of the department heads limit what can be taught at the University?

Apparently the conservative element of the Economics Department neglects student sentiment in its policy decisions. The fact that Mike's teacher evaluations are very favorable is ignored in regards to his reappointment. What, then, really does determine who will teach?

Although he takes a value-laden view of economic issues, he nevertheless presents a broad spectrum of economic thought. Mike has continually presented a comprehensive analysis of contemporary economic issues. His world view, however, is too broad for the narrowly structured curriculum within the Economics Dept. At present, the majority of Economics courses here center only on a new-classical analysis of economic issues.

If you are interested in your right to learn, and Mike Best's right to teach, now is the time to act. Please help us by signing the petition in support of Mike Best on the Campus Center concourse. If you would like to actively participate in Mike's struggle contact Harry at 549-6660.

Editorial Points

If you are under 21, the Blue Wall Cafeteria must feel very intimidating. Only one little corner of a very long bar is allowed for your use. And on Sunday afternoons, when you are munching on your pizza or grinder, just try to get a soft drink. Then again, if you are over 21, perhaps you feel very elitist. After all, the televisions were put in there specifically for you.

Should ROTC stay on campus? Should the University be allowed train people for killing? Should the University provide a place for training an all volunteer army/ do ROTC graduates make better officers? And do they liberize the army? Should the University be a learning place for everything? These are the questions of the day; but, not all the questions of the day.

After careful observation of the inhabitants of UMass, I have come to this conclusion about friends. I deeply value friendship, and would like to pass along to you my definition of a friend.

A friend is -

A person who wants to share his music with me at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Someone who "borrows" my notebooks because he has not gone to class, and when I am not in he goes into my room to get them.

A person who speeds up when he sees a puddle right near me so he can test my water repellent clothes.

Someone who plays his guitar in the stirwell just when I have fallen asleep.

A person who uses my room while I am at home for the weekend.

Someone who passes me by when I slip and fall and drop my books.

A person who asks favors of me and is never there when I need one.

Someone who comes into the T.V. room and changes the program I have been watching.

A person who will tell my secrets, and talk about me when my back is turned.

Someone who wants to investigate my locked car and does.

A person who disturbs me when I am trying to study in the library.

Someone who defaces and misuses my property.

A person who cannot see past his nose when it comes to my values.

Someone who never has time to listen to me.

Think about what I have written, and then take a long and careful look at YOUR friends.

Go Away ROTC

To the Editor:

It seems that the argument most often encountered when dealing with the issue of ROTC is that to remove it from the campus is to infringe on people's right to make a free choice. I believe this to be inaccurate and if I believed it to be true I would not support the petition to have it removed.

I think it is a question of MY right to choose which is being infringed.

As it stands now we (the University) are accepting money for having ROTC on campus. At the same time it is my understanding that the University (us) have no control over the subject matter within the ROTC curriculum. I feel that the University (we), by abdicating all control and by accepting money with that premise, giving support and approval to an institution which is intricately connected with the military; which (military) I view as being outragously oppressive. Since I am a part of this university I feel that I am a party to this acceptance and support of the military machine by our (the University's) acceptance of ROTC with the status that it now enjoys.

It is a question of free choice. I do not want to be in a position where I am forced to support the military by my involvement within a larger institution, when I have nothing to say about my position within this institution.

The solution for me is that I not be forced into supporting the military through acceptance of its structure and installations while the people who wish to take ROTC be allowed their freedom to train in ROTC. Thus we both have freedom to choose.

If it is moved off campus, ROTC can retain it's autonomous course structure and federal funding, and at the same time, I will not be forced to support it by virtue of my being part of the university.

Women & Jewish

To the Editor:

On Sunday night, April 23, at 11:45, five of us went into Friendly's on Route 9 in Hadley. The manager of the shop was talking to a customer about a new girl he had hired. The next thing we heard was a comment from the customer which was, "The only way you can make it in this world is to be handicapped, black, a woman or Jewish." Naturally, out of curiosity we turned around to see the customer-LO AND BEHOLD- he was a man with grey hair and black glasses whom we recognized as a Professor in the School of Business Administration.

Maybe a comment like this wouldn't have upset the average person. However, if you realize this man's position and his contact with a vast cross-section of people, you'd realize the severity of his statement. If we are to have prejudiced professors, what is to become of those "blacks, Jews, handicapped, women" and others that he teaches? A professor does have a responsibility to his students and his school; and one who demonstrates such blantant prejudice certainly has no business teaching-PERIOD. Isn't it too bad that the University couldn't have found someone better?

Oh, by the way-to that certain Professor in the School of Business Administration- two of us were WOMEN AND JEWISH! Sorry we struck out on the other two qualifications. Oh yes, if ever you have a cold, do what our grandmothers from the old country do--try a little chicken soup-you'll like it. Next year on Brotherhood week - take a Jew to lunch.

Federal Program - Speculators, Banks Clean House

WASHINGTON (AP) - The inner city homeownership program is a multibillion dollar disaster for the federal government, but to real estate speculators and financial institutions it is a money tree harvested with little risk.

Four years have passed since the government began encouraging low-income families to buy homes rather than rent. The incentive was low down payment, as little as $200 plus federally guaranteed and sometimes subsidized mortgages.

Although successful in some cities, the program has plowed through sections of New York, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis and other metropolitan areas with these results: thousands of unhappy owners saddled with disintegrating houses; scandals culminating in conpiracy and fraud indictments of a handful of real estate operators and federal officials; rapid-fire abandonment of what is expected to top 240,000 usable dwelling units within a few years.

Housing Secretary George Romney estimates the Federal Housing Administrtion will be stuck with $2.4 billion on these lapsed mortgages.

"Congressionally mandated homeownership programs in the inner cities for the 'neediest families' not only are not working satisfactorily in certain cities, they are clearly contributing to abandonment and decay," he said.

Among real estate players who are reaping profits from the government's debaccle are speculators, real estate agents, rehabilitation firms, mortgage companies, banks, and the final holders of the risk-free mortgages-insurance companies, savings associations, pension funds, and the government-sponsored Federal National Mortgage Association.

Romney said he has resisted terminating the programs because they have helped many families into sound homes. He is tightening their administrtion instead. But his aides concede that skillful speculators can abuse even the new regulations.

Speculators, for example, can explode a new federal ceiling on profits through two so-called straw sales, at successively higher prices, before the final transaction with a low-income homebuyer, the aides said. A straw buyer is someone connected with the speculator.

Details of the scandals vary from city to city, but the general scheme is this: speculators flood a racially changing neighborhood, coax or frighten white homeowners into selling cheaply, apply cosmetic rehabilitation to the houses, gain an inflated FHA appraisal of the property's worth, then sell to low-income, minority families who can't afford the upkeep.

Indictments charge that FHA appraisers were sometimes bribed and that the poor sometimes connived with speculators to get false credit ratings for mortgage eligibility.

When repair costs mount, the families abandon the houses. The government is forced to pay off the mortgage holders, then demolish or rehabilitate the homes.

"It's inhuman," said Patrick Cea, a state investigator who uncovered the New York City housing scandal. "These people have been bilked, cheated and exploited. They never had a chance."

The 1968 legislation establishing the FHA guarantee for high-risk inner city mortgages was "the starting gun for one of the biggest gold rushes in real estate speculative history," said Milton P. Semer, former general counsel of the agency. "It was really a gold rush because the payoffs came in cold, hard cash."

While speculators led the rush, they had the support of an elaborate network of financial institutions that place the mortgages, and ultimately gain from early foreclosures.

Mortgage companies are pivotal institutions in the speculative dynamic. Nominally the firms originate FHA mortgages on the speculators' houses for ultimate resale to institutional investors.

But many mortgage companies also extend high interest loans, typically at 11 to 18 per cent, for the initial, speculative purchase of houses destined for resale to low-income families.

The loans are often made with money the mortgage company borrows cheaply from commercial banks. Bank officials say they offer the low rates because the mortgage companies maintain deposits of interest-free escrow accounts, containing the advance insurance and property tax payments of homeowners.

Industry sources said speculators channel mortgage business to firms that favor them withinterim financing.

Donald Carroll, FHA director for New York City, confirmed that links between mortgage companies and speculators were common. "All of our lenders were doing this speculative funding until I ordered it stopped April 19," he said.

Detroit records show that at least six mortgage companies had given short-term financing to speculators in recent years.

Some banks also make direct loans to speculators.

The final purchaser of the inner city mortgages can make large profits from transactions that lead to early foreclosure.

Lawrence S. Katz, former FHA director in Milwaukee and now a banker, said windfall profits on disclosures result because investors commonly purchase mortgages at discount.

In case of forclosure after six months, the FHA pays the holder the face value of the mortgage, generating a high rate of return.

"Under the discount point system, it is a happy mortgagee who makes bad loans and a successful one who has a high foreclosure rate," said a recent article in the Missouri Law Review.

These mortgagees, or final investors, include insurance companies, savings associations and pension funds-institutions encouraged by the government to invest in inner city mortgages.

But the major owner of inner city FHA mortgages is the Federal National Mortgage Association, a quasi-governmental, investor-owned corporation set up to stabilize the FHA mortgage market.

A spokesman for the association, Gordon E. Nelson, conceded some foreclosure windfalls have been made by FNMA. But he said they represent a relatively insignificant part of FNMA's $1.2 billion gross earnings last year from interest and discount points.

"To infer from this that we encourage early foreclosures is simply untrue," said Nelson.

The University Film Study Center will hold its Second Annual Summer Institute on Film and Photography from June 11 to July 1 on the campus of the University of New Hampshire in Durham.

The Summer Institute will be an exciting, concentrated educational experience for teachers, potential teachers, students, and enthusiasts of film and photography. Days will feature lectures, workshops, screenings, and seminars, with breaks for discussions and special projects. Evenings will be free for open screenings and special lectures involving all interested students. The weekends will include special seminars on teaching materials for film study, and the support of independent filmmakers.

There will be five workshops and four theory courses offered at the Institute including:

INTRODUCTION TO FILM STUDY - Three one-week sections with Gerald O'Grady, of the State University of New York at Buffalo. A consideration of the problems of film study, methods of approach and design of courses.

INDEPENDENT AMERICAN CINEMA - Three one-week sections, the first with Stan Brakhage, filmmaker; the second with Donald Skoller, of the Department of Speech and Theatre of the City University of New York; and the third with Standish Lawyer of the Art History Department of Yale University. The nature of the independent film, and its origins and influences; its development in America; an examination of the work of selected filmmakers.

Those attending the full three weeks of the Institute will be eligible for four graduate transfer credits from the Department of Graduate Film Studies in the School of Public Communications at Boston University.

Registration for each course is limited and will be received on a first come, first served basis. The closing date for registration is May 10.

The UFSC is a non-profit organization formed for the purposes of coordinating and supporting the study of film and television among the universities and colleges of the New England region. Incorporated in 1968, the Center is currently housed on the Brandeis University campus, from which it serves twelve member institutions: Boston University, Brandeis University, Brown University, Hampshire College, Harvard University, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston, University of New Hampshire, Wellesley College, Wesleyan University, and Yale University.

March Called To Defend N.Y. Law

NEW YORK (LNS) - New York State's liberalized abortion law, passed last year after a long fight by women's groups, is under attack. A well-financed challenge, backed by the considerable wealth of the New York Catholic Archdiocecs, is attempting to get the law repealed.

New York's law, one of the most liberal in the country, permits abortions on demand for women up to 24 weeks pregnant. Since July 1970, when the law came into effect (during which time 200,000 abortions were performed) most health authorities have praised the results. Deaths from faulty illegal abortions have dropped dramatically, the "illegitimate" birth rate has fallen off (this is usually used by the Health Dept. as a yardstick to measure unwanted births), and the number of low-weight, premature births--those with the lowest life expectancy--has dropped as well. Women from many parts of the country have avoided the hack abortioner by coming to New York to have abortions.

Now the alliance of right-wing groups and Catholic hierarchy is exerting pressure on legislators to repeal the law and return New York to the era when abortions were only permitted to "save the life of the mother"--a decision made by a committee of doctors at each hospital. There is evidence that many Catholic women do not agree with the Church hierarchy's stand. In Canada, one abortion counselor reported that 40% of their counseling was given to Catholic women.

Several weeks ago, 10,000 people led by the Knights of Columbus, a men's Catholic fraternal order, and groups like Right to Life and Friends of the Feturs marched to demand repeal. The momentum for repeal has built quickly, catching the women's movement unawares. The cries of "murder" have frightened many legislators, who, not sensing the support of the pro-abortion movement, are jumping on the bandwagon of repeal, lest they be tagged murerers too.

Now, the May 6 Coalition For Abortion Rights has called for a rally and march to be held in an effort to stem the tide.

Warning that already because of pressure, New York has stopped medicaid payments for elective abortions and that on Long Island, the only public hospital closed down its abortion clinic, the group is calling for all supporters of the present abortion law to come out.

Word has gotten out that a "compromise" is afoot in the New York State Legislature, Governor Rockefeller has said he would sign a bill that reduced the period when women could elect abortions from the present 24 to 16 weeks. Had such a limitation been applied this year, 24,000 women would have been denied abortions and would have had to get them illegally.

Right now it's unclear who would vote for such a compromise. As one assemblyman said, "The anti-abortion people won't vote for it and the pro-abortion people won't either. Who will?"

The May 6 Coalition includes Congresswoman Bella Abzug and Shirley Chisholm, Women's Health and Abortion Project (WONAAC), Beulan Saunder of the National Welfare Rights Organization, and many other groups. Th marchers will assemble at 12 noon in front of Bellvue Hospital First Ave. and 27th St. and march to Union Square. More information can be obtained from WONAAC, 150 5th Ave., New York, N.Y. 10011. Canadian Farmers Group Organizes Kraft Boycott

TORONTO (LNS) — Charging that Kraft Foods is a "notorious exploiter of labor;; and a "shameless union buster", the Canadian National Farmers' Union (NFU) recently launched a nationwide boycott of all products manufactured by the giant Kraft food conglomerate. The purpose of the boycott is to force Kraft (chosen as a target because it is the predominant corporation in the food-marketing field in Canada) to bargain collectively with small dairy farmers to establish a fair price for their produce.

Small dairy producers are caught in an economic squeeze between big companies like Kraft and Carnation which set the prices for the farmers' products. Becuase they receive only minimal returns on their produce, farmers are often forced to leave their land and their farms are then absorbed into huge corporate farms. The NFU is demanding the right to act as the bargaining agent for dairy producers in their negotiations with the food conglomerates. In the past, no such united effort has existed.

Kraft, the largest dairy monopoly in North America, is America's 32nd largest corporation, with sales totaling $2.6 billion in 1969. Along with its subsidiaries, Sealtest and Dominion Dairies, Kraft produces a whole range of familiar products — milk. butter, cheese, salad dressing, jams, ice cream and many more.

Besides its Canada plant the corporation also has overseas plants in Guatemala, Venezuela, Belgium, France, Denmark, Mexico, Sweden, and Philippines, Panama, England, Australia, Spain and Italy.

Several Canadian labor groups have already given their support to the boycott, including the Ontario Federation of Labor, the Saskatchewan Federation of Labor, and the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union.

Cosmic Flash: Army Gets Hip

HEILDELBERG, West Germany (LNS) — Since outdated moralistic lectures have demonstrably failed to persuade soldiers to stay away from drugs the Army has now shifted gears and is trying child psychology.

In a hopelessly comical attempt to show they know "where it's at", and U.S. Army in Germany sanctions, finances and distributes a "with it" flyer called the Cosmic Flash. The paper, published by "Project Help," is crudely printed and illustrated with marginal doodles in a self conscious attempt to appear like an underground rag put out by a band of anarchistic heads.

In the spirit of counter-cultural solidarity, Volume 6, #5 of Cosmic Flash cautions: "...if you follow these rules you might live longer." The rules warn soldiers to "never mix drugs" and never "smoke over twice a week." It also suggests, "bail out when ready." In case the jargon is a little too hip for you, the message ("Quit when you want to") is decoded underneath.

For the Black soldier there's "Brother Rap's Corner," a sort of racial Dear Abby that dispenses advice on avoiding addiction. His message: "We fought slavery too long for you to take on another form of slavery..." The other form of slavery they are referring to, of course, is not army life.

In a transparent attempt to sow paranoia, a feature called "Bust News" lists recent arrests of soldiers stationed in Germany. After mentioning a soldier who was turned in for hash by his German girl friend the paper asks, "Just who can you trust?"

Kennedy To Raise Funds For McGovern

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mrs. Ethel Kennedy, widow of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, plans to hold a fund-raising picnic for Sen. George S. McGovern at her McLean, Va., estate, family sources confirmed Sunday.

The sources said a report in Sunday's Cleveland Plain Dealer that Mrs. Kennedy would publicly endorse McGovern, possibly before Tuesday's Ohio presidential primary, was incorrect, but that she has been telling friends she favors McGovern's nomination.

Sources close to McGovern indicated the senator expects to get the eventual backing of both Mrs. Kennedy and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, though the latter might not come until the Democratic National Convention in Miami Beach.

But Sen. Kennedy's press secretary, Richard Drayne, said that is wrong. "Sen. Kennedy has said he is going to be neutral until the party has chosen its nominee, and that is still his intention," Drayne said.

McGovern entered the 1968 presidential race after the assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and received some support from his backers at the 1968 Democratic National Convention.

His national political director Frank Mankiewicz, was the late senator's press secretary, while McGovern campaign director Gary Hart also worked in Robert Kennedy's campaign.

Kathleen Kennedy, the 20-year-old oldest daughter of Robert Kennedy, has been campaigning with McGovern the past week in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Ohio and told reporters that most of her family supports McGovern.

The Plain Dealer said Mrs. Kennedy will actively seek to raise campaign funds for McGovern's presidential bid.

It said that if her endorsement comes before Tuesday's Ohio primary, it could lead to a possible upset victory by McGovern over Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey.

Job Preparation Center In S.W.

By "TALKING POINT"

In the course of many students' academic careers, one often finds it necessary to consult someone else about finding solutions to problems that he or she may have. To make such a job easier to come by, different services in and around one's environment have been established.

One such recent service, which seems beneficial to the student, if "TALKING POINT". It is an independent personal counseling, career counseling and all round information service operated by graduate and undergraduate students, who are trained or training to assist the people of Southwest. Its limits do not, however, stop here.

We offer one-to-one personal counseling and group counseling on a confidential, informal, walk-in or appointment basis as well as teaching individual counseling skills and training.

Because this service is newly established and many people have little or no idea about what "TALKING POINT" is, we would be glad to explain our purposes to anyone interested in finding out. We would also like to know, from students, if such a service would be valuable enough to continue in the years to come. All responses are welcome.

"TALKING POINT" is located in Washington Tower Lobby. The hours are from 3-5/6-10 PM Monday to Thursday and Friday from 10-noon/1-4. Feel free to call us at 545-0702 for any questions or problems that you may have.

American-Asian Trade Problems Lecture Tomorrow

Bertil Liander, lecturer in international business in the School of Business Administration at UMass will speak on "America and Asia: Problems of Trade" Tuesday, May 2, at 7:30 p.m. in the third-floor faculty lounge of Herter Hall.

His lecture will be the fourth in the series, "America and Asia: 1972" sponsored by the Program of Asian Studies and the Division of Continuing Education. Mr. Liander will deal particularly with problems relating to the development of trade with both China and Japan and will also discuss cultural differences as they may affect business relations.

If you think Kodak is just pretty pictures, you ought to have your chest examined.

When a chest x-ray shows that you have a potential killer like TB or cancer, it's not a pretty picture. But it's an important picture because it can help the doctor detect and catch the killer in time.

When doctors are out to catch these potential killers, they want the sharpest, clearest x-ray films they can get. And that's why people at Kodak spend so many hours creating new and better x-ray film equipment. Already, the results include convenience for the patient, economy for the hospital, an even more useful tool for the radiologist—and, most important, reduced radiation exposure.

Researching and creating better x-ray films is good for our business, which is why we went into them in the first place. But it does our society good, too—which isn't a bad feeling. After all, our business depends on our society—so we care what happens to it.

Kodak More than a business.

Mass Transit Experiment Here

A $700,000 federal project and plans for a demonstration transit system which could be a prototype of solutions to urban transportation problems were announced last week, by Congressman Silvio O. Conte at UMass, where the experiment will take place.

The announcement was made at a press conference attended by Mr. Carlos Villarreal of the Urban Mass Transportation Administration of the U. S. Department of Transportation. Also present were UMass President Robert Wood, UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, and Acting Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage.

Beginning February, 1973, and continuing for 19 months, 12 buses will provide students, faculty, and staff with free bus transportation around campus and to campus from Route 116 north and Route 9 east. The idea is to limit inner-campus traffic. A UMass Transportation and Parking Council is developing a parking plan to support the aims of the experimental traffic system.

The $475,441 grant from the Department of Transportation will be supplemented by $227,728 in money, labor, and services from UMass. The grant will be administered by the UMass School of Engineering.

Engineering Options Open

Some new chemical engineering options in environmental engineering, bioengineering and other areas will be offered for consideration for the first time at this year's Counseling Period beginning Monday, May 1.

The chemical engineering department is beginning a series of career-oriented and interdisciplinary programs leading to a B.S. degree in chemical engineering and with emphasis in several fields of specialization — environmental engineering, bioengineering, food science and business administration.

The environmental engineering option has courses in such areas as microbiology, biochemistry, environmental engineering design and legal aspects of environmental control. It is designed to train engineers to solve environmental problems.

Bioengineering is the application of chemical engineering to problems in viology and medicine, as in the design of artificial organs, for example. Students take several courses in the biological sciences as a replacement of some chemical engineering courses.

The food science option adds courses in microbiology, biochemistry, food chemistry and food processing to the chemical engineering curriculum. The food industry is the largest single one in the U.S., and has growing opportunities in food processing, developing new foods, and many other areas.

A cooperative effort by the chemical engineering department and the School of Business Administration has resulted in the chemical engineering-business administration option.

Interrogation Here Today

"Tackling the atomic energy commission: Exposing Nuclear Hazards" is the title of a talk to be given by Mr. Dan Ford at UMass, in Hasbrouck 20, Monday May 1 at 8:00 P.M.

Mr. Ford is the technical interrogator for the National Intervenors, a coalition of 63 environmental and citizens groups (including the New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution) representing the public interest at current Atomic Energy Commission hearings which have reopened the debate on nuclear power safety. Mr. Ford's job there is to match wits with the AEC's top experts and to draw out their long-silenced professional secrets.

This will be the first public appearance by a member of the National Intervenors technical team since the dramatic story has come to light of how the nuclear industry has willfully put commercial expansion ahead of public safety.

Mr. Ford is a co-author, with other members of the Union of Concerned Scientists, of Boston, of two in-depth reports in 1971 which sharply criticized nuclear plant design and threw consternation into an entire industry.

This unique appearance is being presented by the Coalition for Environmental Quality of UMass.

Applications Open For Work In Environmental Institute

The Institute for Man and His Environment of UMass, is now accepting applications from undergraduate and graduate students who would like to gain some practical field experience working with an active environmental agency or citizen's group.

Available opportunities include: conservation and wildlife work, legislative research and reporting, work in state and municipal agencies, work with various citizens' groups in the areas of pollution, energy problems, growth, waste disposal, the urban environment, consumer advocacy and individually designed projects as well.

Students will be assisted in obtaining academic credit for their experience. This work will be part time and in most cases on a volunteer basis.

Students who would like more information should pick up a flyer and fill out a brief application form at the Institute, 305 Graduate Research Center or call 5-0648.

Amram Residency Continues

David Amram, composer of music for orchestras, operas, plays, and films, is the first artist-in-residence sponsored by the Fine Arts Council at UMass.

Mr. Amram will be on campus until Thursday, May 4, for concerts and lectures on campus, and visits to nearby public schools and colleges.

David Amram has composed more than 100 orchestra and chamber music works, written two operas, and done scores for more than 30 productions of the New York Shakespeare Festival and for several films including "Splendor in the Grass" and "Manchurian Candidate."

He plays French horn, piano, guitar, Pakistani flute, and bazookie. Mr. Amram was composer-in-residence of The New York Philharmonic for the 1966-67 season, and in 1971 his autobiography "Vibrations" was published. David Amram is working with folk and Eastern music.

Among activities planned during Mr. Amram's visit to UMass will be his conducting of his "King Lear Variations" with the University Symphony Band Sunday afternoon, April 30, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium; a Distinguished Visitor's Program Lecture entitled "No More Walls" scheduled for Thompson Hall, room 103, Tuesday, May 2, at 8 p.m.; and an open jam session Wednesday, May 3, at 6:30 p.m. in Old Chapel.

A full schedule of activities is available upon request from the Fine Arts Council.

Schedule Of David Amram Residency

Tuesday, May 2	8:00 p.m.	Lecture — Distinguished Visitor's Program "No More Walls" — Thompson Tower 104
Wednesday, May 3	6:30 p.m.	Open Jam Session and improvisational workshop. Old Chapel
Thursday, May 4	3:00 p.m.	Jazz Seminar — Bowker Auditorium
	8:00 p.m.	*Concert — David Amram Jazz Quartet — Bowker
Friday, May 5	3:00 p.m.	Record autograph Party — Listening Post, 25 South Pleasant St., Amherst
	7:30 p.m.	Informal talk — Smith-Amherst Hillel Foundation (Helen Hills Chapel, Smith College)

*Tickets available c/o UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall (545-0282). All other programs free of charge.

His residency at UMass is supported by a grant from The National Endowment for the Arts in jazz. The two major events of the week-long residency will be Folk/Eastern Concert, Saturday, April 29, at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall, and a concert by The David Amram Jazz Quartet in Bowker Auditorium Thursday, May 4, at 8 p.m. Tickets for both events are available at the Fine Arts Council Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone (413) 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at the door one hour before each concert.

Angels Nip Orioles

BALTIMORE (AP) - Pinch-hitter Winston Llenas drove in the go-ahead run during a three-run seventh inning rally as the California Angeles shipped the Blatimore Orioles 4-3 in a Sunday baseball game.

Blanked by Pat Dobson after Vada Pinson's first-inning home run, the Angels launched their winning rally with a one-out double by Ken McMullen.

A single by Art Kusnyer scored pinch-runner Tom Silverio to tie the score 2-2, and Kusnyer took second on center fielder Paul Blair's throw to the plate.

Llenas batted for winner Rick Clark, 2-1, and singled in the tie-breaking run, then continued a third when the ball went past right fielder Don Baylor for an error. Ken Berry's infield single, followed by a Brooks Robinson throwing error, allowed an unearned California run to score.

A bases-loaded walk and a sacrifice fly scored Baltimore runs in the first off Clark, a last-minute replacement for scheduled starter Clyde Wright.

Petty Wins Va. 500

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) - Richard Petty drove his red-and-blue Plymouth to victory Sunday in the Virginia 500 at Martinsville Speedway before a standing-room-only crowd of 29,500.

Petty, 34, stock car racing's most prolific winner, had trailed three others in this 17th Virginia 500 most of the hot, muggy afternoon until the opportunity to strike came late in the race.

David Pearson, seeking his second straight triumph in a Mercury, suddenly lost power with only 15 miles to go. Petty slipped around the crippled Pearson and cruised home free.

It was Petty's second stright victory in one of the National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing short-track spectaculars. He played the same waiting game at North Wilkesboro, N.C. a week ago to register career victory No. 143.

It was his 11th triumph at the .525-mile Martinsville oval and his eighth in nine starts at the well-manicured speedway.

Driving without relief, Petty covered the 262.5-mile distance in 3 hours, 36 minutes, 20 seconds for an average speed of 72.657 miles per hour. His share of the $45,000 purse was $6,750.

Second place went to Bobby Allison in a Chevrolet who trailed the winner by eight laps. Third was Dave Marcis in a Dodge, Cecil Gordon was fourth in a Mercury and Richard Brown finished fifth in a Chevrolet

Casper Leads Nelson Classic

DALLAS (AP) — Billy Casper moved in a one-stroke lead Sunday while Canadian longshot Wilt Homenuik encountered triple bogey disaster in the third round of the $125,000 Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

Casper, attempting to play his way out of a lengthy slump, had a one-under-par 69 in the rain-delayed third round and posted a 54-hole total of 202, eight under par on the long, tough Preston Trial Golf Club course.

Chi Chi Rodriguez, the wiry little Puerto Rican who also is trying to shed a year-old slump, was next at 203 with a 69, including a birdie on the final hole.

Then it was John Schlee, a member of this club who is seeking his first tour title. Schlee also took a 69 in the hot, humid weather and was alone in third at 204.

Homenuik, who has yet to win a major title on the American tour, had a share of the lead until he made a triple bogey seven on the 17th hole, hitting his second shot into the water and three putting.

Bruce Crampton, Tom Weiskopf and Dwight Nevil were tied at 206 with 18 holes to go in this chase for a $25,000 first prize.

Jack Nicklaus, the defending champion, knocked himself out of it. Nicklaus had to rally with birdies on three of the last five holes for a fat 73-312.

Arnold Palmer made a little move with a 67-208.

Also at 208 was Fred Marti who bolted into contention by matching the course record of 64, six under par.

Marti made four birds in a row coming home, then missed from 12, 5 and 8 feet on the next three holes. "I wasn't choking," the big blond said. "I was just getting embarassed. My conscience caught up with me."

Lee Trevino slipped to a 73-207.

The tournament schedule was pushed back a full day when a thunderstorm washed out Thursday's play. The tournament now is set to end Monday with an 18-hole round.

Casper, who has more than 40 tour titles but has won only once in the last 18 months, was alone starting the day's play but lost it to Homenuik, then regained it when the 34-year-old Canadian took the triple bogey when he hooked his tee shot and it plugged in the mud. His second found a creek. He dropped, pitched on, then three-putted from about 30 feet, missing from three feet on his second.

Brett Leads Brewer Win

MILWAUKEE (AP — Pitcher Ken Brett scored the decisive run on Brock Davis' seventh-inning single as the Milwaukee Brewers broke a four-game losing streak with a 3-1 victory over the Oakland A's Sunday.

Brett, who staked himself to a 1-0 lead with a run-scoring single in the second inning, raced home with the run that broke a 1-1 tie in the seventh. Davis took second on the throw to the plate and came home with an insurance run on Ron Theobald's single.

Brett was lifted after Larry Brown singled for the A's second hit with one out in the eighth. Ken Sanders allowed a two-out single by Bert Campaneris before retiring the side.

Brett allowed no hits until Sal Bando tripled with one out in the seventh scoring Joe Rudi who had reached base on Rick Auerbach's error leading off the inning. Brett faced 19 batters, one over the limit, through six innings.

The Milwaukee starter was working on a perfect game until Gene Tenace walked on a 3-2 pitch with one out in the fifth.

Astros Still Flying

HOUSTON (AP) - Doug Rader drove home one run in a decisive three-run rally in the third inning, then knocked in the winner with a seven-inning double that produced a 7-6 victory for the Houston Astros over the St. Louis Cardinals Sunday.

Rader's sacrifice fly produced the second run of the three-run third capped by Tommy Helms' run-scoring double. The rally broke a tie and gave Houston a 6-3 lead.

The Cardinals scored a run in the fourth on a double by Circilo Cruz and a single by Jerry McNertney, and one in the seventh when Houston catcher John Edwards John Edwards overthrew second on a pickoff attempt of Lou Brock. Donn Clendenon came home from third on the error.

Houston scored its winning run when Rader's double chased home Bob Watson, who opened the inning with a two-base hit.

St. Louis scored its final run in the ninth on Lou Brock's RBI single.

Ali Favored Tonight

Looking ahead to another meeting with Joe Frazier, the only man ever to beat him, the 30-year-old Ali said "Chuvalo must fall."

If he does go down, it would be the first time in the long career of the durable 34-year-old Canadian champion.

They met once before, in 1966, when Ali still had the boxing crown and the name of Casius Clay. Chuvalo proved a surprise then, going a full 15 rounds, although soundly outpointed.

This time they are scheduled for 12 rounds at the Pacific Coliseum starting at 10:30 p.m. EDT, with Ali collecting $200,000 and Chuvalo $75,000.

"I think I have a better chance now," Chuvalo said. "He's slowed up and I know better how to fight him"

Despite the show of confidence by the Toronto battler, there were few anticipating an upset. Most of the interest centered on whether he would go down for the first time in a professional career dating back to 1956.

Chuvalo has won 68 of 86 fights and has been stopped by both Frazier and George Foreman on cuts. Ali's record is 35-1.

A month ago, Ali seemed out of shape in Tokyo when he beat Mac Foster but he's kept in training since then and plans to come into the ring about 10 pounds lighter than the 226 he weighed that time.

"If I am trim, Chuvalo's chances are slim," the ex-champ quipped.

Murray Pezzim, the Vancouver stock promoter, making his first effort with a boxing promotion, scaled the 17,000 seat Coliseum for $466,000, with a $100 top.

Chances of filling the arena appeared as slim as those of Chuvalo winning the fight.

Red Hot White Sox Beat Tigers, 6-3

DETROIT (AP) - Ed Herrmann blasted a two-out grandslam home run off Joe Coleman in the sixth inning Sunday to power the Chicago White Sox to a 6-3 win over Detroit, snapping the Tigers' four-game winning streak.

Herrmann's drive came after Coleman walked three men to load the bases after retiring the first two.

It gave Coleman his first loss after three triumphs, while Tom Bradley, 2-0, picked up the victory.

The White Sox got their first run in the fifth when Mike Andrews led off with a double and came home on a two-out single by Pat Kelly.

Norm Cash hit a solo homer for Detroit in the second, his fourth, and Jorge Orta hit his first for the White Sox in the ninth.

The Tigers also scored in the fifth when Ed Brinkman doubled, took third on Dick McAuliffe's single and scored on a squeeze bunt by Auerilio Rodriguez.

Jim Northerup singled in a run in the sixth after Bill Freehan walked, took second on a sacrifice and third on a ground out.

FinleyWon'tConsider Order From Kuhn

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Oakland Athletics owner Charles O. Finley said Sunday he cannot consider keeping open his contract offer to Vida Blue as ordered by Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kahn because of what he termed Kunn's "one way street stand in the salary dispute."

"I haven't decided whether to keep it open, but right now I will not keep it open - won't even consider it - until he orders Blue to accept it," Finley told The Associated Press.

"He, Kuhn has got to retract that statement and request me to keep it open, or go out and order Blue to accept it," he said. "Or once he has requested both parties to give consideration - that's something else

"But as long as it's a one-way street, that's another situation," he said. "I can't even consider it."

Finley, Blue and the star southpaw's attorney, Robert Gerst, had agreed on a contract after a 22-hour meeting in Chicago Friday. It fell through when Blue declined to sign a joint announcement publicizing details of the agreement.

Kuhn then ordered the offer be left open. Finley said he objected to being ordered.

Kuhn said he was issuing the directive under his general powers to act in "the best interests of baseball." He said he would urge Blue to accept the offer.

"I, against him ordering me without even asking me," Finley said, "and now in the same breath he says he is requesting Blue to give serious consideration to accepting it. The commissioner has no business being in this. It should be a two-way street. If he should call another meeting, yours truly will not be there."

Finley said some of Kuhn's powers "are a little ambiguous." "He can interpret them some way and we owners have our own interpretations," Finley said.

"I'm just very bitter at the way he's handled this," he said.

Blue had a 24-8 record last year and earned $14,750. Finley said he offered the pitcher a $50,000 contract for 1972, plus $8,000 for a college scholarship and $5,000 for attorney's fees. The extra $13,000 would be applicable to Blue's 1971 contract, Finley said.

He said he thought Blue was on the verge of signing until Kuhn intervened.

"The commissioner arbitrarily involved himself and forced himself into contract negotiations with Blue and I do not believe he had the authority to do so." he said.

Atlanta Trounces Pirates, 6-1

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Phil Niekro spaced eight hits and Orlando Cepeda and Ralph Garr hit home runs as the Atlanta Braves defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates 6-1 in a Sunday baseball game.

The loss was the fifthe straight for the Pirates, who went through last season with no more than a four -game losing streak and won the National League pennant.

Cepeda, starting his first game this season, homered off Bob Johnson in the second inning and Garr hit a solo shot in the third.

The Braves scored four more runs in the sixth inning with Rico Carty getting the key blow, a bases-loaded single for two runs.

Niekro, 2-2, lost his shutout in the ninth inning when he gave up a leadoff home run to Richie Hebner.

Johnson lost his first decision for the Pirates.

Redmen Nine Drop Twinbill

NOT THIS TIME: John Olson, who has been birtually untouchable so far this season for the Redmen, ran into control problems over the weekend and suffered a 6-3 loss to the Black Bears at the University of Maine. UMass also dropped the first game of the double header, their only two defeat of the season. (MDC Photo by Dan Kamal)

By BILL BALLOU

ORONO, Me. - It didn't snow up here in God's country this weekend, and the bus didn't break down on the ride up or back.

So much for the good news of the Maine road trip.

The rest of the news is all bad for the UMass baseball team, news that temporarily, at least, derails the Omaha express.

The Redmen lost two games to the University of Maine this weekend, which is in itself bad news. But the sting might not have been so bad if they had been outplayed by Maine en route to the double setback rather than beating themselves with a very uncharacteristic display of sloppy baseball.

The scores, 2-1 on Friday and 6-3 on Saturday, tell the results, but no the effects of the weekend disaster. These two losses, coupled with Connecticut's two-game sweep over New Hamnshire, drop the Redmen a full two games behind the Huskies, who remain undefeated in Yankee Conference action.

UMass went up to Maine with a 13-0 mark on the season and a 6-0 YanCon slate and came back 13-2 and 6-2 respectively. So with eight games left on the regular season schedule, the Redmen have their backs to the wall. They can't afford to lose any more Yankee Conference games and they must beat Connecticut twice when the Huskies' and Redmen meet in a home and home series at the tail end of the season. Even if UMass does sweep UConn, the two teams will only be tied, barring the unlikely prospect of UConn being upset by another conference team. If the Redmen lose either of those two Connecticut games, then it's curtains.

Back to Orono and more of the bad news.

Friday afternoon featured a pitcher's duel, more or less, between Tom White of UMass and Maine's Mike Jones. White wasn't at his sharpest, and Jones not particularly overpowering, but both men managed to get out of most of the scrapes they got into.

White just didn't get a break from his defense. The big lefty walked four and gave up six hits, but both the runs off him were unearned.

They came in the fourth inning when White worked himself into an ugly mess by loading the bases with just one out. From there he bore down and got Pete Hill to pop up to third and when pitcher Jones came up and hit a ground ball to short it looked like White had worked himself out of trouble. However, the usually glue-handed Ed McMahon couldn't come up with it and by the time he chased it down in short left field a runner had scored from third and John Coughlin had come all the home from second with what proved to be the winning run.

UMass got their only run in the fifth on a walk to Mark Palau and singles by Tom McDermott and Tom White, all with none out, but Jones stranded two runners by getting the next three Redmen in order.

The second game was even worse.

The final statistics, thanks to the generosity of the official scorer, don't reflect the porous UMass defense. Supposedly three of the six Maine runs were earned; saying all six were gifts would be more accurate.

It was all over after the first inning as Maine came out of that initial stanza with a 4-1 lead.

UMass had scored a run in the top of the first when Mike Flanagan's 330 foot single to right scored Ron Beaurivage, but Maine came back with four runs in their half. The wildness of starter John Olson and a throwing error with the bases loaded by shortstop Jim Saracino combined to hand Maine their four runs and the game.

The Redmen battled back in the third to make it 4-3, but with the advent of left hander Paul Rutkiewicz in the 4th the door was closed.

Maine picked up two more runs along the way to make it 6-3 and the Redmen, while hitting Rutkiewicz hard, couldn't manage to push across any more tallies. Thus, the two game sweep.

It was a wierd weekend; things happened that you normally don't see, people did uncharacteristic things.

A perfect example of the way things went for UMass, offensively at least, came in the second game. With Mark Palau on first and UMass threatening, Rick Hansen ripped a ground ball between the first and second basemen that was destined for the outfield. It never got there as it hit Palau square in the leg. Hansen still got his hit, but Palau was out and so was another rally.

John Olson lasted only two and two-thirds innings in the second game before he was pulled because of wildness. In those two and two-thirds innings he walked six. In his previous 28 innings he had walked only eight.

The situation is not good for the Redmen. They really can't afford to lose another game. This past weekend their attack was unlucky, their pitching, although not at fault, wasn't as strong as it has been. Their defense--that's best left unsaid.

The Redmen are in action again this afternoon at home against Williams College. Game time at Earl Lorden Field is 3:30 P.M.

Bruins Blow Four Goal Lead; Finally Edge Rangers, 6-5

BOSTON (AP) - Ace Bailey's goal with just 2:16 left to play erased a frantic New York comeback and gave the Boston Bruins a 6-5 victory over the Rangers Sunday in the opening game of their National Hockey League Stanley Cup championship.

The Rangers had bounced from behind, wiping out a four-goal Boston lead before Bailey swept down the left side and scored the winner at 17:44 of the third period. Mike Walton and Ed Westfall assisted on the goal.

Earlier, Derek Sanderson and Ken Hodge struck for a pair of short-handed goals just 45 seconds apart as Boston scored four times in the opening period.

Hodge added two other goals for his first Stanley Cup career hat trick as the Bruins dominated the early portion of the first game of the best-of-seven final series.

Boston played in the first period as if the Rangers would be easy victims.

But the Rangers weren't beaten yet. Power-play goals by Rod Gilbert and Vic Hadfield cut the Bruin margin to 5-3 and then Walt Tkaczuk and Bruce MacGregor connected less than two minutes apart to tie the game midway through the third period.

With momentum going their way, the Rangers pulled out all the stops against Boston goalie Gerry Cheevers and seemed to be carrying the play. Suddenly, Bailey flashed in over the blue line and carried the puck to the face-off circle before cutting sharply in front of the Ranger net and jamming it past goalie Ed Giacomin.

The shorthanded goals by Sanderson and Hodge seemed to cut the wind out of the Rangers after New York had skated strongly for the first 10 minutes of the game.

Ranger defenseman Dale Rolfe, scored the game's opening goal with both teams short a man at 3:52 of the first period. But 75 seconds later the Bruins were even when Fred Stanfield connected.

Hodge gave Boston the lead when he beat Giacomin from a scramble in front of the Ranger net after the New York goalie had lost his stick. Then Sanderson, who led the NHL with seven shorthanded goals during the regular season, made it 3-1 with Boston's Don Awrey in the penalty box.

Hodge's second goal, with the Bruins still skating off Awrey's penalty, put New York in a deeper hole.

In the second period, Hodge connected again for a 5-1 Boston lead, and it seemed the Bruins had nothing more to do than skate out the clock.

Gilbert's power-play goal, five seconds after a penalty to Phil Esposito, completed the scoring in the second period.

Then New York came alive in the final20 minutes, but Bailey's goal broke the back of the rally and won it for Boston.

Red Sox Change Pace

ARLINGTON (AP)-Tommy Harper's two-run double in the 10th inning broke a scoreless tie and carried the Boston Red Sox to a 3-0 baseball victory over the Texas Rangers Sunday.

Carlton Fisk and Bob Burda came home with the winning runs on Harper's double to the left-center field wall and Red Sox added an insurance run on Luis Aparacio's double.

Lew Krausse had given up but two singles-both by Lenny Randle-before being lifted for pinch-hitter Burda in the Red Sox' 10th. Burda was intentionally walked following a double by Fisk.

After Krausse allowed Randle's leadoff single, he retired 14 Rangers in a row before walking Frank Howard. Southpaw Jim Shellenback had allowed but six hits through eight innings in the pitching duel.

Bill Lee pitched the last inning for Boston to preserve Krausse's first victory of the season.

Lakers Coast

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Wilt Chamberlain went to the basket and Happy Hairston led a runaway third quarter as the Los Angeles Lakers coasted past the New York Knicks 106-92 Sunday to square their National Basketball Association Championship playoff series at one victory apiece.

The Knicks fell apart in the third quarter, playing most of it without Dave DeBusschere, who was injured, and Jerry Lucas, hampered by foul trouble.

DeBusschere, who led first-half rebounders with 10, pulled a muscle in his right hip in the second quarter. Although he started the third quarter, he had to leave early in the period, in which the Lakers outscored the Knicks 28-11.

Hairston outscored the whole New York team by himself with 12 points in the quarter.

The Knicks tried to rally in the fourth quarter, several times pulling to within 10 points, but Laker reserve Leroy Ellis applied the finishing touch when he hit an acrobatic lefthanded hook shot and Gail Goodrich followed with a 16-foot jumper for a 14-point lead.

In the final minute, successive buckets by Jerry West, Goodrich and Chamberlain capped the Lakers' revenge of a 114-92 defeat by the hot-shooting underdog Knicks in the series opener.

Women Softballer's Split

By ANDREWSTEIN HEPZIBAH and DORIS ROCKELLE

The UMass Women's Softball Team withstood a last inning attack by Keene State to win 7-5, last Wednesday. UMass scored first in the first inning with Pat Glispen scoring on a single by Diane Janvier. Barb Doucet scored in the same inning on a pass ball.

Freshman shortstop, Karen Fruzzetti's single in the second provided UMass with two additional runs. Glispen came home on a pass ball to make the score 5-0 at the end of two innings.

The first three runs for Keene were scored in the 4th inning and the final two runs in the bottom of the 7th. Vicki Pagel got out of a 7th inning bases loaded jam while pitching the whole game for the win. She allowed eleven hits, 5 walks, and 5 runs while striking out three.

On Friday, UMass travelled to Springfield College and left on the short end of the scoring. UMass started off the scoring with a single by Diane Janvier and a double by Linda Lankowski which provided the first run in the second. Springfield tied up the score in the bottom of the inning.

Karen Fruzetti responded in the top of the third by cracking a two-run homerun over the fence into downtown Springfield. Springfield tied the score in the bottom of the third and the score stood 3-3.

Linda Lankowski's solo homerun in the fourth allowed UMass to pull ahead until the bottom of the inning when UMass was destroyed by three errors which allowed Springfield to go ahead by three.

Pat Glispen's one out single in the 5th followed by a repeat performance by Fruzzetti which made the score 7-6, with Springfield still ahead. Springfield's final three in the bottom of the 5th was the last scoring to take place.

Colleen Belisle pitched a good game allowing only four earned runs on 10 hits, 1 base on balls, and three strike outs.

The first home game is Saturday, May 6 at 1 PM behind the Wope building against Keene State.

Lacrosse Win

The Redman Lacrosse team beat Williams College Saturday. Big stars in the 9-6 UMass win were Dwight Bloomquist with three goals, John Nagle with two and Hirsh Seidman, also with two. For more details, see tomorrow's Collegian.

Davis-America Is Not Healthy

There was this dog, ya see.....MDC photo by Gib Fullerton

By PAM HYJEK

Last night in the SUB a capacity crowd of students responded with much enthusiasm to the copious motherly-doctorly advice of Adelle Davis.

"America is not healthy....Our condition of nutrition is much more serious than realized," she warned.

Citing studies of the contrast between the diets of "uncivilized" people with ours, she named mass food processing as the most glaring cause of modern diseases. Among the "primitive" people there was "no tooth decay, no cancer, no heart disease, no gall stones, no crime, no psychiatry." Within a year, according to the study, when the tribe had been "converted" to white man's food, the characteristic white man's ailments appeared.

"When one vitamin, mineral, amino acid, or nutrient is missing, ill health results," said Ms. Davis. As an example, she observed that when magnesium . is lacking, nervousness results; while nervous, "hyperactive" children must be drugged in order to do school work. Our shortchange of the vital components of nutrition is due, she claimed, to the processes that destroy these nutrients to "preserve" and keep foods "fresh".

When conditions of heart disease, diabetes, allergies are added up, the number reached is larger than the total population. This, according to Ms. Davis, is because so many people have a combination of conditions.

"White flour will keep longer, but dark flour will support life." She related finding of some experiments with rats where after 3 months on a diet of standard white bread, the rats died. The same occurred when the rats were fed 10 of the leading advertised cereals, though they survived when milk, fruit, and cardboard from the boxes was added.

Among Ms. Davis' recommendations for health were: protein-60 to 80 grams daily, the B group of vitamins, vitamins A, E, C, magnesium, and polyunsaturated oil. Pooh-poohing the concern for too much cholesterol from vitamin A rich foods, she stressed the necessity of vitamin E to break down the cholesterol molecules. She also expressed firm denial of the much-disputed harmful effects of large amounts of vitamin C, claiming that many troublesome conditions have really improved due to the use of vitamin C.

"We get a tremendous amount of carbohydrates," said Ms. Davis. She apparently had little use for sugar, even in the refined state, because we do consume so much more of it than needed. Warning against processed cheeses, she advocated buying only the natural ones.

Ms. Davis is particularly disturbed by the use of the pill and the female hormones given to women in menopause, and the corresponding increase in cancer. Strongly condemning the commercial fertilizers, she urged that soil be properly built up by putting sewage on it, rather than in our rivers and oceans, so that organic methods of farming would have a real chance to succeed.

In concluding her talk, Adelle Davis advised: "Read labels; don't buy things with preservatives, if you can't pronounce it, don't buy it; if it's advertised, don't buy it, because good foods don't need to be advertised."

After answering several questions from "students only", which she specified, there was a coffee hour in the colonial lounge that ironically boasted of serving coffee and doughnuts.

Adelle David spoke last night to a jammed SU Ballroom on nutrition in America. Davis said that despite our standard of living, we are not physically healthy.

Grad Senate Accepts Nominations

By MDC STAFF

Veda Ross, President of the Graduate Student Senate, last night stressed the eligibility of all graduate students for this office for next year. Nominations for the position so far include incumbent Veda Ross from the English Department, Jim Blake from SBA, and Jim Murphy. The Presidency involves an annual salary of $3400.

Nominations are also still being accepted for the positions of vice-president, secretary and treasurer. Senate elections will be held on May 15. All Graduate Student Senators are urged to vote.

In other business the Senate tabled a motion to: "set up an organizational Task Force whose functions would be 1) to assist graduate students in creating student organizations within each of the Graduate departments and 2) to assist graduate students in each department in selecting representatives to serve on the Graduate Senate, on the Senate Committees, and on University Committees where the Graduate Senate has representation. The Task Force would consist of four members appointed by the Graduate Student Senate President.

Each Task Force member would be compensated at the rate of $2/hour, the hours being approved by the Graduate Senate President, up to a maximum expenditure of $800 for the Task Force for the beginning June 1, 1972 and ending May 31, 1973. The Task Force would be required to give reports of their work and progress upon request by any student senator at the scheduled Senate meetings."

The Senate also voted to appropriate $200 to Draft Counseling. According to the rationale submitted to the Senate, 1) Draft laws change--counselors need to be retrained to be able to pass on correct information. 2) Counselors need training in both counseling and educating skills. 3) Student Senate pays $5600 for current school year (71-72)--Graduate Senate so far paid $0.00 4) Graduate students make up 10-20% of draft counseling services' business. 5) the draft seems to be with us at least through June '73.

Also discussed was a motion to lower the Graduate Student Senate Tax from $2 to $1.50 per semester. But it was explained later that the "intermediate amount" could not be collected.

The Senate also voted to accept its budget for the fiscal year 72-73. And Veda Ross explained about last week's Graduate Students conference with Union leaders, nobody wants to unionize.

Ms. Ross also explained that all those holding a "Top of the Campus" I.D. are stockholders in "Top of the Campus, Inc." and urged them to attend the upcoming stockholders meeting which will elect the new Board of Directors.

Arrests Continue At Westover

By CAROL MacGREGOR

At a meeting last night dealing with the recent Westover demonstrations it was announced that thirty women were arrested at Westover Air Force Base yesterday while participating in non-violent civil disobedience. This was according to several women involved in the activities there.

The women were from the Amherst-Chicopee area and were commiting civil disobedience in conjunction with a series of continuing protests at Westover against escalation of the air war in Indochina.

Non-violent protest is expected to continue indefinitely at Westover. Participants gather at the Amherst Commons at 7:30 each morning. After a brief worship service outside the gates at Westover, those wishing to commit civil disobedience sit in the road blocking traffic to and from the base. A group of supporters leaflet traffic. Over 200 arrests have been made to date.

The protestors have urged that federal funding be made available to the town of Chicopee to cover the expenses encountered because of the arrests.

Workshops and non-violent training sessions are being conducted each night: Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, 8-10 p.m., on the main floor of Munson Hall, at the UMass campus; Wednesday, 8-10 p.m., at Eliot House, Mt. Holyoke College; Thursday and Friday, 7:30 p.m., at Springfield College and the First Congregational Church in Amherst. Participants and supporters are urged to attend.

Protesters Help Cut Costs

By GILBERT J. SALK

Since Friday, April 21, more than 200 demonstrators have been arrested at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, Mass., for committing nonviolent civil disobedience. Peace demonstrators have gathered in front of the main gate of the base each morning for a brief worship service, after which an average of about 25 of them have sat in the road in front of the gate. Holding hands and singing, they have offered no resistance to police officers who quickly arrest them.

Workshops in nonviolence are held each evening for those who plan to commit civil disobedience the following morning. In keeping with traditional civil disobedience, police are kept informed of the plans for the following day. As a result, most of the police are fully aware that the protestors bear them no hostility, and relations between the two groups has been growing more cordial as the demonstrations continue.

Plans for the coming week include continuing civil disobedience, training workshops, and special actions geared primarily for participation by women on Monday, and by faculty and staff from area colleges on Thursday.

Letters were sent to churches from Springfield to Greenfield by the United Christian Foundation at UMass Amherst explaining the christian-humanist philosophy behind the actions and urging people who are moved to bear similar witness to participate in a Saturday morning demonstration. (Letter attached) Training sessions for the Saturday demonstration will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday and Friday at Springfield College and at the 1st Congregational Church in Amherst.

At the request of one of the organizers of the peace actions, protestors met with city officials, (including the mayor, the police chief, and the District Court judge) to discuss ways of reducing the cost of the demonstrations to the city of Chicopee. At the meeting, the protesters made it clear that they were concerned that the city had to pay the costs, and suggested that the mayor bill the Federal Government for maintaining an attractive nuisance in the city and for instigating the demonstrations.

The demonstrators agreed to change the time of future actions to reduce the cost to the citizens of Chicopee by cutting down on police overtime. Since the meeting the mayor has sent letters to senators Brooke and Kennedy asking for help in getting the government to share the city's cost.

Some of the nonviolence trainers have offered to conduct training workshops for groups in other parts of the country which would like to organize similar activities. This training will be co-ordinated through the United Christian Foundation at UMass-Amherst.

S.O.S.-Meets Tonight

S.O.S. member, Dave Hynes announced yesterday that a meeting will be held this evening in the Campus Center to recruit students who wish to assist S.O.S. in collecting contributions and running the concession stands at this Sunday's Spring Concert.

The meeting will be held in rooms 175 and 162 at 10:00 p.m. according to Hynes.

In an interview yesterday, Hyne said that a large number of students will be needed if S.O.S. is to successfully gather contributions and run the concessions.

"Volunteers will be needed between the hours of 10:00 A.M. and 5:00 P.M. It is not necessary for a person to work during the whole time," Hynes stated.

The proceeds derived by S.O.S. at Sunday's Concert will go to The Friends of Belchertown to fund their class action suit which is now in Federal Court.

Students are urgently needed. Those who are unable to attend tonight's meeting and wish to assist S.O.S. are urged to call Rich or Dave at 546-8996.

—Weather—

Today will be cloudy and cooler, with the mercury in the sixties (Not in your fish). Showers are likely, 60 per cent they tell me although how you can have 60 percent of a shower is beyond me. That must be when you're full of soap and the water goes cold.

Maybe if it rains it will dilute the detritus in the campus pond. Speaking of fish (we were?), wonder how they like rain. (Yes, Virginia, there are fish in the pond.) News flash; Spring Day was postponed due to rain. At the rate we were going, it was lucky it wasn't canceled due to a blizzard. The remainder of this weather report is devoted to utter idiocy for the purpose of taking up space and making you feel like a fool for bothering to read it at all.

Demonstrators Hold Science Building At Hampshire College

AMHERST—A group of about 40 Hampshire College students occupied the science building early this morning, a spokesman for the college said yesterday.

Known as the Third World Organization, the group is made up of blacks, Latins and Orientals at the college, Donald Berth said.

In closing the building for the day, the Third World group requested administrators at the college use the time to consider several proposals submitted to them which concern more intensive recruitment of Third World students and faculty and more curriculum development focused on the needs of minority groups.

The four-floor science building houses all the college's laboratories in the natural sciences, several faculty offices and the majority of administrative offices.

In addressing members of the group Charles R. Longsworth, president of Hampshire College, stated that "the occupation of a college facility impedes and prevents normal activity on the part of those who wish to attend classes, study or meet other obligations as members of the college."

While deeply regretting the student action, he and other members of the administrative staff are currently attempting to seek ways to discuss the issues raised by the group and to open the building for the use of all the Hampshire community.

In a statement issued by the Third World Organization this morning the students said they "see as crucial to ourselves and to the institution as a whole that Hampshire Community not represent the world view of one limited socio-economic level, one race, one cultural background."

To this end, the students proposed that by 1973 some 25 per cent of the student body be composed of Third World peoples. They also asked by 1975 that 50 per cent of the student body be on financial aid by 1975.

Based on a student body of 2,000 and a year round operation, this would mean 500 Third World students at Hampshire 1,000 students on financial aid, and $2 million for financial aid, which is almost $1.2 million more than is currently projected.

Students in front of the science-administration building stressed that their action did not represent a "take-over" but rather was a "day off" to give the administration an opportunity to study their proposals.

However, it was a mandatory "day off". Only those who had to pick up something in the building were allowed to enter.

The students charged the administration to adequately respond to their proposals.

News Analysis

N. Vietnamese Optomistic

(AP) — The North Vietnamese are sounding and acting as if they had already achieved a major objective of their offensive: to kill Vietnamization in the South. They seem to be urging the Communist world, and particularly the Soviet Union, not to do anything that might get in their way.

As the Southern defenders were abandoning Quang Tri, Hanoi came within an ace of finally admitting that its regular troops were in the South and intended to continue operating there. Hanoi has never admitted that outright.

The North Vietnamese say that the demilitarized zone established in 1964 upon the division of Vietnam is not a border and there is no border. Official Hanoi statements refer to North and South as "two zones of our country."

Hue is a logical target for the northerners. Capture of the old imperial capital would be of great psychological importance and could strengthen the Viet Cong's claims to legitimacy and its position in any peace negotiations.

The U.S. Vietnamization program made South Vietnam's self-reliance the name of the game. If it was to work, the Southerners had to show that they could hold on to what they had.

The offensive appears to have given the North a great deal of momentum upon which it seeks to capitalize as quickly as possible, but it wants all the help, material and moral, that it can get. Quite possibly, Hanoi fears what could happen if and when President Nixon completes his talks in Moscow.

"The U.S. imperialists have resorted to vile maneuvers in the hope of separating the Vietnamese people from other socialist peoples, but the U.S. imperialists have failed bitterly," said Hanoi's official newspaper Nhan Dnan recently.

"Comrade leaders of Socialist countries have pointed out many times that supporting and helping Vietnam is a matter of principle and a noble international duty," it said. "The peoples of Socialist countries have many times clearly manifested their determination to support and help the Vietnamese people fight the U.S. aggressors until total victory."

A reunification committee of the North's National Assembly called on fraternal countries to "more powerfully support and assist the Vietnamese people's resistance against the U.S. aggressors."

All this could be read as a reminder to the Soviet Union of its obligation, three weeks before the Nixon journey.

Ford On The Atom

By ROBERT TOUAKE

Last night the Coalition for Environmental Quality (C.E.Q.) presented Dan Ford, currently technical interrogator at the Atomic Engery Safety Hearings in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Ford discussed the reliability of the Emergency Core Cooling System (ECCS), a water supply with pumps and pipes, which is designed to cool nuclear power plants in the event the normal cooling system fails.

In pressurized water reactors fueled by enriched uranium, fission splits atoms which release energy in the form of heat according to Ford. The heat is absorbed by steam and circulated around the reactor's radioactive core. The steam, expanded by the heat, is then generated into electricity.

If there is a rupture in the steam system, the heat around the reactor core could cause the reactor, which contains as much as 40,000 individual rods of uranium to melt and fuse Ford said. This excess heat could rupture the metal surrounding the nuclear reactor and cause severe consequences.

The cooling system is made to prevent such an occurrence from happening, by flooding an overheated reactor with cool water to allow sufficient time for it to be shut down.

Dan Ford in association with a group called the Union of Concerned Scientists has been examining nuclear reactor safety standards during the past year. He mentioned available information indicates the uncertainty involving the emergency cooling system cannot be dismissed.

Mr. Ford explained that the Union of Concerned Scientists utilizes Atomic Engery Commission (A.E.C.) documents and personnel within the A.E.C., for obtaining information. From these two sources of information, Ford said the investigating group learned all the factors concerning ECCS are not known and tests conducted have little or no bearing to reactors now being built. He commented that at the onset of the investigation of the Atomic Energy Safety Hearings the investigators received minimal help from the A.E.C.

Ford explained the A.E.C. withheld information until prodded by the threat of court action. However, according to Ford, once information was given, it was found that many A.E.C. personnel have uncertainty toward the Emergency Core Cooling System of nuclear power plants.

Debate On ROTC Issue

By MDC STAFF

The future of ROTC on the UMass campus has developed into one of the most controversial issues in the last two years.

Tonight, WMUA's "Focus" in a special presentation at 9 p.m. will host a debate between two Vietnam veterans, who are in favor of keeping ROTC on campus, and two representatives from the Center for Social Change, who are in favor of removing ROTC.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski said the ROTC question has emerged as "one of the most important issues of the strike called over a week ago."

Bill Staton, who will be speaking in favor of ROTC, said in an earlier interview that the removal of ROTC from campus is only a "token measure since it does not deal with the real issues at hand."

Asked why students are trying to push ROTC off campus, Staton replied, "A lot of kids need immediate gratification for the action they take.

"I don't agree with the idea of ROTC, but we don't have the right to infringe on the rights of others," added Staton.

The Center for Social Change has demanded the elimination of ROTC from UMass with alternate scholarship funding for cadets so they can continue their education.

The Center has stated that the ROTC program does not have a "liberalizing effect on the military and that it would be unrealistic to fear that the national defense will be seriously affected" by the removal of ROTC from campus.

On the question of the abolition of the program infringing on the rights of people taking ROTC courses, the Center stated, "Just because some men might want to study military science gives them no right to demand that the University set up, accredit, and implement a program toward that end."

Tonight's live program will also broadcast some early results of Presidential primaries being held today in Ohio, Indiana, Alabama and the District of Columbia, said Mosakowski.

S.Vietnamese Abandon Quang Tri

South Vietnamese marine carries dead comrade killed during fighting along Route 1, seven miles south of Quang Tri Sunday. Marines are trying to reopen road to provincial capital city of Quang Tri to relieve units there under North Vietnamese siege. (AP)

SAIGON (AP) — The South Vietnamese abandoned Quang Tri on Monday, giving the Communist command control of a broad strip of strategic territory just below the demilitarized zone and a springboard for attacks deep into the South-possibly against Hue.

The Quang Tri loss, Hanoi's first major triumph in the 33-day-old offensive, was accompanied by these developments in other parts of South Vietnam:

—A large area along the central coast, with a population of 200,00 and an important rice crop, fell to enemy control.

—The North Vietnamese increased pressure on the provincial capital of An Loc, 60 miles north of Saigon.

—Saigonese began to feel their first twitches of war nerves in the offensive as some officials predicted possible rocket attacks on the capital itself.

Quang Tri became the first South Vietnamese provincial capital to fall in the offensive that began March 30 with a North Vietnamese stab across the demilitarized zone.

Allied officials believe the Communitst command seeks to take over the two northernmost provinces of South Vietnam to give Hanoi and the Viet Cong bargaining power at the peace talks in Paris.

Several thousand South Vietnamese troops were trying to battle their way south from Quang Tri, capital of the province of the same name, late Monday after efforts to defend the city were officially abandoned.

Field reports aid at least 20 American field advisers were with them, having volunteered to stay with their units as 80 other Americans and 49 South Vietnamese were extracted in a daring helicopter rescue operation.

A U.S. bomber, flying with the helicopters to suppress ground fire, and a forward observer plane were shot down during the rescue. The jet pilot was picked up; the fate of the second was unknown.

The loss of its northermost provincial capital was the most stunning setback yet for South Vietnam in the North Vietnames offensive. The enemy now has seized control of all territory up to 27 miles south of the demilitarized zone.

The loss of Quang Tri immediately increased the threat to Hue, the former imperial capital 32 miles farther south. Like Quang Tri, Hue is believed to be marked as a primary target of Hanoi's offensive.

The northernmost point of government control after Quang Tri's abandonment was a marine position on Highway 1, eight miles south of that city and 24 miles north of Hue.

Associated Press correspondent Holger Jensen reported from Hue that the first of the Quang Tri defenders had reached the line after fighting past North Vietnamese forces controlling the sandy coastal dunes area south of the abandoned city.

"We have given up plans to defend Quang Tri," Brig. Gen. Thomas Bowen, senior U.S. adviser in the northernmost 1st military region, said in disclosing the city's abandonment. He added that the troops left in the area would be "working their way out as best they can."

On the central coast, the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong extended their control over 200,000 people in the northern part of Binh Dinh Province and its rich rice crop, believed to be enough to feed the enemy troops for a year. This developed with the fall of Tam Quan. The only remaining government stronghold in the area is Landing Zone English, a regimental headquarters.

Elsewhere, heavy fighting occurred again on Highway 13 north of Saigon, where South Vietnamese troops are trying to break the 3-1/2 week seige of An Loc and reopen the highway.

Field reports said an estimated 140 enemy were killed in the new fighting. South Vietnamese losses were put at 14 killed and 58 wounded.

A general quiet prevailed in the central highlands, where another major battle for a provincial capital, Kontum, is expected to erupt at any time.

In Brief...

Brown Seeks Democratic Donations

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A 38-year-old millionaire who is backing a nationwide telethon to try to bail out the debt-ridden Democratic party is convinced that participation by the average voter is the only way to loosen the hold of special interest groups and big business on government.

"That's what's wrong in government," John Y. Brown, Jr., board chairman of Kentucky Fried Chicken, said Monday. "The fact that the business interests and wealth of the country have been so involved in financing government...All this boils down to government by compromise, and what we need is leadership."

Federal Housing Program Attacked

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Senate subcommittee was confronted Monday with the anger of low-income black and white inner-city homeowners who said their neighborhoods are being ruined by federal housing programs. They want the programs saved but drastically reshaped.

Accompanied by the cheers, clapping and interjections of 100 of their supporters, representatives of the multi-racial National People's Caucus poured out their frustration with monopoly subcommittee.

Boxing Bill

BOSTON (AP) — The Senate gave initial approval Monday to a bill requiring boxing promoters to pay each participant in professional matches a minimum of $25 times the number of rounds they fight.

Sen. John F. Parker of Taunton, the Senate Republican leader argued against the bill saying, "There'll be a lot of waltzing if this goes through."

He said there "would be an opportunity for collusion" if fighters are paid by the round.

The measure advanced on a voice vote.

FBI Probes Sex Lives

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI "happily prepared secret memos" about the sex lives of public figures for Lyndon B. Johnson's presidential bedtime reading, columnist Jack Anderson testified Monday.

Testifying under oath at a House Government Information subcommittee hearing into executive branch secrecy practices, Anderson said he has seen FBI sex reports.

During secret probes of prominent Americans, Anderson said, "their sex lives, drinking habits and personal affairs have come under FBI scrutiny, although the FBI has no jurisdiction nor justification for this kind of snooping.

"A love affair, no matter how sordid, is no business of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Yet FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover has demonstrated an intense interest in who is sleeping with whom in Washington," Anderson said.

"President Johnson was one White House occupant who had a fine appreciation for stories about the extracurricular love lives of public figures," the colmunist said. "Hoover happily prepared secret memos, loaded with intimate details about the personal affairs of the high and mighty, for the President's bedtime reading."

Johnson and the FBI had no comment on Andersons' testimony.

At the hearing Anderson mentioned no names of those investiaged. When contacted by newsmen, Anderson said he had seen such a report on the Rev. Martin Luther King, slain civil-rights leader.

Anderson said Hoover signed the reports, "and my White House sources told me the President used to enjoy reading them." But Anderson said they are not furnished to the White House now because President Nixon is not interested in reading them.

Anderson urged an end to "massive overclassification," and said there should be a law to declassify automatically all documents after two years.

He added:

"The executive branch should be required to explain and to justify any secrets it wished to continue beyond two years. The final decision should be made by a national security commission, with representatives from Congress, the executive, the press and the public."

Crucial Ohio Primary Today

Sens. Hubert H. Humphrey and George S. McGovern roamed their Ohio campaign battleground Monday, hunting votes on the eve of a primary election likely to install one of them as the man to beat in the Democratic presedential contest.

Ohio offered the main event on a card of four Tuesday presidential primaries in states that will cast a total of 281 nominating votes at the Democratic National Convention.

The Ohio share is 153 delegate votes. McGovern and Humphrey were the chief contenders there, colliding headon after the separate victories that knocked Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine out of active contention in the primaries.

Humphrey claimed a boost because of Muskie's Ohio dropout, but McGovern said he saw a chance of scoring an upset there and capturing a majority of the delegates.

While he concentrated on Ohio and McGovern, Humphrey also was facing Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace Tuesday in next-door Indiana, where a total of 76 convention votes are at stake.

As in Ohio, Muskie remains on the Indiana ballot despite his campaign dropout.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington campaigned in Ohio, too, sniping at both McGovern and Humphrey. Jackson called McGovern a leftwinger, and accused Humphrey of sidestepping issues in an effort to be everyone's friend.

Wallace also was seeking to defend his political base in Tuesday's Alabama primary, which will elect 29 members of the 37-vote delegation. Home-state political foes challenged the governor as he sought to capture at least a majority of the elected delegates.

Democrats in the District of Columbia, which will have 15 convention votes, also choose delegates in a Tuesday primary. The competition there was between Walter E. Fauntroy, the District delegate to Congress, running as a favorite son, and a slate of uncommitted delegates.

Ohio has no presidential preference primary, but the names of the candidates appear above their slates of delegates, and the contest was clear.

In Ohio, about 2.4 million people were eligible to vote, and a heavy turnout was forecast. The Democrats will choose 38 convention delegates on a statewide basis, the rest in congressional districts.

Delegate slates are on the ballot for Humphrey, McGovern, Muckie, Jackson and former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy.

The polls open at 6:30 a.m. EDT Tuesday for 2 hours of balloting.

In Indiana 19 delegates will be elected at large, the rest of the 76 on a district basis. The Indiana polls open at 7 a.m. EDT, close at 7 p.m. About 1.2 million voters were expected to cast ballots.

In Alabama, Democrats elect delegates in 29 specially created districts, with the governor's supporters running in 25 of them. Anti-Wallace Democrats were running uncommitted delegates in 17 districts.

Offensive Creates 350,000 Refugees

SAIGON (AP)-More than 350,000 refugees are on the roads of South Vietnam, seeking escape from the thunderous fighting in the northern provinces and central highlands.

American advisers in Saigon reported nearly a quarter of a million refugees are on the move trying to get to Hue and then to Da Nang from Quang Tri, the northernmost province capital abandoned Monday by South Vietnamese troops.

About 5,000 have boarded boats at Tam My, neary Hue, to get to Da Nang by sea.

In coastal Binh Dinh, the nation's most populous province, welfare officials said there "has been so much fighting the people don't know which way to run." They estimated the flow of refugees on foot, by truck, on rickety buses and motor bikes at 35,000, mostly from An Nhn and Binh Khe.

Perhaps another 37,000 out of Hoai An, now in enemy hands, had not made it so far to Qui Nhon.

For the first time in more than two weeks, a rice drop was made on An Loc, the embattled provincial capital in the rubber plantation country 60 miles north of Saigon.

"But," said one social worker, "we don't expect there'll be much of a refugee problem to worry about by the end of the week. The city has taken a fearful artillery pounding."

War victims trying to flee the enemy columns moving on the central highlands capital of Kontum from three directions were bottled up along Highway 14 by sporadic action in the Pleiku Pass, leading to Pleiku City.

A welfare worker just back from Kontum reported a trickle of families, carrying everything they had on their backs, were braving the pass, almost oblivious of the sniper fire and whoosh of mortar rounds.

With all of the northern part of Binh Dinh Province and its recently harvested rice crop in enemy hands, welfare workers were beginning to worry about the availability of food supplies in the coastal areas to the south.

The roads were still open in government-held areas for trucking in food and the Vietnamese air force has flown some rice in to temporary refugee settlements and stopoff points along the route to Qui Nhon.

The renewed fighting in the Mekong Delta in Chuong Thien Province brought the first big wave of refugees to the Saigon area. About 5,000 were housed in military a military base at Phu Cuong, 15 miles north of the city.

Hue, a city already so clogged with refugees that its university had to suspend classes to make room for families, suddenly became a huge revolving door, with people moving into the city from the fighting in Quang Tri, and large segments of its own population moving out toward Da Nang to escape the enemy advance.

Boyle's Election Overturned

WASHINGTON (AP) — A U.S. District Court judge Monday overturned the 1969 election of United Mine Workers President W.A. "Tony" Boyle.

Judge William Bryant agreed with the government's contention that the union used union money and facilities to conduct an irregularity-studded election weighted in Boyle's favor.

Bryant instructed the Justice Department to submit on May 8 an order detailing how a new election should be conducted under the supervision of the secretary of labor.

In a lengthy opinion following a six-month trial, Bryant wrote that in order to find for the union, "the court would be forced to swim upstream against the tide of evidence too strong to resist."

"The walls of justice are closing in on Tony Boyle," said Attorney Joseph Rauh one of the parties in the complex legal action.

There was no immediate comment from union officials.

While the judge's decision may be appealed, the effect of the District Court action cannot be halted by a stay.

In the bitter 1969 campaign, Boyle defeated an insurgent union faction led by presidential candidate Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski.

Yablonski, his wife and daughter were shot to death in their Pennsylvania home just three weeks after the election.

Two persons have pleaded guilty to the murders and two more have been convicted in the case. The investigation is continuing.

No estimate was available on when the new election would be called to choose the three top officers of the international union-the president, vice president and secretary-treasurer.

Judge Bryant held that the conduct of the election met the test of the law allowing a new vote when there are indications the outcome may have been influenced unlawfully.

The suit challenging the election was brought by the secretary of labor, the only official allowed to take a union election into court.

A favorable Supreme Court ruling allowed Mike Trbovich, Yablonski's campaign manager, to intervene in the suit to bolster the government's case. Trbovich was represented by Rauh.

The decision Monday was the latest in a series of legal problems for Boyle. On March 31, a federal District Court jury convicted him on each count of a 13-count indictment in which the government alleged that he illegally spent $49,250 in union-dues money on political campaign contributions.

Small Business Price Controls Lifted

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government Monday lifted pay and price controls from millions of small businesses and small governmental units.

It also tightened its grip on medium-size builders and hospitals, and concentrated more of its controls manpower on big businesses and big unions.

Director Donald Rumsfeld of the Cost of Living Council said the changes are designed to make controls work better by cutting red tape.

He said controls will stay in effect for the rest of the economy until they work, and declined to predict when they would be ended.

The council removed both pay and price controls generally from businesses and local governmental units with 60 or fewer employees.

However, unions and firms of whatever size in the health and construction industries remain subject to controls because their prices have risen far faster than others.

Also, rent controls remain in effect for landlords not exempted earlier.

The council earlier had removed controls from small retail firms and from workers earning less than $1.90 an hour.

All told, the council now has lifted price controls from a total of 6.5 million firms accounting for 28 per cent of the nation's sales dollars. Wage controls have been removed from 19 million workers making up 26 per cent of all workers drawing paychecks.

Pay controls also are gone from 67,500 small counties and towns with a total 378,000 employees, which is 83 per cent of all local governments but only 7 per cent of all local government workers.

Nixon Talks Secretly To Soviets

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House said Monday that President Nixon has had recent secret exchanges with Soviet Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev which Nixon believes have substantially increased the possibility of a U.S.-Soviet missile-curb agreement.

Nixon has ordered Ambassador Gerard C. Smith, top U.S. negotiator at the U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation talks, to return to the Helsinki negotiations with new instructions.

The President was reported confident that the Soviet envoy to the SALT parley, Vladimir Semenov, also will receive from his government new instructions which "can lead to an agreement which is mutually acceptable to both sides."

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler announced this following a one-hour Nixon session with Smith and top administration diplomatic, military and intelligence officers.

Smith headed back to Helsinki Monday night, having arrived for Washington consultations last Wednesday.

Ziegler did not go into any details of the prospective U.S.-Soviet accord or say whether it would be reached before, during or after Nixon's May 22-29 visit to the Soviet Union.

The presidential spokesman said that a major advance toward a strategic-arms-limitation agreement was scored in the Nixon-Brezhnev exchanges. They were carried on mainly through written messages, supplementing Henry A. Kissinger's secret talks with the Soviet leader in Moscow April 20-24.

Ziegler said this "relates to a broadening of the scope of an offensive freeze."

These words left an implication that Moscow and Washington may be including submarine missiles as part of an initial SALT agreement.

It has already been agreed in principle that a SALT accord would include both defensive and offensive strategic weapons.

The SALT negotiators have worked out proposal limitations to cover antiballistic missiles--ABMs-and land-based intercontinental ballistic missiles of both sides. But whether underwater missiles would be included has been one of the major issues in the recent negotiating rounds.

The White House disclosure of Nixon-Brezhnev secret exchanges concerning the SALT issue followed other recent disclosures of Nixon communications with the Soviet chief on other issues, too. Kissinger ranged over the strategic arms matter during his Moscow discussions, which also dealth with Vietnam.

Ziegler said, however, that "we have never associated the negotiations in Helsinki with what happens in Vietnam."

Pentagon Papers Draw Pulitzer Prize

NEW YORK (AP) — After unprecedented debate, trustees of Columbia University awarded the 1972 Pulitzer prizes Monday, including a public service award to the New York Times for its publication of the Pentagon papers.

"Had the selections been those of the trustees alone, certain of the recipients would not have been chosen," the trustees said in an extra-ordinary covering letter accompanying the announcement of awards.

The trustees expressed "deep reservations about the timeliness and suitability of certain of the journalism awards."

The statement did not specify which recipients were referred to.

The national reporting award went to columnist Jack Anderson for his reporting American secret papers in the American decision-making during the Indian-Pakistani war of 1971, which aroused almost as much controversy as the Pentagon papers' publication.

For the first time since 1968, there was no Pulitzer award for drama this year.

The fiction prize went to "Angle of Repose," by Wallace E. Stegner, a professor of English at Stanford University, one of two faculty members of that West Coast school winning arts awards.

The Pulitzer for distinguished biography was awarded to Joseph P. Lash for his "Eleanor and Franklin." He was a friend of the late first lady, Eleanor Roosevelt.

"Stilwell and the American Experience in China," won Barbara Tuchman her second Pulitzer prize for general non-fiction. She won the award in that category also in 1963 for "The Guns of August."

The history prize was awarded Carl N. Degler for "Neither Black nor White." His is also a Stanford University professor in the history department. The book examines slavery in the United States.

James Wright, a professor of English at Hunter College of New York City won the poetry prize with his "Collected Poems."

International Program-'Dignity Of Man'

By LAURA DUBOWSKI

A "good opportunity to focus on dignity, humanity, and the good of man throughout the world," is what Dick Smith says of his international program, "Dignity of Man."

"Dignity of Man" is the result of six years work and 350,000 miles of travel. Mr. Smith, the head of the movement, tells of how he and his wife, left Switzerland in a beat-up old Volkswagen with $250. They traveled thousands of miles taking slides and movies--venturing as far as Afghanistan.

Many adventures befell them, including being the victims of thieves and having all their money stolen in India; and being the first people ever, allowed to take movies of the child goddess of Kumari, Nepal--an eight-year-old girl who only comes out of her palace once a year.

Why does Dick Smith do all this--traveling all over the world, promoting his program? He believes there is more good, humanity, and compassion in the world than evil, hate and war. "Dignity of Man" provides an opportunity throughout the world for many people with many talents to exchange ideas, utilizing slides, movies, and pictures on political, social, philosophical realms. This, Smith believes, gives the world's youth the feeling that somebody is listening to them.

"Dignity of Man" adheres to the policy that, there is good in the world--due to man's own dignity, despite all the violence, war, and poverty, one hears constantly in the news. In fact, this is one of Smith's goals--to have people believe in their own human dignity, rather than become discouraged by all the adverse current events that are reported.

However, Mr. Smith firmly states that "Dignity of Man" does not ignore problems, rather it places people before progress. It is people oriented with the ideal that people can find the sources for the 'change that needs to be made.'

There will be an opportunity for all interested to judge for themselves "Dignity of Man". Dick Smith will present his program at the Campus Center Auditorium, Thursday night at 7:00 and 9:15. The presentation consists of a slide-show set to modern music.

Each program will have 2 movies, one of which is about Afghasnistan, and the other about either Nepal or Mexico. Mr. Smith points out that the films are neither travelogues, or movies 'seen through the eyes of Americans'. Instead they are by the people of these countries themselves.

In addition, there will be cultural entertainment from UMass students and people in the Amherst area. APO is sponsoring the program. Donations are $1.00, proceeds go to various children's funds.

Soviets Consider Borrowing From U.S. Banks

NEW YORK (AP) — The Soviet Union is considering borrowing from U.S. banks to buy machinery in the United States, banking circles said Monday.

The loans, if made, would mark a major change in financial policy for both the banks and the Soviet government. In the past, the Russians have sold gold as necessary to pay for imports of grain from Canada.

"But they are learning how to use their finances," one banker from outside New York commented. "By buying machinery on borrowed money, they don't have to pay back the money until the machinery is paying off by increased production."

Bankers said that the first approaches to the Russians were made by some U.S. banks and that others, including some of the major New York ones, now are interested in the possibility. An interest rate of the U.S. prime rate plus 3/4 of 1 per cent has been discussed, although the Russians have objected to this level.

The U.S. prime rate is the interest charged a banks best customers. A rate of 3/4 of one per cent above the prime was described by one banker as "very good rate indeed". The American prime now is 5-1/4 per cent, so on the basis of that, the Russians would be paying 6 per cent. This is quite high for a government loan.

So far as could be learned, no loan has been finally agreed upon. There was no indication of how much money might be involved, but a single bank is known to be talking about $4.5 million dollars.

Since the money would remain in this country to be paid to machine builders, the loans would have no effect on the U.S. balance of payments at once. Later, of course, as the loan is paid, it would help this balance.

Banker involved in the negotiations said the Russians badly need new machinery for the extractive industries-mines, quarries and oil fields.

Swedish Marriage Rate Drops; Unwed Mother Rate Increases

STOCKHOLM (AP) - With many young Swedes shunning marriage, nearly a fifth of Sweden's babies are arriving out of wedlock.

A "unique" decline in Swedish marriages is pinpointed by Erland Hofsten, head of the state statistical bureau. Nothing like it is happening elsewhere in Europe, he says.

From a high point of 61,101 marriages in 1966, the number tumbled to 39,000 last year-a 35 per cent nosedive within five year and the lowest figures in more than a century.

Hofsten says the decrease in weddings is most pronounced and significant at the ages when marriage normally is most usual-23-24 for women and 25-26 for men.

Illegitimacy rose from 10 per cent of all births in 1960 to 18 per cent in 1970, a record figure.

Why the decline in marriages? For lack of a clear-cut answer a lot of theories are put about.

In general, more and more couples are deciding simply to live together.

"Our love is so strong there's no need for a ring or a marriage certificate," says one couple.

Hofsten opined that the change in social customs "could more easly win ground in Sweden because free associations and illegitimate children have always been accepted in a manner which isn't usual in other countries.

Ingrid Sundberg, a moderate party member of parliament active in family affairs, found the development disturbing. "Children need security," she observed.

Hofsten saw the fact that women's economic liberation has advanced farther in Sweden than many other countries as an element in the pattern.

A gradual weakening in Christian belief and religio is devotion is being cited among church leaders.

A state commission has been working almost three years on proposals to change family laws-possibly by making marriage simply a form of registration and by easing divorce.

Now every third marriage breaks up within 10 years. Divorces rose from 8,958 in 1960 to 12,238 in 1969. The most common grounds are adultery, alcoholism, a criminal conviction and mental disease.

Rogers Assails Business Protectionism

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of State William P. Rogers assailed protectionism at home and abroad Monday in a strongly worded defense of free trade as best for America and the world.

Speaking to business leaders at the annual U.S. Chamber of Commerce meeting, Rogers said:

"There are some Americans in the business community, in Congress and elsewhere who believe we should turn to protectionism to correct the current inequities in our trade and payments position.

"I profoundly disagree...in 'walling out' imports we would run the great risk of 'walling in' the very U.S. exports that we want to encourage....

"Today, no wingle country no matter how powerful, can succeed in a unilateral policy of beggaring its neighbors or its domestic adjustment problems.

"It could be disastrous to our national interests to abandon our commitment to a more open world in which our economy, above all others, has flourished."

Aides regarded Rogers's remarks as aimed in part at the Treasury and Commerce Departments, which are cooler toward the free-trade concept amid U.S. economic woes than are U.S. diplomats.

However, the secretary of State went out of his way to praise Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally, who has been accused by some foreigners of highhandedness in carrying out President Nixon's strong international economic measures.

UMass Orchestra To Perform

A variety of performing mediums and musical styles will mark the concert program of the UMass Symphony Orchestra Wednesday, May 10, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at the University.

Appearing with the Symphony Orchestra will be vocalists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass. All are members of the UMass music department faculty. The University Chorus, directed by Alan Harler, will also appear.

Miss Ornest has sung with several orchestras, including the New York and Rochester Philharmonics, and the Springfield and Pioneer Valley Symphonies. She has performed numerous opera roles and given several area recitals. Mr. Humphrey has performed with such groups as the Robert Shaw Chorale, the New York Pro Musica, the Cleveland, and Philadelphia Orchestras and UMass recital groups. Mr. d'Armand studied at Tanglewood under Boris Goldovsky and is a founder of the Paul Ulanovsky Foundation for Chamber Musicians. Mr. Harler, besides directing the University Chorus, directs the University's Women's Choir, Madrigal Singers, and Collegium Musicum.

The program will be: Francesco Manfredini's "Concerto for Two Trumpets, Strings, Clavicembalo, and Organ," featuring student soloists Robert Amato and Douglas Purcell; Benjamin Britten's "Simple Symphony for String Orchestra;" Igor Stravinsky's "Symphonies of Wind Instruments;" and J.S. Bach's "Cantata No. 130- Herr Gott, Dich Loben Alle Wir," featuring the chorus and solo vocalists.

Conducting the orchestra will be Ronald Steele, associate professor of music. Conductor Steele is a graduate of the University of Michigan and a former violinist for the U.S. Air Force Symphony Orchestra. He founded the UMass orchestra in 1963 as a 27-piece string emsemble, which has tripled in size, with members from UMass, and Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and area communities.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Demonstrators Vacate Cornell Building

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP)-Antiwar demonstrators ended a five-day occupation of an engineering library at Cornell University Monday, about the same time some of them were to appear in court to answer an order restraining their protest.

A university spokesman said 100 to 150 students left the Carpenter Hall library in early afternoon and paraded peacefully around the campus, stopping in fron of Day Hall, Cornell's administration building.

Maintenance men were making efforts to clean the library which had been under the demonstrators' control since last Wednesday.

The students had sought an end to defense-related work by university units, abolition of the campus ROTC program and pressure by Cornell's trustee investment committee on Gulf Oil Corp. to end the firm's operation in Portugal's African colonies.

Cornell President Dale R. Corson refused to negotiate with the demonstrators on the issues while they occupied the building, but he said a study committee would be established if the demonstration ended.

All About ROTC

By ARTHUR L. LUPIEN

Factual information about ROTC is needed, judging from the views expressed in the Collegian and heard in conversation. Presently, many of the opinions heard are based on half truths and misrepresentation of fact; some have no basis in fact whatsoever. Some students don't even know what the ROTC is. It is time to clear the air.

ROTC is the acronym for Reserve Officer Training Corps. Its purpose is to secure junior officers for the Reserve components of the Armed Forces. The ROTC program is currently operating in 294 public and private institutions of higher learning through mutual agreement with the Department of Defense. No school is required to continue the program and there is an active list of institutions desiring ROTC. Less than 20% of the schools having ROTC still require freshmen and sophomores to take the program. The Department of Defense requires no one to take it. Students are offered two options if they desire to join ROTC: they may elect it for four years, attending a 6 week summer camp between their junior and senior year, or they may enter the two year program, attending an additional 6 week summer camp between their sophomore and junior year. The Department of Defense offers scholarships of one to four years duration for those who apply and are accepted. This paragraph should serve to answer any general questions students may have about the program.

More specifically, funding the ROTC is a major issue on this campus. The only funds provided by the Department of Defense are those used specifically to operate the campus program. The University receives no "payoff" because it allows ROTC on campus. Army and Air Force scholarship students and advanced course cadets receive a $100.00 per month allowance; what many students don't realize is that cadets enlist in the Reserves in order to receive it. Cadets are not "paid" per se to take ROTC, and the accredited courses are open to any University student. Other Federal funds (construction, educational aid to institutions, student loans, fellowships, grants in aid, etc.), have absolutely no relationship with the ROTC program.

A second major issue is curriculum control. First and foremost, recognize that military officer education is a joint and mutual responsibility of the participating academic institutions and the respective military departments. The Department of Defense does not dictate curricula; the University is in complete control of the program. Specifically: the program is offered only under mutual contract; the Faculty Senate approves all courses offered for credit, and also approves credit for the courses; the Military Affairs sub-committee reviews all Air Force and Army manuals used to determine their suitability. Furthermore, all military instructors have advanced degrees from civilian institutions (UMaine, Iowa State, Our Lady of the Lake College, St. Michael's College, UMichigan, MIT, Tulane). The Service determines the basic educational prerequisites for receiving a commission. At the same time, the Services wish to recognize the role of the University in determining how these educational requirements can be met.

The question of academic credit now arises. As stated, all courses receiving academic credit are approved by the Faculty Senate on the same basis and criteria as applied to all courses University-wide. Credit is not granted for purely military operations such as drill, field problems, and summer camp. Nor has it even been granted.

There are many other questions of lesser importance than these that need straight answers. It is hoped that students who want to make a complete and fair evaluation about ROTC will not waste time with hearsay and third hand information. Ask the people who know.

Truth In Painkilling

WASHINGTON--The Federal Trade Commission has attacked the advertising claims of the nation's leading nonprescription painkillers. In a strongly worded complaint, the FTC accused the major drug companies of making misleading and false claims about the effectiveness of their products. The main thrust of the complaint is that while most of the painkillers work, the drug companies, through advertising, give the false impression that there is a "significant difference between the products."

My friend, Prof. Heinrich Applebaum, believes that the FTC has gone too far. While he is an advocate of truth in advertising, he feels the government could do more damage than good by making the drug companies go honest.

"What they have not taken into consideration is the psychological effect that painkilling advertising can have on a headache," Applebaum told me in his Headache Research Laboratory located at the end of the runway at National Airport.

"In my studies, I have discovered that people are dependent on outrageous claims for painkillers to rid themselves of headaches. Let me show you." Applebaum took two volunteers and made them stand next to a plane taking off.

"This is the fastest way we have of giving people headaches," he explained. After the plane took off, he said to one volunteer who was holding his head, "I am going to give you two aspirin." To the other volunteer he said, "I'm going to give two Bufferin which relieves pain 'twice as fast as aspirin.' Now tell me when your headache is gone."

The person who took the Bufferin said in three minutes, "My headache is gone." The person who took the aspirin waited six minutes and then said, "My headache is gone."

"You see," Applebaum beamed. "The psychological factor worked!"

"But how can you be sure?" I asked.

"Because the person who thought he had taken the Bufferin really took aspirin. And the person who believed he had taken aspirin was really on Bufferin."

"You're a sneaky guy, Professor," I said with great admiration.

"Now, watch this experiment." The professor took a schoolteacher and placed her on a school bus with 45 grammar schoolchildren. Her face became strained and irritable and she started to scream at the children.

"I don't know what's wrong with me," she cried.

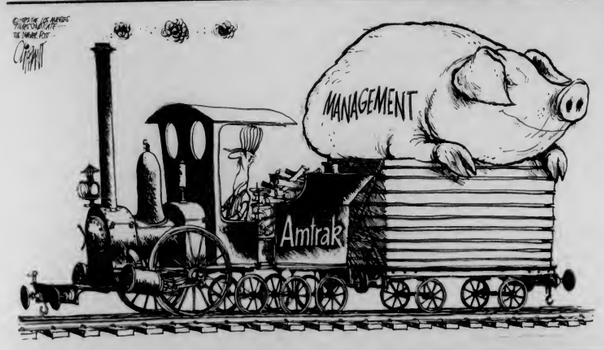
David Janssen, the actor, got on the bus and gave her two Excedrin tablets and a glass of water. "A hospital study," Janssen told the teacher, "has revealed that it takes more than twice as many aspirin tablets to give the same pain relief as two Excedrin."

In just two minutes the teacher was smiling and claiming all over the school bus seats and shouting, "I hope this trip never comes to an end!"

"Fantastic!" I exclaimed.

"Now, I'll show you another experiment." Applebaum had two of his lab assistants wheel a piano onto the runway. He then brought over a pianist whose fingers were wracked with arthritis. The pianist could not play a note. A man in a white coat came out and said, "Anacin starts relieving pain 22 seconds after it enters your bloodstream. That is why more doctors recommend Anacin than any other pain reliever." He gave the pianist two Anacin and a stopwatch. Exactly 22 seconds later the pianist started to hit the keys of the piano and played a Chopin sonata like it had never been played before.

Prof. Applebaum said, "If he hadn't known how long Anacin would take to work, that man could be sitting on his piano stool for the rest of the day wracked with pain."



"You've proved that psychology certainly plays its role, Professor," I said.

"As far as I'm concerned, advertising is the most important ingredient in a painkiller. In the past, the only thing that saved the people in this country was the knowledge that no matter how bad things got, they could always go down to the drugstore and get 'fast, fast relief.' Now the government even wants to take the fun out of having a headache."

Words Of Advice

To the Editor:

Although none of you know me, I feel like I know many of you by now. I came to your campus on Tuesday, April 18th, to participate in Marathon Week. I won't review the history of that, since it's well known to you all.

In spite of the Marathon cancellation, I decided to hang around to observe the dynamics of campus life during Strike Week. (Having flown from Minnesota on our college funds, I thought I should at least look around a bit before flying back.)

I stayed on campus until late Thursday. I had a positively great time of it, for which I thank in particular the Third World Caucus and the Strike Coordinating Committee. I couldn't really participate, since it was your campus community and therefore your thing. But I did watch and cheer under my breath every now and then. Institutions (and individuals) are tested best by being nudged just a wee bit past the "outer limits" foreseen and prepared for by them. You did that twice in one week, and I think you learned a lot about yourselves in the process. Congratulations.

Three words of advice, to which I think my $187 plane ticket entitles me:

* Keep your new chancellor, Bromery. At least up to late Thursday, when I left, he was beautiful. Mostly, I think, because he was really listening to you (as a number of you were listening to him).
* Erect a monument to Barbara Love, who showed patience and humanity on Wednesday night when it took the School of Education Council 45 minutes to vote to adjourn to allow Barbara and others to attend the meeting of the Third World Caucus. She and others at that meeting showed a sensitivity so genuine that it wasn't even noticed by a great many.

When looking for signs of institutional racism at UMass, don't overlook the Native American minority. They really don't like to be used as mascots or nicknames for sports teams. Even more directly, the "Braves" and "Squaws" labels on the Student Union lavatories were simply unbelievable to me. They shouldn't remain another 24 hours, so that no Native American has to walk trhough them even once.

Them's my thoughts, all $187 worth of them. Thanks again for a week that was far more educating than the one I had planned.

Seriously

To the Editor:

I feel that students should be informed about one outcome of the recent strike, which to this point has not been mentioned. As of Friday, April 21, 1972, all on-campus recruitment has been cancelled indefinitely. To the minority of students who fought to end military recruitment on campus: Congratulations! You have gone one step better and have succeeded in ending all on-campus recruitment. To the majority of students who are not against recruitment: Realize the seriousness of this situation!

The Career Planning and Placement Office in Whitmore, throughout the year, is contacted by various businesses and industries, government agencies, school systems, and summer employers who are interested in coming to UMass to interview potential job candidates. This service provides students with a convenient way of seeking employment, not only in this area but throughout the country. Recruitment is open to any employer who requests to interview students. With the end of on-campus recruitment, all employers who still decide to come to UMass must conduct the interviews in a motel off-campus. However, it is reasonable to assume that employers will decide to by-pass the University, feeling that students are against recruitment, and realizing that job candidates are abundant elsewhere.

Undergraduates do not realize the value of this service until they are faced with finding a job. Since seniors and graduate students, for the most part, have settled their future plans, there is the possibility that this situation will go unnoticed. If it does, students will be killing a valuable service, which will hurt no one but themselves. Don't let the minority speak for the majority! Don't let someone else tell you what jobs you can or cannot have! When the referendum comes up, Vote! but realize that recruitment on this campus does not only mean military recruitment.

Bested

To the Editor:

Upon recently reading of the Economic Dept. administration's decision to fire Prof. Mike Best, all I can do is cry with dismay and utter disgust. Deja Vu, I feel like I've been here before. Wasn't this issue settled last year? On one hand we have student opinion of Prof. Best. In the Fall 1971 Teacher Course Evaluation, he received almost all 8's and 9's out of a possible 10. In the Spring 1971 evaluation, he again received almost all 80's and 90's out of a possible 100. In scanning through the book, it was hard to find another teacher who could top those marks. On the other hand one has to look at the Economic Dept.'s constant harrassment of Prof. Best in attempting for the past two years to fire him because of his new and relevant method of teaching and his radical viewpoint. The old classical, traditionalist members of the department are attempting to form an establishment status quo and at the same time intimidate the new refreshing teachers like Mike Best. One can easily see a direct conflict between what the students want and what the department wants. One has to wonder at who and what the department is trying to serve. In this case, it certainly doesn't seem to be the students.

Having had Prof. Best for two courses, and being an Economics major, I can say with some degree of knowledge that Mike Best is one of the most refreshing teachers I have had here, and it was a pleasure to have had the opportunity to take those courses. Instead of firing Prof. Best, I think they should seriously consider hiring more teachers like him.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

And while we're on the subject of segregation, let's talk about the Blue Wall's absurd "Over 20" policy. Wouldn't it be a lot easier to ask for I.D.s at the bar? The management can't begin to understand what it's like to dance on a segregated dance floor.

SOS Wants You

To the Editor:

Students Offering Support is an organization of concerned students. We are concerned about the plight of the mentally retarded in Massachusetts, particularly those institutionalized at Belchertown State School. We are offering our support to a group of 28 parents and friends of residents at the Belchertown State School, who are currently sponsoring a suit in Federal Court against the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health for the inhumane treatment of the residents of that school. It may be interesting to note that on the issue of the Constitutional Rights of residents the attorney for the DMH stated:

"A CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO TREATMENT CANNOT BE PREDICATED UPON A SYSTEM OF VOLUNTARY ADMISSIONS."

In other words when a person enters a state institution for the retarded that person no longer has any Constitutional Rights. This is what we are fighting!

To bring this fight to a successful conclusion we need money. Next weekend the long awaited Spring Concert will take place. SOS will be running the refreshment concessions and all profits will go to support the court case. What we need is people, people to pour and peddle Coke, people to seel hot dogs and hamburgers, and people to solicit donations.

Help SOS help the retarded! Please come to our meeting Tuesday, May 2nd at 10:00 PM in Room 162 in the Campus Center.

Academic Freedom - ?

To the Editor:

Having read Joe Renan's article in the Collegian on Friday, I would like to discuss the case of Professor Michael Best vs. the Economics Dept., in light of my own experience with academic hiring-firing policies, and my understanding of the case against Professor Best.

Having taught at two liberal arts colleges in the Midwest, I understand as well as anyone the political nature of many instances of firing on the basis of incompetence. Incompetence is a tricky word, for though we all understand fairly well what is meant by incompetence, by itself it is meaningless. Incompetence implies some standards of competence, standards which are agreed as necessary to perform a particular task. As a teacher of Economics what does this mean, in the case of Michael Best, what does incompetence actually mean?

Does it mean that he is a poor teacher, unable to relate to his students, or to stimulate them to thought? If so it would be a telling criticism, for we would all agree that teaching ability is related to being a Professor of Economics. Judging by the responses of students in evaluating and discussing Prof. Best's courses, it would seem there are no grounds for incompetence here. Those who know, or who have heard of Mike Best, know him to be a stimulating and exciting classroom personality, who knows his subject matter and relates it effectively.

Perhaps incompetence is defined in terms of not publishing; in this publish or peril university environment it might well be. But I understand that Prof. Best has been as active as most of his colleagues along these lines, attempting to publish a number of articles and succeeding occasionally. No grounds for incompetence here, it would seem.

So just what could it be that would lead his learned colleagues in the Economics Dept. to refuse to renew his contract by such an overwhelming vote (5 to 0), such unanimity boggles the mind. Given his good student evaluations and his publishing efforts, as well as his taking part in numerous 5-College activities (such as teaching courses at other 5-College schools other than only at UMass), as well as his openness to student contacts, and his readiness to discuss the important economic issues of the day with students both in and out of the classroom, just wherein does his incompetence lie?

To understand this charge of incompetence, we must understand the nature of the Economics Dept. at UMass and what they seem to mean by an Economist, for what seems to be going on is that Prof. Best though recognized as being bright, is not recognized as an Economist. By an Economist they seem to mean a man who dabbles in a particular conception of Economics which limits the subject to the study of capitalist-market economics, discussions of supply and demand, monetray policy, and other such myths. In this view, an economist must not discuss such things as monopoly capitalism, structural deficiencies in the economic system, or corporate power--he should discuss mixed economies (market- oligopoly), corporate conscience, and how best to juggle the variables so as to bring about the best balance between full employment (considered to be around 4% unemployment) and inflation (figured at around 3% per year, which means prices double every twenty or so years), and wherein everybody and everything becomes just another statistic. Wherein the incompetence of Prof. Best lies then, is in his refusal to be a purveyor of the myths of economics, to play his role in this pseudo-scientific charade as the "mechanic of the economy".

Now at this point the question of academic freedom becomes paramount. Can we allow one partuiar department of economics, at one particular university to define what a subject matter includes and to exclude by fiat, other aspects of the subject which have as valid a claim to the name Economics as does the pseudo-scientific version. Economics began as the study of Political Economy, with concepts and theories relating the economic to the political and social. Prof. Best is in the best tradition of Economics, the tradition of Adam Smith, Karl Marx, and John Galbraith, in taking a political and social overview of economic matters. The dismissal of Prof. Best would be a denial of academic freedom to Mike Best, and is an important issue on these grounds alone. Furthermore, it would be a grievous loss to the UMass student body, who would thereafter be subjected to only the narrowest version of Economics.

Having run afoul of entrenched interests and narrow-minded faculty in my own dismissal from a college position, I fully understand the political and moral issues involved in the Mike Best case--Prof. Best is being dismissed for expressing viewpoints which diverge from the mainstream of the UMass Dept. of Economics. If diversity of viewpoint is not allowed in the University setting, then it shall soon disappear totally from our society.

Chesnut And King To Present Concerts

Trumpeter Walter Chesnut and organist John King, faculty members of the UMass music department, will present the next concert in the UMass Faculty Recital Series, Wednesday, at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium at UMass.

Dr. Chesnut, who received his bachelor's and master's degrees in music from the University of Michigan, has been an instructor of trumpet at UMass since 1967. A member of the UMass Faculty Brass Trio, he plays first trumpet with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra, and is a former member of seven symphony orchestras.

Assisting them will be Dorothy Ornest on piano, Charles Lehrer and Laurie Appleby on oboes, Joanne Tanner and Heidi Straube on flutes, and Peter Tanner on percussion.

The program will include Giambattista Martini's "Toccata;" Mozart's "Fantasia in F minor for a Mechancal Organ;" Andre alson's offertory "Vive le Roi des Parisiennes;" Georg Philipp Telemann's "Overture in D Major;" Ernst Krenek's "Sonata for Organ (1941);" Thomas Augustine Arne's "Introduction, Sicilliano, and Allegro;" and three movements of Johann Nepomuk Hummel's "Concerto."

The performance is open to the public, without charge.

Asian Studies To Expand

The Asian Studies Program announces the appointments of two new faculty members for the fall semester:

Mr. Chisato Kitagawa, who will teach courses in Japanese language and linguistics, received his Ph.-D. from the University of Michigan in linguistics and for the past two years has been teaching Japanese at the University of Michigan.

Mr. Richard Lyn,, who will teach courses in Chinese language, Chinese poetry, and Chinese poetry in translation (the latter will be taught under the Comparative Literature Department), received hisPh.D. from Stanford University and for the past three years has been teaching Chinese literature at the University of Auckland, New Zealand.

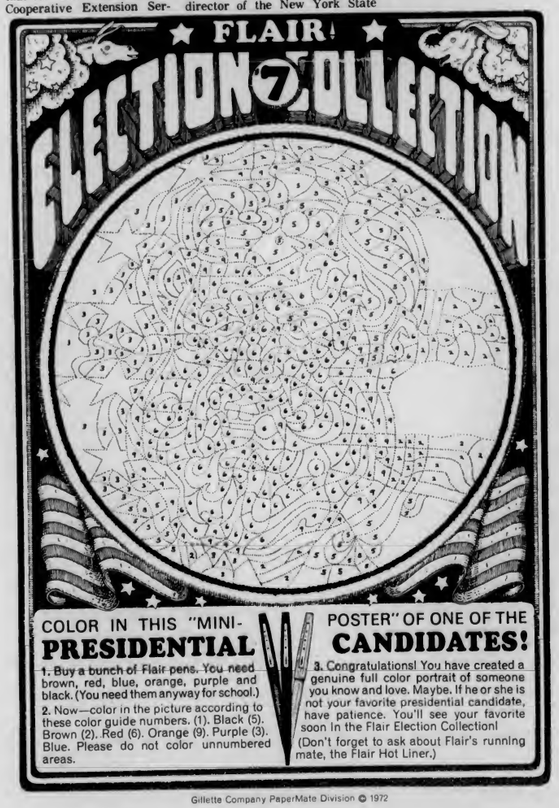
Starting in the fall the Asian Studies Program will be able to offer a three-year sequence in Chinese (Mandarin), a three-year sequence in Japanese, a three-semester sequence in classical Chinese, and one semester of classical Chinese poetry (The third years of both the Chinese and Japanese sequences will actually be courses in modern literature). Courses will be offered in various aspects of Chinese and Japanese linguistics as well as in Chinese bibliography. Another new course for the fall will be Asian Studies 230, "Japanese Art and Culture". In addition there will be several classes on Chinese and Japanese literature in translation taught under the Comparative Literature Department. Furthermore, there are nearly 40 courses dealing with East, South and Southeast Asia in the Departments of Anthropology, Art, Geography, History, Political Science, and Sociology, and a total of nearly 100 courses being offered among the Five Colleges. For more information about the various courses see the COURSE DESCRIPTION: FALL 1972 and the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST.

Proposals are being submitted for the establishment of undergraduate (B.A.) majors in Chinese and Japanese language and literature. Although it will take several months before the proposal are officially approved, students wishing information about the majors may contact Mr. William Naff (545-0886) and Mr. Yoshio Ozawa (545-0728) for the Japanese major, and Mr. Shou-hsin Teng (545-0880), Mr. Lucien Miller (545-0882), and Mr. Alvin Cohen (545-0880) for the Chinese major, or come to the Asian Studies Program office in 804 Thompson Hall (545-0886).

Although there is no major in "Asian Studies" as such, a proposal has already been submitted for the establishment of an "Asian Studies Certificate" to supplement B.A. majors in established disciplines. Under this arrangement, a student would follow an ordinary B.A. program (such as in Anthropology, History, etc.) but would include within his or her program twenty-one credits worth of courses from the ASIAN STUDIES COURSE LIST plus a senior Asian Studies "topics-seminar". The Asian Studies Certificate would thus supplement a B.A. degree by giving a student recognition for a substantial amount of interdisciplinary work in the general field of Asian Studies. This certificate program is open to all students. For information about the program, students may contact Mr. Lucien Miller (545-0882) or come to the Asian Studies Program office in 804 Thompson Hall (545-0886).

Counseling sessions in regard to the Chinese and Japanese majors, the Asian Studies Certificate, or any of the relevant courses may be set up by contacting the Asian Studies Program office. All inquiries are welcome.

Wood To Address Extension Service



UMass President Robert Wood will address the opening session of this year's Cooperative Extension Service Conference Tuesday, May 2, at the Northfield Inn.

Dr. Wood will speak on "The Public Service Mission of the University" at the 1:15 p.m. opening session. At the same session, Dr. A.A. Spielman, director of extension and dean of the UMass College of Agriculture, will talk on "The Contribution of the Cooperative Extension Service." J. Richard Beattie, extension service associate director, will preside.

The three-day conference will bring extension personnel from all counties of the Commonwealth to Northfield for three days of workshops, panels and other events.

The evening session Tuesday will emphasize extension in the inner city. On Wednesday, an address at 9 a.m. by Dr. Edward Smith, director of the New York State Extension Service, will begin the day. A series of workshops and meetings will round out the day's business. The conference will end after a Thursday luncheon.

Cooperative Extension is the educational arm of the land-grant universities. In Massachusetts, extension is directed by UMass at the Amherst campus and carried out by University staff and county and regional extension specialists all over the State.

New Sopor Spreads Here

A new, very popular drug on campus is sopor or Quaalude. There is some misinformation about the drug and therefore some misuse of it. Sopors look like fat aspirin--white tablets with a line in the middle, having a bitter taste. Quaaludes are a non-barbituate sedative-hypnotic, used medically as sleep-inducing sedatives. People seem to think that because Quaalude is not a barbituate that it is harmless. Not true. Actually, four 300 mg. tablets (those described above) taken at the same time could be an overdose, and probably would be if taken along with alcohol.

Quaalude is a short-acting drug, being processed pretty quickly by a healthy liver. Alcohol slows down the function of theliver and inhibits the elimination of the Quaalude, prolonging the body-depressing effects of the drug. If you ae considering taking sopors, it is advisable to space taking one half a tablet until you are fairly sure how your body will react to the drug. However, take no more than two initially.

There is a high possibility of psychological dependence to Quaalude. Presently, there is no evidence of physical addiction. (There was no evidence of physical addiction to barbituates for nearly fifty years.) There seems to be a tolerance level that is developed more slowly than tolerance to barbituates. The sopor high is very pleasant, mellow, similar to barbituate experience without the negative side-effects. There is an increase in sensual awareness and there is no "hangover". It takes about a half and hour to an hour to get off, the "peak" lasts one to two hours and then starts dropping off for the next two hours. Of course the effects will last according to how much is taken over how long a period of time.

If you are concerned that a person has taken too much Quaalude, there are a few things to watch for. If the person has a high loss of coordination (falling down), his eyes are rolling back, he is slipping in and out of consciousness and is verbally incoherent, you should try to keep the person awake either by talking with him or walking him around and you should call Room To Move, the infirmary or the emergency number in Amherst, 911. There is a good chance that the person will need to be checked by the infirmary before he will be allowed to go to sleep. There are no legal complications to worry about--the infirmary's records are confidential.

This article is not complete. If you have any information or experiences that would be helpful, or any further questions, please call Room To Move at 545-0400.

Observing Classrooms

Undergrads interested in observing and participating in elementary classrooms oriented towards active learning and social growth, with opportunities to discuss their experiences, are invited to apply to INTEGRATED DAY PROGRAM'S Prepracticum during Pre-Registration (School of Education Old Library, today through Friday, 12:00-7:30).

Students completing the Prepracticum then have the option of entering the METEP program with first priority among applicants.

Making Friends With The Opposite Sex

Eight years ago, Emily Coleman, bacteriologist, expert in the stock market and real estate, buffet-luncheon giver, PTA supporter, California wife and mother and weekend marine ecologist, discovered that her potential was unused.

Since then she's become half of the only nude mother and son therapy team in the world, divorced, written a book, and made it her full-time job to help other people take a look at themselves and each other to discover what real fulfillment means.

Male-female relationships are her specialty, especially the de-escalation of the war between the sexes and the destruction of the sex-role myths which stop men and women from becoming friends. Emily reaches people through large group encounters, like the one she will be holding at 8:00 p.m. this Wednesday evening at the Campus Center.

Emily's career in human relations started when she was asked to join a University of California program for discovering the unused potential of women and became aware of the restrictions and assumptions behind her own life. Moving into what Emily calls her "lion stage", she stood up to her sons who wanted clothes cleaned and food cooked, and they left. She stood up to her husband and he left.

Catapulted into the "singles scene" when her 29-year marriage ended in divorce, she felt the loneliness and anxiety of being without a primary relationship. Hungry for in-depth companionship, annoyed, angered, bored and disgusted at the available means of getting acquainted with members of the opposite sex, she decided to do something about the situation. She originated new methods to help men and women meet others with similar values and goals, complementary hobbies and interests and to get to know them quickly at a deeper than superficial level.

Since that time Emily has run social encounter groups for universities and for every major growth center in the United States and Europe. She has appeared on the David Frost, Steve Allen, Merv Griffin, and Virginia Graham TV shows, and has published her first book, Making Friends with the Opposite Sex.

Emily will be in Amherst for an entire week. She will conduct three workshops at the Campus Center. "Making Friends with the Opposite Sex - An Evening" Wednesday night from 8-12 p.m. (fee: $5.00); "Making Friends with the Opposite Sex" Saturday 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. (fee: $15.00); "How to be Happily Married" Sunday 10 a.m. - 5 p.m. She will conduct one other session at the Davis Ballroom at Smith College Thursday at 7:30 p.m. For further information on any of these workshops, please call the New England Center at 584-0240.

In case you hadn't noticed, two of our friends have been missing from the pond for a couple of weeks. The physical plant, which is responsible for the swans and their offspring would like to make a request that the person or persons who took the swans return them. The swans cost approximately $300 a pair and for this reason they probably will not be replaced for awhile. But the question on a lot of peoples' minds right now is why would anyone want to take them in the first place? (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

Chorale Presents Spring Concert

The 70-voice UMass Chorale will present its annual spring concert Sunday, May 7, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass campus.

Opening the program will be the University Women's Choir of the Chorale, under the direction of Mr. Alan Harler, assistant professor in the music department. The Choir will perform works by J.S. Bach, John Holland, Vincent Persichetti, and Claude Debussy.

Harpsichordist Gretchen Saathoff and cellist Kathleen Starr will accompany the works by Bach; and soprano Linda Toombs and Miss Saathoff, on piano, will perform in the work by Debussy.

Performing next will be the 16 Chamber Singers of the Chorale, with Dr. Richard duBois directing. The Singers, with percussionist David Vincent, flutist Barbara Rohnert, and violinist Dean Radin, will perform "Eight Japanese Haiku," by Brent Pierce.

Concluding the program will be numbers by Johannes Brahms, Frederick Tillis, Debussy, and Heinrich Schutz, to be performed by the entire University Chorale, with Dr. duBois conducting.

Chorale conductor duBois is a professor in the UMass music department. The soloist and instrumentalists performing with the Choir and Chamber Singers are students at the University.

Open to the public without charge, the concert is one of the many free performances sponsored by the music department throughout the year.

Amram Speaks On 'No More Walls'

David Amram, musician-in-residence, will speak on "No More Walls" May 2, at 8:00 in Thompson 104.

The Distinguished Visitors Program in conjunction with the Fine Arts Council, will present Mr. David Amram, musician-in-residence, speaking on "No More Walls" May 2, at 8:00 in Thompson 104. The topic of Mr. Amram's discussion refers to his concept of new directions in music study and appreciation.

In a New York Times article Mr. Amram explained: "My approach to music and those composers, conductors, concert performers, jazz musicians and all others involved in the world of music whom I find sympathetic is that they have something in common. They believe as I do in listening with an open mind and an open heart and in saving their psychic energy and critical judgement for their own work, rather than trying to rewrite or relive the musical life of others."

David Amram has had extensive training and experience as musician, composer, and educator. He is a prolific composer, having written many chamber, choral and orchestral works, two operas and incidental music for theatre, television and film. Mr. Amram has received a great deal of recognition for his versatility as a performer and composer. Evidence of this includes the choice of David Amram by Leonard Bernstein as the first composer-in-residence with the New York Philharmonic.

Regarding his personal relation to music, Mr. Amram says: "I learn about music by walking through the woods watching the birds fly, the rhythm of the wind on the grass, the texture of the grass....The color of sounds, the sheer power, the intimacy and loneliness that the orchestra can achieve are unbelievable. It has, like the ocean, movement, rhythm, an hypnotic grandeur."

Other events featuring Mr. Amram will include the following: a folk program at the Blue Wall on Wednesday, May 3, at 8:00 P.M., a formal jazz concert on May 4, Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 P.M., and a religious service at Smith College on Friday, May 4.

Mr. Amram's residency is being sponsored by the UMass Fine Arts Council assisted by a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts.

Botany And Rhetoric Jointly Offered

The Botany Department and Rhetoric Program are jointly offering a new approach to Botany 101 and Rhetoric 100. Special coupled sections of these two courses have been established which will be integrated so that many of the readings assigned for Botany 101 will be the basis of much of the writing done in Rhetoric 100.

If you elect this combination you will have the same instructor, and will meet with the same students, in both classes. This combination will satisfy one-half of the Rhetoric and one-fourth of the science requirements.

To join us in this interesting, innovative experiment you must pre-register for one of the combinations.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

Libra can adjust to being alone, but Aquarius usually is much too gregarious to put up with the solitary life. Pisces learns that being alone is not the same as being lonely, while Leo has some hard lessons to assimilate about companionship and love. Gemini is seldom alone and Capricorn is only alone by choice. Taurus talks about solitude but is not serious, while Cancer is perfectly satisfied to be with family and to let others go their own ways.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are going to reach beyond present boundaries. Your abilities, goals come into focus. Timing improves. Communication with one at a distance will resume. Your philosophy can work and you will be gratified.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): New approach to joint financial venture proves successful. Get co-operation, understanding of mate, partner. Leo will figure prominently. Secret arrangement could be in offing. Protect yourself in clinches.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Improve comprehension of those who hold views opposite your own. State case in low-key manner. Heed inner voice. You gain by being receptive. Let others air their thoughts. Be an attentive listener.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Matters of health, employment, performance of special services--these are highlighted. Diversity. Don't depend on only one project, assignment or individual. Accept social invitation. Encourage new contacts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Personal magnetism soars. Member of opposite sex figures prominently. Stress creativity. Obstacles are removed. There is change, opportunity for travel and a variety of experiences. Keep close watch on Aquarian.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Open lines of communication with family members. There are some blocks, emotional obstacles in domestic areas. These can be removed. Act in careful, diplomatic way. Gift purchase could sooth feelings.

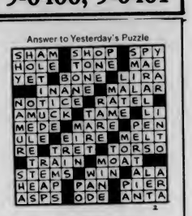
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Entertain at home. Stay in familiar territory. Taurus could play significant role. Be diplomatic. Play hand with cool deliberateness. Money is involved and so are your relatives. Plenty of "soft soap" indicated.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Obtain valid hint from Libra message. Take inventory. Pay, collect debts. Leave no loose money ends. Avoid tendency toward wishful thinking. Be realistic about prospects, aspirations. Check special accounts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): This is a power period. Get going. Invest in your own ideas, special abilities. Stand on your feet and proclaim beliefs. Don't take back seat. Money surprise is due. Backing is on way. Act accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cooperate with Sagittarian. Plan program which gets message across to more people. Work in conjunction with special group, organization. Much that occurs is obscured. Be patient and situation will come into focus.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): New contact proves beneficial. Be open to ideas, suggestions. One at the top lends support. Take steps to fulfill desires. Leo is in picture. Be receptive. You have right to fun and romance.



PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You perceive potential. You are not satisfied with compromise, second best or anything less than achievement of goal. Your confidence is such that you inspire others. One in authority will give you necessary support.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are subject to moods, are sensitive, capable of understanding those with diversified views. This should be one of your most significant years, with September a key month. Get into business for yourself. Refuse to be dissuaded by one who has little faith.

Cross Proves Easy Pickings For Redmen

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

After Saturday's thrashing of the Holy Cross tennis team, one has to wonder whether they're really glad to be in the Yankee Conference. UMass dominated, winning it 7-2, handily controlling the match by grasping five out of a possible six points in the singles go-round.

Holy Cross, having held a 4-1-1 record before Saturday, did present some stiff opposition in the top singles match. Ted Donahue would certainly verify this, as he fell to one of the Cary brothers in straight sets, the second by way of a tie-breaker.

On the winning track, there was number two man Gary Ney, who led the surge that gave the UMass tennis team an overall 7-2 record. (4-1 in Conference play). Ney won in three sets, and he was followed in the winners circle by Fred Braley, Steve Ferber, Mark Brass and Robert Schpeiser.

Braley turned in his man by downing him 6-4, 6-4, while Ferber ran all over his opponent, 6-1, 6-1. Brass yielded but 6 games in his win, while Schpeiser, equally, had little resistance. His match went 6-1, 6-3.

Doubles time, and Mr. Casey teamed with Mr. Casey for Holy Cross, as they managed to second and last point for the visitors. The Crusaders first doubles team won a three set struggler, while down in second doubles another tight three setter was taking place. This one belonged to UMass, as Ferber and Braley saw the scores 6-3, 6-7, 7-5 go their way.

The third slot was well manned with Brass and Schpeiser. They whisked their opponents away, 6-1, 6-2.

Coach Kosakowski was particularly pleased by Ney's win as he was facing an extrmely tough man in Andy Ponetera. Kosakowski felt that the whole squad really put in a good performance saying, "actually everyone contributed. It was a good effort, one really nice to see. The 7-2 score though, I don't think accurately reflects the tightness of the match as many of the matches went even longer than their scores would seem to indicate."

Holy Cross was the last Yankee Conference opponent for the Redmen, as Springfield lies ahead, tomorrow afternoon, with the Yankee Conference Championships coming up this weekend. So far the Conference boils down to URI, UConn, and UMass. The Redmen have defeated URI, lost to UConn and beaten Holy Cross. Meanwhile the Crusaders played UConn to a draw, and as of yet last week's URI-UConn match results are unavailable. Undoubtedly URI probably went and beat the Huskies, just to make everything confusing.

The weather has been unbelievable, especially compared to last spring when every other day it rained. Watch, it'll rain for the next two weeks, wash out the Yankee Conferences and the New Englands, just watch. But if they do get played the Redmen look to do quite well. Most likely they're playing their best tennis of the year, and as the old cliche would have us say, (that old seemingly contradictory cliche) that loss to UConn one week ago was perhaps the best thing that could have happned to UMass. This is basically true because the Redmen realize what can well happen should they lapse—yes, you know, one of those famous Theodore Donahue lapses.

TENNIS TIDBITS—The latest scoop is that that new handle on Chris Coffin's racket is making the difference. As Chris has been overheard saying, "It must be the handle." Braley, disgusted over his latest brand of tennis claims, "I can't play the backcourt anymore." Thus if you want to see a lot of net play, watch court number three. Down at four Ferber is debating using a different racket for every match this week. It seems that that's the only way he can get a double win. Brass is also having racket troubles, and he simply can't wait for his newest one to break, so that he can use his still newer one.

Then there's Schpeiser at six, who still hasn't lost in singles, in fact he's only lost one match so far this year. But damned if he didn't lose a tie-breaker to Donahue yesterday. On those tie breakers,—yuk!!!!!!!! Mike Phillips, ah yes, he's has continual stomach troubles. The latest report is that somebody put something in the water can during a match in which he was killing his opponent. At this time though those reports are unconfirmed. Mark Lundberg is still walling the ever-livings out of the ball, while Coach Kosakowski still is having a blast with his team. At least that's what the players think--Kosa is looking forward to what could be the tightest conferences this year. —no but really what could be the tightest one in quite a number of years. Four teams have a good chance to win,—ok three then. I'll get some real live quotes from Kosakowski tomorrow, he's really an extraordinary type of coach--funny as all hell.

JV Lacrosse Team Beats Williams

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

The Redmen JV Lacrosse Teams emerged the victors after Saturday's clash at Williams.

The first 10 goals were all scored unassisted.

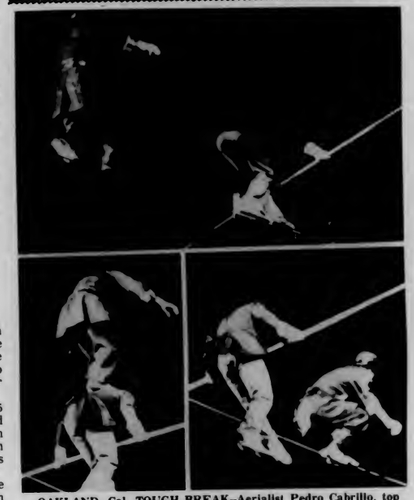
Olichowski, Steve Crimmins and Frank McCoy all scored. Corrigan had 2 assists.

Highlight of the game was in the last quarter when defenseman McCoy picked up the loose ball around the Redmen's net and ran it down the field firing a fast shot into the opponent's goal from 30' out.

Coach Kidd after the game had this to say, "I'm very pleased with the team's performance. We dressed 27 guys and everyone played at least a quarter.

Bill King as goalie did an excellent job at the net as did Nick Zachnilli who filled in during the last quarter.



McManus did a nice job for his first game at attack.

Bill Will and Bob Swartwort along with McCoy played a very strong defensive game. Emmet Power, a defense fill-in played good.

Co-captains Dave Berry and Joe O'Brien both played a sound, well balanced game.

The Redmen JV Stickers record now stand 1 win and 1 loss to Harvard 11-7.

They face a full week of lacrosse action: Tuesday at UConn, Wednesday at Mt. Hermon, and Thursday at Amherst.

Chi Chi A Winner Again

DALLAS (AP)-Chi Chi Rodriguez tapped in a five-foot birdie putt on the first extra hole Monday and defeated Billy Casper in a sudden-death playoff for the $25,000 first prize in the Byron Nelson Golf Classic.

The wiry, 36-year-old Puerto Rican lifted his eyes to the skies and raised a clenched fist over his head after he dropped the putt that brought him his first victory in almost four years of struggle.

Rodriguez had to come from behind on two occasions in the final round to tie Casper at 273-seven under par on the Preston Trial Golf Club course-at the end of the regulation 72 holes.

Casper, also seeking an end to a lengthy slump, rallied from three consecutive bogeys for a 71 while Rodriguez matched par 70 under skies that alternated from dreary clouds to bright, warm sun.

Little Wilf Homenuik, the hard-luck Canadian who blew the lead in Sunday's third round, had third place alone until he three-putted the final green and dropped back into a tie at 275 with Charles Coody and Australian veteran Bruce Crampton.

Coody had a 68, Crampton a 69 and Homenuik at 70.

Arnold Palmer, a 42-year-old charger who has had his problems this season, put on one big move, taking birdies on 13th and 14th holes to move to within one stroke of the lead. But he stumbled the three-putt bogeys on the next two holes and finished alone at 276 after a closing 68.

Rodriguez, a slightly-built 135 pounder with graying hair and slim, delicate hands, now has won six tour titles. The last one was in the 1968 Sahara, almost four years ago.

This championship, delayed one full day when a thunderstorm derstorm washed out Thursday's scheduled opening round, snapped a dismal, year long slump in which he lost his spot in the top 60 money winners and drifted back into the ranks of the Monday qualifiers.

Redmen Get Back On Track

By ROY LYONS

A revamped UMass baseball team rebounded from their disastrous weekend in Orono, Maine with a one-sided 18-6 route over Williams College yesterday afternoon in a lifeless affair at Lorden Field.

The Little Three school opened with a trio of runs in the first inning. Starter Chip Baye retired the first two batters easily, but wildness and a misplayed bloop single opened the gates for Williams. The Redmen went down in order in the bottom half of the inning, and for a brief time it looked like Orono re-visited.

This disquieting thought was quickly forgotten when UMass poured across five runs in the second inning and eight more in the next three frames. They were aided by an incredibly inept Williams defense which committed ten errors. The Redmen booted three chances themselves in the loosely played contest.

The UMass batting onslaught, the high point of their game, was led by three freshmen. Ron Beaurivage, playing first base in place of the slumping Dan Esposito, knocked in four runs with a triple and two singles. Mike Flanagan singled three times and drove in a pair of runs, and Pete Backstrom singled home a run in the second and drove in three more on a fifth inning homer. Sophomore Steve Newell followed Backstrom to the plate and drove one to almost the identical spot over the wall in right center. Rightfielder Dan Odre homered for Williams in the third inning and collected two other hits in a losing effort.

Baye gave up five runs in the three innings he pitched before being pulled for a pinch hitter. Tom Austin got the win, allowing only one run in the four innings he worked. It was his second victory in as many decisions. Eric Levine worked the final two innings and held Williams scoreless.

Williams also used three pitchers with starter Ken Littleton absorbing the loss. It was his first decision.

UMass entertains the University of New Hampshire Friday afternoon in another crucial Yankee Conference game. Realistically, it has to be considered a "must" win if the Redmen hope to overtake the University of Connecticut for the conference title.

Charlie O Wins; Blue Signs For $63,000

NEW YORK (AP) — Vida Blue will end his long holdout and sign his 1972 contract with the Oakland Athletics Tuesday in Boston, ABC-TV said Monday.

In a taped interview with Howard Cosell, shown Monday night, Blue, the American League's Cy Young Award winner and Most Valuable Player in 1971, said he would accept a $63,000 compromise contract because of the efforts of Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The left-hander pitching star said in the interview for the network's "Monday Night Sports" program that he felt he should accept the offer because Kuhn "had been so nice" and "had put his head on the block."

Contacted by the Associated Press in Oakland, Blue said: "I can't comment, I haven't signed yet, and that's it. I have to go out and do my running."

In Chicago, Oakland Owner Charles O. Finley said, "I don't know anything about this."

He had no further comment

Kuhn, using what he called his general powers to act in "the best interests of baseball," Saturday had ordered Finley to keep open his offer to Blue and urged the 22-year-old pitcher to accept it.

Finley had offered Blue a $50,000 contract for 1972, plus $13,000 as a bonus for 1971. He offered him an additional $5,000 for attorney's fees and $8,000 for Blue's college education. Finley said attorney Robert Gerst initially demanded $115,000.

Blue earned only $14,750 last season--his first full year in the major league--while compiling a 24-8 record and helping the A's win the American League's West Division championship.

Finley, who had held several contract meetings with Blue, became incensed when Kuhn stepped in and said he was not sure whether he would keep open his $63,000 offer.

Blue said on the Monday night show that Finley had little to do with his reversal.

The fireballing southpaw said he would not be ready to pitch for another three or four weeks.

Leaman Lands Two "Blue-Chippers"

By EARLE BARROLL

The key word is "facility."

The message is clear.

"It's pretty tough to show a young man a dirt floor and tell him we play basketball there," Leaman says. "We have found that our biggest problem in recruiting this year is that we do not have a facility to offer.

"Recruiting has been slow. The competition has been tough. We've lost players to Duke, South Carolina and Pennsylvania to mention a few. And all these schools have great facilities."

It is no secret (although they try to keep it that way) that vying for talent in an arena with these schools is more commonly known as "survival of the richest" and since the days of Henry Ford cars have been a dollar a dozen for schools whose recruiting budget totals more than the entire UMass basketball program has.

For this reason, a facility is a necessity, but a quick look at the Cage and it becomes a liability.

"The next step forward will have to be a new facility," Leaman emphasized. "We deserve one comparable to the calibre of competition we'll be playing. (In the next couple of years, Niagara-second in this year's N.I.T.-and Oklahoma City will be coming to play at UMass).

"And most of all we'll need student support to promote a new basketball complex."

Nevertheless recruiting has not gone for naught. Where in the past the emphasis had been on quantity, this year (due to two Murphy, et al) the move has been toward quality in high school talent.

So far two blue chip high school players have decided to attend UMass next year: Michael Stokes, a 5'9 all-city guard from Philadelphia, Pa., and Glenn Cooper, a 6'6 forward out of Kingsley Hall Prep in Connecticut.

Due to a cutback, Leaman is looking for only one more player (there are usually four scholarships) and this may be a 6'10 center from Connecticut.

Leaman is extremely high on Stokes. "He gives us something the varsity won't have--a number one guard. He's an excellent ballhandler, very quick and most difficult to press."

Besides being all-city, Stokes was also second team all state and in the annual Philadelphia Gold Medal Tourney featuring the top high school seniors and college players from the Philadelphia area (including Corky Calhoun-number one pick of Phoenix-and Hank Simientowski from Villanova) he averaged 30 points in the last four games.

"Many major schools bypassed him because of his size," Leaman noted, "but after his tourney they were all around him. His teammates told me he was robbed of the MVP award. He'll be a great addition to our program."

Cooper is a "fine shooting, strong rebounding forward" according to Leaman. He averaged 21 points and 14 rebounds a game this season.

"He needs to develop a little more physically," Leaman said. "He has a long lean frame, he's built for speed and should be an outstanding college forward."

Stickers Stop Williams

By JANICE AHMADJIAN

Though nip and tuck in places, the Redmen Stickers downed the Ephmen at Williams 9-6 Saturday.

Williams really gave the Gorillas a good game of fast, aggressive lacrosse action. Redmen had to be tough to win.

Midfielder Dwight Blomquist with the help of Hirsh Seidman started the Red score going 4:15 into the first quarter.

Second later Paul Ritch assisted by Charlie Hardy did it again.

The score remained 2-0 for UMass for the remainder of the quarter as each team held its own.

Williams finally broke through the Redmen line with 2 goals by Drayton and Detick. Score stood 3-2, too close for comfort.

The Redmen had to shape up to win this game.

Hardy did his little dance around the purple goal passing the ball to Seidman who scored.

Seconds later he did it again this time passing it to Blomquist who made a sure shot into the goal.

Ephman Levine, at the end of the quarter scored another Purple goal.

Half time the score stood 5-3 for UMass. However, the Ephmen were playing a good ball game. "If we want this ball game we've got to go after them," said Coach Garber.

During the second half, the game got very physical and aggressive. Both teams were really fighting. Redmen held their own in the third quarter, keeping the Ephmen scoreless.

Three goals were made by the Red. The first was by Blomquist assisted by Nagle, and the next two by Nagle, one unassisted and the other with Hardy's help.

Fourth quarter Williams picked up again as Kubies scored and then Nesbit raising the score 8-5.

The Gorilla's last point was scored in a Fast Break Goal which happened when Goalie Bruce Crawford ran the ball down the field passing it to Pete Conolly then to Hardy who shot it right in the net.

Final score stood 9-6. Another Redmen victory boosting up their record to date 7 wins and 3 losses.

Top game scorer was Blomquist with 3 goals.

Coach Garber after the game had this to say, "Williams played a very aggressive and good game. We played well in parts but it wasn't a very sharp game for us. However, Bruce Crawford did an outstanding job as goalie with 23 saves."

The Yankee Conference Title is at stake this week as Redmen Stickers meet with UConn today and UNH Saturday, both games are away. Fast lacrosse action is sure to be in store.

Nets Top Squires

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Rick Barry scored 43 points and John Roche and Bill Paultz added career highs of 37 and 33 points, respectively, to lead the New York Nets to a 146-136 victory over the Virginia Squires, evening their American Basketball Association Eastern Division championship playoff series at three victories apiece.

The seventh and deciding game of the playoff series will be played Thursday night in Norfolk, Va. So far, the Squires have won the three games played in Virginia while the Nets have won the three meetings at the Nassau Coliseum.

The Nets took the lead for good early in the first quarter, when a basket by Paultz, a 6-foot-11 center, put New York in front 9-8 with 9:40 to go in the period. The Nets' biggest lead came with 1:29 toplay in the half, when a goal-tending call against Virginia's George Irvine on a shot by Barry made it 69-54.

New York led 73-59 at half-time and coasted the rest of the way. Virginia could come no closer than seven points, 105-98, on a pair of foul shots by Adrian Smith with 9:51 left in the game.

Virginia's rookie forward, Julius Erving, topped his club with 34 points, while guard Bernie Williams tossed in 33.

The Nets outrebounded Virginia 48-39 as Paultz hauled down 14 and Erving was limited to 10, well below his average.

Fencers Win

At the Springfield YMCA Novice Fencing Meet held last Saturday, the UMass Fencing Club of Al Chin, Jim Rose and Dan Murphy swept the top three finishing positions with identical 9-2 records.

The Club's women's team, well coached by June Seaman of the Women's Phys. Ed. department, won two medals. Mary Meyers finished first with eight wins and no losses and Beth O'Brien placed third with a 6-2 record.

THE BUBBLE GUM KID--Joe Lovitto of the Texas Rangers has a habit of chewing gum in the batting cage. Lovitto has been spending a lot of time in the batting cage recently to try and improve his anemic .130 batting average. His manager, Ted Williams, says Lovitto has "a lot of zing" and an equal amount of potential, so he isn't too worried about him. This particular shot was taken before the Red Sox had beaten his team, the Texas Rangers, and burst his bubble. (AP Wirephoto)

Indiana Close, Ohio A Mystery

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey and Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace were locked in a tight presidential primary race in Indiana in early returns Tuesday night.

Meanwhile, Humphrey and Sen. George S. McGovern carried their Ohio campaigns into court in a ballot controversy that kept the polls open in pivotal Cleveland until a minute before midnight, turning the day's feature contest into something of a mystery race.

In Indiana, with 6 per cent of the precincts counted, Humphrey held a slender edge over the Alabama governor.

The tally there:

Humphrey 20,493, or 46 per cent.

Wallace 19,117, or 42 per cent.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, who quite the campaign last week, 5,279, or 12 per cent.

The Minnesota senator led in next-door Ohio, too, holding the early edge over Sen. George S. McGovern in a contest for delegates.

But the count there was slow and the returns inconclusive as none of the ballots from Cleveland, the state's biggest city, had been tallied.

Humphrey and McGovern carried their campaigns into court in a ballot controversy that kept the polls open in Cleveland until one minute before midnight.

The extra voting hours meant that the outcome of statewide competition for 38 national convention delegates wouldn't be known until sometime Wednesday.

The balance of the 153-vote delegation was apportioned among Ohio congressional districts and that count was proceeding slowly.

The Ohio tally, for the at-large delegates, with 626 of the state's 12,648 precincts counted, stood Humphrey 16,131, McGovern 14,568. The rest of the field trailed far behind.

In Indiana, with 39 per cent of the precincts counted, it was:

Humphrey 144,756 or 47 per cent.

Wallace 126,622 or 41 per cent.

Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, who dropped out of the campaign there even before he quit active primary competition nationally, had 36,406 votes, or 12 per cent.

Wallace appeared to have been buoyed by Republican crossover votes and by a busing controversy in Indianapolis.

Humphrey led for 49 Indiana national convention votes, Wallace for 27. Nineteen of them went to the statewide winner, the others were awarded on a district basis.

In Wallace's Alabama, the fragmentary returns gave the governor the lead in competition for convention delegates against his home state foes.

Candidates pledged to Wallace led in 10 of 11 districts reporting. All told, 29 delegates were being chosen, in as many districts.

The early returns there put Sen. John Sparkman ahead of six rivals in his bid for Democratic renomination, and former Postmaster General Winton M. Blount narrowly ahead in a four-way contest for the Republican nomination to the Senate. Runoff elections were likely in both parties.

The already complex Ohio delegate contest was complicated further by voting machine foulups in sections of Cleveland. As a result, a federal judge ordered the polls in Cuyahoga County kept open for 5-1/2 hours after the rest of the state finished voting.

That meant the statewide contest wouldn't be settled until sometime Wednesday.

The voting extension came in a suit filed on behalf of Humphrey who said he was "damned mad" about the trouble at the polls.

McGovern then sought to have announcement of the primary results from the entire state withheld until the Celveland polls closed, and asked that the Cuyahoga County ballots be impounded. A State Supreme Court justice denied those requests, opening the way for the long, slow count of ballots elsewhere in the state.

In Tuesday's fourth primary, Democrats in the District of Columbia chose between favorite son and uncommitted delegate slates.

The Cleveland vote was pivotal in the statewide Ohio contest, for 38 delegates. In addition, the extra hours of voting blocked tallying of ballots for 25 delegates selected in area congressional districts.

Ohio chose 153 Democratic delegates, the Indiana primary awarded 76 nominating votes. In Alabama, 29 of the 37 nominating delegates votes were at stake in the primary. The District of Columbia will cast 15 nominating votes, but none of the national candidates was entered there.

There was no presidential preference poll in Ohio, where five candidates entered delegate slates.

Ironically, it was a state in which Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, once had hoped to virtually clinch the nomination. Instead, Muskie quit the primary campaign last Thursday while remaining a candidate.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington spent nearly three weeks stumping Ohio for votes for his delegates. Former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of Minnesota had a full at-large delegate slate, too.

Indiana's primary was a presidential preference poll, binding the 76-vote delegation on the first ballot at the national convention.

Muskie was on the ballot there, too, but he quit the Indiana campaign even before announcing his withdrawal from the primary competition.

In the original Muskie game plan, May 2 was circled on the primary calendar as the day the senator from Maine hoped to take clear command for the nomination. Muskie began his campaign by announcing he would enter each of the first eight presidential primaries, and Ohio was to complete that lineup.

Humphrey took Indiana, while McGovern is in a tight race with Humphrey in Ohio. Due to a court injunction, Cleveland polls stayed open until midnight last night. (MDC photo by Alan Chapman)

Fleetwood Signed For Free Concert Sunday

By JOHN M. DONNELLY

The UMass Concert Committee has completed their negotiations with American Talent Inc. and has signed Fleetwood Mac, McKendree Spring, and Ashton Gardner Dyke and Company for the Spring Concert.

The concert will be held Sunday, May 7 at 1 p.m. at the UMass Stadium. The gates will open at 11:30 and the concert will last until about 5 p.m. The concert is free to all UMass students and their guests.

The total cost of the concert was $9,000. The Student Senate originally allocated $8,000 to the Concert Committee, and the remaining thousand was raised by the Concert Fund Raising Committee who has held various concerts on campus.

Lee Trousdale, Concert Committee Chairman, called this concert a test case. Trousdale said, "The character of this concert will be watched closely and it may effect future concerts." There will be about 50 student marshals, headed by Maggie Houton, available to assist people and keep peace. About 15 easily identifiable medics, headed by Tony Tartaglia and Sue Roundy, will accompany the marshals.

The top three groups in the Daily Collegian Concert Committee poll were Poco, the America package, and the Kinks. But as Group Security Chairman Mitch Press said, "Unfortunately, by the time the poll was tallied, some of the groups had already been signed and the only financially feasible package was Fleetwood Mac."

Press later said, "There is a chance that the University will not allow us to use the stadium again if any destruction occurs." The Concert Committee urges that students not bring glass containers into the stadium. Shattered glass is very difficult to clean off the field. The Concert Committee requested the assistance of any willing students to help clean up after the concert.

Students Offering Support (SOS) will run concession stands and ask for donations during the concert. The proceeds from this will go to their Belchertown State Hospital relief fund. SOS will appreciate any contributions.

UMass students are urged by the Concert Committee not to bring their cars due to an impending parking problem. V parking lot next to the stadium will be closed along with Stadium Drive and Dallas Mall. Parking will be available in F lot next to the Southwest Residential area and the visitors lot across from Whitmore. To facilitate the parking, campus buses will take students to the stadium.

The stadium has a capacity for 14,000 people. The east stands, which are closest to Southwest will be used. People may also use the field, weather permitting.

Amram: "No More Walls"

By MARY GOODYEAR

"No More Walls" was the topic last night of an informal talk given by guest speaker of the Distinguished Visitors Program, David Amram, noted American musical conductor, composer, and player.

Amram, concerned about the walls that exist between the musicians and the audience, said that "these walls must be taken down." They are the result of where the music comes from and what it represents from the socio-economic aspect. He then went on to say, "the whole kind of way of presenting music in this country, as to a one percent elite symphony audience, has no way connected with the people who composed or conducted it." Amram sighted the symphony as a basic situation in which the lack of connection between musicians and audience occurs. The musicians, which include composer and players, are struggling economically and are barely able to survive, while their audience counterparts, to whom they are attempting to communicate, are very wealthy and socially orientated.

Amram discussed also the commercial wall that has come between the musicians and the audience. In this case he directed interest toward rock music and blamed record companies, with all their greed, as the cause of the lack of any real connection between the players and their audience. "Rock players after playing a long time felt they were being ripped off by people on the other side of the fence." Amram said that "two fantastic dichotomies existed: the players and composers caught in the situation over which they had no control, and the people exploiting them."

Amram also noted walls that exist in the educational system, which also need breaking down. School children and college students alike need to be exposed to more professional people and artists as a part of their educational experience. They should be in some sort of contact with people who really know what they are doing. Having professionals in all fields helping with the teaching provides better experiences for the students and also could allow for an improved economic situation for the artists involved on a regular basis. Amram himself, becomes involved with the school children of many of the various areas he visits. He said, "I'm trying to break down those walls in education."

Amram believed that the walls he mentioned in the field of music have already begun to deteriorate due to a greater intellectual consciousness of the people in general. People are intellectually rising above the barriers, and they will not be as great an influence to music and its direction in the future.

Westover Protests Headed For A High

By GILBERT J. SALK

The non-violent civil disobedience which has resulted in 215 arrests at Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, Mass., is headed for a high point on Saturday, May 6.

Organizers of the demonstrations, which have been continuing daily for over a week, are planning for up to 100 more arrests on Saturday.

Four training workshops will be held for those who wish to participate either in the civil disobedience or as supporters who will not be arrested. In the Springfield area, workshops will be held at 7:00 p.m. on Thursday and Friday in the Samson Room of the Beveridge Center Student Union at Springfield College. Workshops for the Amherst-Northampton area will be held in the 1st Congregational Church on Main Street in Amherst.

The Workshops will inform people of the goals and methods of the demonstrations, answer questions about the legal implications of participation, and role-play the demonstration so that participants will know what to expect.

Demonstrators in Saturday's civil disobedience will gather outside the Westover Main Gate shortly before 10:00 a.m. for a brief worship celebration. After the worship, the participants will sit down in the road in front of the gate while supporters distribute leaflets to passing motorists.

The Chicopee police will give a two-minute warning to those sitting in the road, and after the two minutes are up they will be arrested and brought to the Chicopee City Hall.

In past demonstrations, those arrested have been charged with disturbing the peace, disorderly conduct, and preventing people from entering their place of employment. Judge Landers has given those pleading guilty 10-day suspended sentences for each of the first two charges, and a $10.00 fine for the third charge in each of the previous actions. Organizers point out that there is no guarantee that the arrests will not result in jail sentences, and that those committing civil disobedience should come prepared for that possibility.

The purpose of the continuing actions, according to organizers, is to allow people to bear witness to their opposition to killing by all the belligerants in the Vietnam war, and to try to stop this nation's involvement in that killing.

In related activities, Five-College faculty and staff are planning a rally and civil disobedience at Westover on Thursday at 2:00 p.m. Participation is not limited to faculty and staff.

At 4:00 p.m. on Thursday, another rally will be held at the Westover Main Gate. The rally, which will include nationally-known speakers, will not include civil disobedience and will have a permit from the city of Chicopee.

A Friday civil disobedience action is being planned by at least two Connecticut anti-war groups. It is scheduled for Noon.

Also on Friday, Senator Edward Brooke (R-Mass) will speak on the University of Mass. campus. Organizers of the civil disobedience actions plan to request that Brooke both endorse their actions and join the Saturday demonstration. They expect him to refuse.

They will also ask him to comment on the request from Chicopee Mayor Ziemba that he assist the city in seeking federal funds to pay for the cost of arresting the protestors. The idea of the city seeking federal assistance was suggested by the demonstrators in a meeting they called with city officials last Friday.

Chuck Hampton Comments On Housing And Dining Commons

By STEVE TRIPOLI

Last Friday afternoon and Friday night Chuck Hampton of the Housing Office, at the invitation of Student Senator Jim O'Donoghue of Brown House, lived in the Sylvan Area and ate in the Dining Commons along with the rest of the students. The purpose of the experiment was for Hampton to get some feeling of what it's like to live as the majority of the students at UMass live. He gave his impressions of the experiment in an interview with the Collegian yesterday.

"I stayed in an eight-man suite with two of the occupants gone for the weekend and a girlfriend of one of the occupants staying there. I was in a single. While it was on the small side, we were still able to fit four people in it to rap.

"I'd prefer the traditional dorms myself," Hampton stated. "While the suite setup allows for good interaction among the suite members, there isn't much of a relationship with the rest of the corridor."

Hampton was a college student in the early 60's, living in a dorm, and he later spent four years in the Air Force in a dorm-type living arrangement.

He did see some benefit from the suite arrangement, however. "It depends on how the student wants to live. I do love the freedom of the open house, the co-ed living arrangement, the general unrestricted atmosphere."

On the Dining Commons, Hampton had this to say. "I was only there for one meal, but I wasn't pleased. It wasn't too bad, but on a day-to-day basis-it's just like in the Air Force or when I was in college, the personal touch is missing. It's not as good as my wife's."

On the whole, Hampton was most impressed with the freedom in the dorm, saying that he favored the present, little restricted dorm setup. On the physical characteristics of the dorms, he admitted that they were small, but he felt that they were adequate "from a housing point of view."

Collegian Performance Survey

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

Tomorrow's Collegian will carry a special questionnaire which will enable students to evaluate the paper's performance in bringing the news to you over the last year.

The questionnaire, which will ask how often each section of the paper is read, will be a full page tear-out section which, when completed, should be returned to the Collegian office or to a special collection box in the Student Union lobby.

Unlike commercial newspapers which can monitor their sales to find out how the public is reacting to their product, the Collegian must go directly to its readers to establish that. Also, commercial papers can monitor their competition to see new trends developing which could help their sales. Campus newspapers, because they are a monopoly, can't do that.

The survey will ask students how often they read specific sections of the paper (i.e., never, sometimes, often, always). The listing, which will include sections from Poor Richard's magazine, will be arranged alphabetically to eliminate any possibility of favoritism.

A number of letters have been received during the last year criticizing the paper of not providing the student body with the news it wants. With this questionnaire, students can tell the editors what they feel can be done to improve the paper.

The results should be tabulated before the end of the semester and will be reported in the Collegian.

A similar survey which was conducted last year revealed this campus is not the intellectual hotbed some people proport it to be. That survey showed the comics to be the most read section of the paper. The top five sections, in descending order of popularity at that time were: 1. Comics; 2. Campus News; 3. Astrological Forecast; 4. Letters to the Editor; 5. Editorials.

One hopes the paper is now being considered more seriously.

FREE BUS SERVICE between UMass campus and downtown Amherst will be provided for everybody for the balance of the school year. This medium-size gas-powered bus is equipped with windows that "pop out" in case of emergency exit. It is a sample of the buses being considered for the federally-funded shuttle. Stockbridge Hall is in the background. (Photo by Keller of Greenfield Recorder) See story on page 3.

New Bus Shuttle On The Run

If a bus came by your dorm every 20 minutes and it would take you where you wanted to, won't you take advantage of it? Well, its about to happen here at UMass and surrounding communities. Free bus service for the 28,000 persons connected with UMass and the 10,000 people of Amherst will be provided under a new federally funded shuttle.

Sample runs were conducted Monday in a bus provided by Highway Products, Inc., Kent, Ohio, although it isn't necessarily the bus that will be ultimately purchased.

PAUL SHULDINER, coordinator of the $700,000 commuter shuttle service, and William Goss, project director, expalined that the service was to begin today and continue on a modified basis for the rest of the school year, or approximately two weeks. The project is scheduled for a 19-month trial starting in February, 1973.

The second semester of operation, in the fall of 1973, if the experiment proves practical, might find service extended to serve the apartment complexes in Sunderland on Rte. 116. The first semester will find shuttle service for Rtes. 116 and 9 in Amherst, parts of Hadley and in South Amherst.

Initially the bus routes will be extended, from the campus where six buses currently provide an on-campus shuttle, to outlying areas of town where apartment complexes are built and to Amherst's downtown area. Students, personnel, townspeople-everyone is eligible to ride-for free.

Shuldiner explained that they had visited seven universities and five manufacturers in the past two weeks. There still is a decision to be made on exactly what kind of bus to purchase and whether it will be gas or diesel powered.

"GAS IS QUIETER and doesn't smell as much as a diesel," Goss said. "It is a dirtier engine overall but is more easily amenable to emission control."

He said the final decision might come on the ability of each type to make several steep hills on campus. The diesel engine is cheaper to operate and will last longer without major repairs," he said.

The route taken Monday went from the turn-around next to the Campus Center to the Riverside Park shopping center in North Amherst, back past Puffton Village and North Village, to the School of Education, Orchard Hill residential area and to Whitmore Hall.

The purpose is to limit inter-campus traffic. "UMass is urban-like in character, "a News Bureau release states, noting its "28,500 persons on 1,100 acres. This year more than 15,000 cars are registered to park on the UMass-Amherst campus."

One problem to be worked out yet, one UMass official said, "is to educate all the people here on bus routes and times. They will have to learn about it if they are going to use it, and they must use it if it is to become successful."

Rule Of Thumb Upheld By House

BOSTON (AP) — After prolonged debate Tuesday the Massachusetts House killed a bill providing a $50 fine for hitchhikers on limited access highways and a similar penalty for drivers who pick them up.

Defeat for the bill filed by Rep. Ralph Sirianni, D-Winthrop, came on a 20-75 standing vote against final approval, one day after the House had given the measure initial approval.

Sirianni moved to have the vote reconsidered Wednesday.

Rep. Thomas Wojtkowski, D-Pittsfield, led the opposition to the hitchhiking bill and successfully tacked on two amendments before the legislation was killed entirely.

One amendment exempted students from the bill providing they stayed on highway access ramps or at rest areas. The other change limited the stiffer penalty to hitchhiking at night.

ROTC Debated On WMUA

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The future of ROTC on the UMass campus was debated on WMUA for two hours last night by four UMass students, who all agreed that ROTC is a bad idea.

Bill Staton, speaking in favor of ROTC on campus, said, "The issue is not whether we believe in ROTC, but whether ROTC should remain or be removed from the UMass campus."

Joe Doucette said ROTC should not be on campus since it infringes on the idea of academic freedom.

He said ROTC has many governmental controls while providing the military with a "vast reservoir of people to guarantee a constant flow of officers."

Jim Bryne said there is a "certain amount of tokeness" involved in trying to get the program removed.

He continued, "Kicking ROTC off campus is not going to accomplish anything in the way of changing world events or the Vietnam War."

Asked why he opposed efforts to remove ROTC from campus, Staton replied that he is "very opposed to ROTC, the army and all wars, but the removal of ROTC would be an infringement on the rights of others, who may desire to participate in the ROTC program on campus."

"By taking ROTC," said Staton, "one is allowed to go into the service for a two-year stretch without making any commitment to the military, and it gives people a chance to take a second look."

On the influence of the liberal college community on the military, Doucette said, "The ROTC program has been on campuses for 110 years, and I've yet to see the liberalizing effects on the military."

Larry Barr said he is against ROTC since ROTC courses are not only taught by military men but the courses are inaccessible to the student body.

Staton replied that military men teach the courses since they are the most qualified to train students for what students are interested in learning. He said the situation is typical of other departments.

He also said that there are one or two courses in the ROTC program open to the student body. He added that only the permission of the instructors is needed.

On the question of the university losing federal funds by removing ROTC from the UMass campus, Barr stated that only federal funds dealing directly with the ROTC program would be affected by the removal.

Asked what the difference of having ROTC on campus or off campus, Barr stated that ROTC wouldn't be considered an academic program if it was off campus.

Barr said alternative scholarship funding would be provided for ROTC students if the program was removed. He was unsure where the money would come from, he added.

Hampshire Occupation Continues

Members of the Third World Organization at Hampshire College voted last night to continue their occupation of the science building until their list of demands has been responded to adequately.

The Third World group, made up of black, Latin, and Asian students, closed down the building yesterday, suspending administrative business for the day.

In a statement to the administration and the college community they emphasized that they did not consider their action a "take-over," but were merely giving the administration a "day off" to concentrate on their demands, which are basically a stronger commitment to Third World issues and financial aid.

A rally of some 250 students massed in front of the building at noon yesterday to show their support of the Third World group.

At 1:30 a group of eight students, four Third World members and four representatives from a faction of concerned white students, met with the administration to put forth their demands.

After three hours of deliberation, President Charles Longsworth agreed to write a statement on the immediate actions he plans to take on these issues, and to set a date to meet with the group in the near future.

The Third World group did not feel this was a satisfactory response and they intend to remain in the building beyond the original 24-hour time limit they set yesterday.

The student proposal calls for implementation of a 12-month school calendar that would bring in an increase in college funds of $900,000 by the year 1975. They are also proposing the use of a graduate tuition scale, but the amount of increased revenue that would come in from this method is uncertain.

The proposal also demands that by 1975 at least 25 per cent of the student body be Third World peoples and that at least 50 per cent of the student body be on financial aid.

The present Third World population at Hampshire comprises less than 10 per cent of the student body of 650, and the number of students on financial aid is 18 per cent, they say.

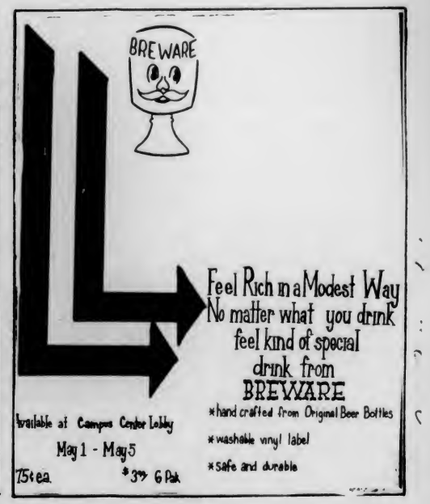
Students Have Day In Court

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Two Cornell University students allegedly among about 100 anti-war demonstrators who last week seized and occupied the Ivy League school's Carpenter Hall for five days appeared in State Supreme Court Tuesday to answer a show-cause order. Their cases were adjourned for one week.

The two appeared before State Supreme Court Justice Frederick B. Bryant.



James A. Livingston, a graduate student at Cornell and Paul Mirsky, a Cornell senior, were to show cause why they should not be held in contempt.

Livingston and Mirsky allegedly were two of about 125 demonstrators who occupied the library of the engineering administration building to protest defense-related work by university units and abolition of the campus ROTC program and to pressure Cornell's trustee investment committee to pressure Gulf Oil Corp. to end the firm's operations in Portugal's African colonies.

In The Nation And The World

REFUGEES IN KONTUM–Civilian refugees in Kontum, central highlands city threatened by the North Vietnamese offensive, wait for air transportation out of the city Monday. North Viets Move On Hue

SAIGON (AP) — Battered South Vietnamese troops were forming a new line north of Hue Tuesday in an effort to defend that one time imperial capital against the enemy's general offensive.

Enemy pressure on the new defense positions was relatively light, a U.S. officer said. The line is about 16 miles north of Hue and 35 miles south of the demilitarized zone.

The North Vietnamese were moving southward after their victory at Quang Tri. A senior U.S. officer in the northernmost 1st military region called Quang Tri a "major defeat" that "cannot be papered over as a strategic withdrawal or anything else."

He said enemy moves against Hue, 32 miles south of the lost provincial capital, could come at any time. But he added that South Vietnamese commanders were "confident and resolute" that their forces can defend the city that was ravaged in the 1968 Tet offensive.

A North Vietnamese broadcast said Thua Phien Province, of which Hue is the capital, was doomed.

One hope that Hue could be held lay in U.S. air power, and for the first time in the war, five aircraft carriers were operating off the coast with the arrival of the Midway.

U.S. fighter-bombers flew 649 strikes in South Vietnam, two-thirds of them in the north. B52 heavy bombers launched 75 strikes, some of them west of Hue where one arm of the North Vietnamese offensive may strike.

The North Vietnamese conquered Quang Tri Province by moving in tanks, long-range artillery and sophisticated anti-aircraft guns to combat allied air power, and a new threat was added Tuesday.

Brig. Gen. Thomas W. Bowen, deputy senior U.S. adviser in the north, said a heat-seeking missile fired from a handheld launcher shot down a U.S. helicopter southeast of Quang Tri. The four crewman, a U.S. adviser and two Vietnamese were killed.

Gen. Brown said another problem that has arisen is the probability of enemy troops and agents infiltrating toward Hue by mingling with refugees who continue to pour south from the Quang Tri area.

Elsewhere, Communist command forces attacked Landing Zone English, the last major government strong point in northern Binh Dinh Province on the central coast.

President Nguyen Van Thieu met with U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker and Gen. Creighton W. Abrams, U.S. commander in Vietnam, to discuss the worsening situation.

There was no accurate count of South Vietnamese losses in the Quang Tri debacle, the worst reverse yet suffered by government forces in a month-long string of battlefield setbacks.

One senior U.S. officer said the job of reorganizing the South Vietnamese forces scattered at Quang Tri was under way.

The task of putting them back together will be a difficult one, U.S. officers predicted.

The U.S. Command also disclosed the loss of two more jet aircraft in raids over North Vietnam, one of them downed last Thursday when fired on by a Soviet-built MIG.

"Tartans" In Belfast Rampage

BELFAST (AP) — Gangs of teenage Protestants calling themselves Tartans have become a new force on the streets of Northern Ireland. But their elders in the militant Ulster Vanguard movement are telling them to cool it.

Last weekend, Tartans turned out by the hundreds to challenge police and British troops in rampages through the Roman Catholic Short Strand district of East Belfast. They shattered windows, wrecked pubs and homes and started fights with Catholics.

But the Vanguard movement, an organization claiming 100,000 members and headed by former Cabinet minister William Craig, announced Tuesday it had ordered the Tartans to halt their rampages and to meet with police authorities.

The Tartan gangs are a growing symptom of Protestant dislike of what they consider an over-conciliatory attitude by the British government to the Catholic minority.

They say the British, who took all control in Northern Ireland six weeks ago, are soft on the gunmen of the Irish Republican Army, and they fear Britain eventually will force Northern Ireland's Protestant majority into union with the Irish republic.

The immediate cause of last weekend's rioting was the shooting of two young Protestants on the Shankill Road, Belfast's Protestant heartland.

Tartans claim the gunmen were Roman Catholics.

The Tartan's uniform is faded jeans and denim jacket, heavy boots-useful in a fight- and tartan scarf. The Tartan is a symbol of the Scottish strain in the ancestry of most northern Protestants.

Their role in Northern Ireland's current troubles is counterpart to that of the Catholic youngsters who for the past three years have been the spearhead of rioting in Belfast and Londonderry.

Catholic youngsters, skilled with brick and bottle, now are part of the IRA. Their job is to draw troops and police onto the streets where IRA snipers can pick them off.

Castro Raps Nixon Journey

MIAMI (AP) — Apparently seeking to minimize the possibility of a Soviet-American agreement over Cuba, Prime Minister Fidel Castro has expressed "full and absolute confidence" in Russian foreign policy.

The Cuban leader told a large May Day gathering in Havana that President Nixon was making "desperate efforts" to obtain by international diplomacy "what he could not get by force in his aggression against countries such as Vietnam and Cuba."

But, Castro said, "we have no doubt that Nixon's cynical, shameful maneuvers will fail...We have full and absolute confidence in the foreign policy of the Soviet Union."

He did not directly mention Nixon's forthcoming trip to Moscow.

Hoover Dead, Successor Speculated

WASHINGTON (AP)-J. Edgar Hoover, the legendary head of the FBI for 48 years, is dead at 77. President Nixon led the nation in tribute and mourning.

Death came to the bachelor Hoover sometime Monday night or early Tuesday morning at his home where he lived with a housekeeper on the edge of Rock Creek Park in the northwest section of this, his native city. His body was found by a maid at about 8:30 a.m. on the floor near his bed.

His passing was announced "with profound personal grief" by Richard G. Kleindienst, the acting attorney general.

Dr. James. L. Luke, coroner for the District of Columbia, attributed the death to "hypertensive cardiovascular disease," an ailment associated with high blood pressure. A heart attack might have been the direct cause, he said. He added that an autopsy was not indicated, because death was due to natural cause.

The body will lie in state in the Capitol Rotunda from Wednesday morning until 9:30 Thursday morning, and a memorial service will be held there at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

The funeral service will be at the National Presbyterian Church at 11 a.m. Thursday and the President will deliver the eulogy there. He does not plan to attend the Wednesday memorial service.

After the church service, burial will be in Congressional Cemetery in Washington.

Through most of his life, Hoover stirred the patriotism and even devotion of virtually all Americans. But toward the end he attracted the heat of dissidence and, occasionally, criticism from presidential candidates.

As the jut-jawed director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation since 1924, Hoover built a unique anticrime force noted for its pinpoint discipline and freedom from corruption.

"They can't be bought," the proud FBI chief often said of his men.

Ironically, the lifelong foe of communism, whose organization pursued "Reds" and helped prosecute them, probably died on May Day, universally a special day for Communists and Socialists.

President Nixon called Hoover a "truly remarkable man," who served eight presidents with "unparalleled devotion to duty and dedication." And he ordered flags at all public buildings and installations lowered to half staff.

Clyde A. Tolson, No. 2 man at the FBI and Hoover's closest friend, became the acting director. The elevation most likely is temporary. Like Hoover, who was kept on by a number of president, Tolson is past the usual retirement age of 70 for government employes. He will be 72 May 22 and his health is poor.

Speculation about a permanent successor has centered, variously, on Justice Byron R. White of the Supreme Court, Robert C. Mardian, recent head of the Internal Security Division of the Justice Department; the District of Columbia police chief, Jerry V. Wilson; and Los Angeles County Sheriff Peter Pitchess.

The White House would offer no cues.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, the assistant Democratic leader, told the Senate that before talk of a successor "the country ought to be allowed to mourn his passing."

Under legislation passed in 1968 the appointee will be subject to Senate confirmation.

A onetime Presbyterian choir-boy and library messenger who studied law at night, Hoover's first big job with the Justice Department was in World War I when he handled deportation proceedings against "alien agitators." He was named assistant director of the FBI in 1921 and acting director three years later, when he was 29.

Guaranteed by Atty. Gen. Harlan F. Stone that there would be "no politics, no outside interference," Hoover overhauled the bureau, adopted a policy of employing lawyers and accountants as special agents, established a central fingerprint bureau and rose to fixed national prominence after Congress broadened the FBI's role in 1932 by making kidnapping a federal crime.

In the 1930s the bureau enhanced its repuration with its role in the elimination of several notorious gangsters.

South Viets Leaving Kentum

KONTUM, Vietnam (AP)-Menaced by North Vietnamese driving south along Highway 14, the central highlands provincial capital of Kontum is emptying steadily.

Small troop reinforcements continue to come in, but thousands of civilians have fled. Thousands more anxiously flock around aircraft that touch down, seeking a seat to a safer area.

The main street presents a dismal scene. Almost all shops are barred with iron grills or boarded up. The marketplace is deserted.

The few cafes remain in business. Their customers seem to be exclusively South Vietnamese soldiers and their shelves have few stocks other than American C rations and locally grown tropical fruits.

Many local inhabitants seen in the streets carry bundles of belongings as they search for a way out of the city. Others are packing household goods high on trucks.

For 10 days the escape route south to Pleiku has been blocked by the North Vietnamese 95B Regiment at Chu Pao Mountain, but Tuesday civilian traffic was able to pass safely through for a short period.

Helicopters landing at pads where civilians have gathered for evacuation are rushed as they come in. American crewmen on missions, unhappily but firmly, wave off the crowds that gather around them.

"Civilians are panic stricken. They have tipped two helicopters over by clinging to the skids," said one U.S. adviser.

Big U.S. C130 transports are starting to airlift refugees out.

Several times a day, 122mm rockets crash into the airport area. Often they are aimed at the C130s, especially those that bring in the fuel supplies. The pilots are alert and get off the ground within seconds of the first rocket.

Some U.S. military and civilian advisers, mostly in non-tactical positions, and government contract employees are withdrawn from Kontum to Pleiku every night, returning to the city in the morning.

No one knows when the attack will come. Some military authorities believe the North Vietnamese are waiting for bad weather to blunt allied air power. Others say the North Vietnamese are steady consolidating and regrouping their forces and will move when this is completed.

No one doubts that there will be an attack.

Alleged Trial Errors Basis Of Calley Appeal

WASHINGTON (AP)-An appeal for Lt. William L. Calley Jr. claims that "only the rankest form of victor's hypocrisy and command control" has prevented Gen. William Westmoreland from being tried in connection with the My Lai massacre.

Calley was convicted March 29 last year of the murder of at least 22 civilians in the South Vietnamese hamlet during a March 1968 infantry assault. Calley was sentenced by a six-officer court-martial panel to life in prison but the sentence was reduced in review to 20 years.

The appeal claims there were 31 errors in the 4 1/2-month trial and asks that the verdict and the sentence be set aside and charges dismissed.

Westmoreland was charged with dereliction of duty on Sept. 9, 1970, apparently because he was in overall command of American forces in South Vietnam at the time of My Lai.

The appeal said Westmoreland had responsibility for My Lai as a result of the Yamashita case after World War II when that Japanese commander was convicted for misdeeds by subordinates.

The Army has 30 days to answer the Calley appeal but, in such cases, extensions are given freely.

Brown Votes To Drop Naval ROTC

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Faculty members at Brown University voted Tuesday to abolish the 31-year-old Naval ROTC program at the school by June.

The 148-54 vote to terminate the program was not completely binding, but a university spokesman said it would be "very unusual" if President Donald Hornig or the Brown Corporation overruled the faculty's decision.

During a 45-minute debate preceding the decision opponents of the program criticized the Vietnam war and argued the presence of ROTC on the campus gives "a cloak of respectability" to the military.

The resolution endorsed Tuesday said it was the sense of the faculty that a proposed agreement for continuance of the program failed to meet terms of a 1969 faculty resolution, which called for a three-year phase out of NROTC if seven specific guidelines for its continuance were not met.

Included in the 1969 resolution were stipulations that the program be considered extracurricular and that no officer in the program be given faculty status.

The proposed agreement to retain the program, worked out by Hornig, provided that the head of NROTC be given professorial status and that under certain conditions, NROTC courses can carry degree credit.

The Navy opened its ROTC program at Brown in the 1940-41 school year.

Last year the Air Force withdrew its ROTC program as a result of the 1969 faculty resolution.

Longshoremen's President Urges 14.4% Pay Hike Approval

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Thomas W. "Teddy" Gleason of the AFL—CIO International Longshoremen's Association today urged the Pay Board to approve pay increases ranging up to 14.4 per cent for East and Gulf Coast dockworkers.

The Pay Board staff, however, said a strict interpretation of the board's standard regulations would permit increases of only 6.2 per cent.

At issue are union claims that it should be credited for estimated future cost savings from work rules changes. The disagreement surfaced today as the board began public hearings on three major contracts covering the longshoremen.

"Approval of these contracts will assure three years of industrial peace in the longshore industry on the East Gulf Coast," Gleason said in prepared remarks.

He said the pay raises aren't inflationary and are less than the 14.9 per cent raise the board has said it would allow for West Coast dock workers.

In the West Coast case the board rejected a 20.9 per cent first-year pay raise for the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union. For them, the staff had said standard regulations would permit an 8.9 per cent increase, but the board awarded more than that, chiefly on grounds that productivity had increased sharply in the previous decade because the union gave management a free hand to modernize the docks, saving an estimated $1 billion in labor costs.

But the staff argued the East and Gulf Coast workers are entitled to only 6.2 per cent under standard regulations because they cannot qualify for some of the standard exceptions in the regulations. Furthermore, the staff contested the claim of both union and management that changes in work rules will save money in the future.

Mine Fire

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP)-Five persons were known dead and 77 were reported missing Tuesday as fire swept through the nation's largest silver mine, mine spokesmen said.

Spokesmen for the Sunshine Silver Mine in this northern Idaho community said 108 workers were brought up safely after the fire started. There was no immediate work on the condition of the workers still underground.

Observers said the fire appeared to be at the 3,700-foot level main station and smoke was billowing out of the main ventilation shaft.

A spokesman said one miner was brought up suffering from smoke inhalation before the hoist of the main shaft was lost in the fire.

A Bureau of Mines rescue crew, the Kellogg City and Shoshone County fire departments and rescue crews from adjoining mines were at the scene.

Wood Addresses Coop-Extension

NORTHFIELD, Mass. (AP) — University of Massachusetts President Robert Wood spoke at the opening session of a Cooperative Extension Service conference at the Northfield Inn yesterday.

He talked about "The Public Service Mission of the University" at the opening session. Also Dr. A. A. Spielman, director of extension and dean of the UMass College of Agriculture spoke.

WEST SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The Eastern States Exposition Corp. announced Monday it plans to purchase $250,000 of ice-making and related equipment for its coliseum here, to lure a minor league hockey team to West Springfield.

The American Hockey League Springfield Kings are leaving the coliseum next season to play in the new Springfield Civic Center.

The Exposition hopes to attract the New Haven Blades of the Eastern Hockey League until the new Hartford Civic Center is built for them.

NORTHFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A mechanical failure was cited by officials of Northeast Utilities today as the probably cause of the massive flooding of the Northfield Mountain Hydroelectric Power Project 10 days ago.

Charles R. Bragg, vice-president, said, "It now appears that an abnormal condition developed in a hydraulic control cylinder operating the seals at each end of a large spherical valve causing the seals to open."

When they did, some seven million gallons of water poured into the underground powerhouse, inundating $50 million worth of machinery, and delaying start of the plant for six to nine months.

Bragg said verification of the failure will come with weeks of testing. He said the finding almost rules out any question of sabotage of human error at the plant, questions raised when engineers were unable to spot the trouble earlier.

BOSTON (AP) — Nonfarm employment in New England totaled 4.4 million jobs in mid-March, and increase of 14,200 over March of 1971, the U.S. Labor Department reported today.

However, the report noted a loss of 15,200 factory jobs in a year, chiefly in the durable goods area. Employment in making transportation equipment dropped 11,400 in the year.

The biggest increase in jobs over March, 1971, was a 13,100 hike in state and local government posts.

Service and miscellaneous jobs increased by 9,000 wholesale and retail trade by 7,300 and finance, insurance and real estate by 5,000.

Contract construction work dropped 5,900 jobs while federal government employment lost 1,100.

WESTFIELD, Mass. (AP) — The pilot and three passengers of a light aircraft escaped injury Monday night when their craft lost power on a landing approach to Barnes Airport.

Pilot Daniel B. Armstrong, 26, of 40 Linwood St., Andover, guided the Cessna 172 past trees and power lines for a safe landing in a nearby potato field.

Two of the passengers were identified. They were Carol Wojcik, of Westfield, and Ronald Kimball, of Cherryhill, N.Y.

Federal Aviation Administration officials at Barnes said the plane apparently lost its power when its carburetor iced up.

Cajuns Celebrate Fish Rites

BREAUX BRIDGE, La., April 30-La Poussiere is a dance hall at the edge of town. To understand what is happening in Breaux Bridge this weekend, one must understand La Poussiere.

It is a Saturday night. The people have eaten dinner-that is important-and now they are sipping whisky, listening to a loud Cajun band and dancing. At least 200 people from 16 to 80 years of age are crowded onto a barely lit wooden dance floor that is no more than 40 feet by 40.

A man who appears to be in his mid-70's explodes from the crowd, fixes a wild eye on a good-looking woman who appears to be in her mid-20's and without introduction sweeps her onto the dance floor.

"Are you married,?" he asks.

"Yes, yes," she replies. She is lying, but it does not matter; he ignores her reply.

A Sharp Reproof

He swings her listily to the middle of the floor, into the relative anonumity of the crowd, and immediately makes a bold proposition with his body. She reproves him sharply.

"Well, some womens likesit, some womens don't," he says in a Cajun accent and dances on, utterly unabashed.

The bienniel Breaux Bridge crawfish festival, going on this weekend, is Saturday night at La Poussiere multiplied by one hundred. Officially, it is held to pay homage to the crawfish (crayfish, as it is spelled among outsiders), a freshwater crustacean resembling a small lobster that the people of this region not only eat but have also turned into a $50-million-a -year business. But in fact, the festival is two days of almost uninterrupted music, food, drink, dancing and the play if not the actuality of sex.

This lusty celebration of the senses is carried on with a wholeheartedness that may be peculiar, among Americans, to the people of south Louisiana. The crawfish festival is one of dozens of spring festivals held each spring in the villages and towns of French-speaking south Louisiana, where the Mediterranean outlook still prevails.

Trouble Arises

But there is trouble in paradise. Some believe it is serious enough to threaten the future of the festivals.

The long-standing rites of spring in this area have been discovered by the young from other regions. The young outsiders, turning the puritan ethic of their fathers on its head, try to outcelebrate the Lousianians. Some of the thousands who come inevitably end up in orgies of drunkenness and destructiveness that appall the residents. Two towns, Mansura and Pierre Port, abolished their festivals this year because of the influx of young people.

Breaux Bridge, a 113-year-old town of 5,000 persons on the slow, winding Bayou Teche, is a relative latecomer among the festival towns. It started the crawfish festival in 1960. But vandalism and rampage by outsiders have caused so much anxiety already that the town's leaders have considered abolishing it. They decided to try again this year with more policemen and a prohibition on glass bottles.

"This is a conservative town," Woodrow Marshall, an organizer of the festival, said today. "Of course, there's no conservatism in the good time—clean good time."

And what is clean good time?

"Dancing, guzzling," he said. "Guzzling to the point you're good and happy. But drunkenness is not looked upon as a good time."

So far this weekend, drunkenness and destructiveness have been minimal, even though thousands of young men and women have come from other places in old automobiles and vans and on motorcycles. The town officials estimated yesterday's crowd at 50,000.

That included a few dozen elderly couples who are members of an Airstream trailers club. They park their expensive trailers under the large oaks at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Horris Champagne. While the younger crowds on the packed streets downtown ate boiled crawfish and threw the discarded red heads in the gutters, the guests of the Champagnes sat on the quiet bank of the bayou and ate a gourmet dish called crawfish etouffe, which, according to her friends, Mrs. Champagne invented about 1949.

There is continuous live music from at least two places downtown, and occasionally from three or four. Crawfish, beer and wine can be bought about every 50 feet.

The festive activity has not stopped for two days, except for a few hours early today for sleep and church. There has been a parade with the newly elected Cajun Governor, Edwin Edwards, as the main participant.

A crawfish queen was crowned and there were crawfish eating and peeling contests, crawfish races.

Northern interests have had mixed luck. A native of Pitman, N.J., named Chester McGear won the eating contest by putting away 20-1/2 pounds of crawfish (weight before peeling.)

The Liberation Strategy In S. Vietnam

(LNS)--(The straight papers don't like to talk too much about the liberation strategy in Vietnam, probably because it is working so well. They concentrate instead on the big "event" of the day--bombing of Hanoi and Haiphong, big land battles, all of which should be covered. But while they look for the hotspots they leave what is probably the most exciting event uncovered--the liberation of South Vietnam and how it is happening.)

Ever since the current offensive began, the NLF's People's Liberation Armed Forces have been drawing Saigon troops to the far corners of South Vietnam, pinning them down, and systematically destroying them as effective fighting units. In the meantime, other areas are left unprotected. While the papers and military worry loudly and publicly about the possible loss of one or another provincial capital, smaller units of the PLAF are going about the task of dismantling the "Pacification Program" throughout the countryside.

A key part of the liberation strategy is their drive to encourage ARVN desertions. On January 25, when North Vietnam and the PRG announced their new reconciliation policy, they called for Vietnamese civilians in the south to protect the young from being conscripted into the Saigon Army, while calling for those already in the ARVN to desert. The statement offered amnesty for civil servants and police who still have to work under the Saigon government but who "protect the people's lives and property" and "refrain from brutality."

The program has had incredible success. Tom Fox, reporting from Saigon for Dispatch News Service, cited as an example the 500 men of the 56th Regiment, 3rd Division, stationed at Camp Carrol in Quang Tri Province in the far north, who crossed over to the Liberation Forces on April 2. He also reported that individual desertions have been high.

Not all ARVN deserters join the Liberation Forces; those who simply want to return home are offered help in safe traveling if they need it.

This strategy is the utmost test of Vietnamization and of the PRG's drive to create a new government of national concord including all elements other than Thieu and his most loyal followers. And it has American officials worried. Tom Fox quoted one as saying, "If a mass desertion begins, it could easily snowball." The official couldn't bring himself to admit that it had probably already begun.

Liberation Forces have enticed President Thieu to send thousands of ARVN relief troops (including the entire 21st Division from the Mekong Delta) up Highway 13 from Saigon to rescue the reseiged forces in the provincial capital of An Loc.

The Liberation Forces then proceeded to pin down and systematically wipe out the relief columns, which are now not only cut off from their destination at An Loc, but are prevented from retreating southward to Saigon by attacks from the rear.

On April 18, while Thieu's forces were pinned down on Highway 13, the Liberation Forces opened a new front in Cambodia by cutting Highway 1 between Phnom Penh and Saigon. This front has drawn westward remnants of the 21st Division which were still able to move.

The following day, this same ARVN Division found itself outflanked to the south by Liberation Forces which had attacked the nerve center of all ARVN operations in the region at Kai Khe, just 25 miles north of Saigon on Highway 13. With the 21st Division moving westward, the ARVN remnants on Highway 13 are decisively cut off, with little hope of rescue. The New York Times has conceded that at this point the main concern for troops along Highway 13 is "survival."

Meanwhile, by his efforts to protect the northern defense perimeter of Saigon on Highway 13, Thieu has left the Mekong Delta to the south of the capital, without a regular army defense. U.S. newspapers have said very little about the Delta, but Radio Hanoi has reported an endless string of uprisings, village liberations, defeats of local ARVN units, and a general dismantling of "pacification." On April 13, Hanoi's "People's Army Daily" hailed the victories in the Delta as among the most important in the current offensive.

Attacking in Binh Long province northwest of Saigon, Liberation Forces provoked Thieu into sending the only available main force units that remained in the Delta after an original 10,000 men had been sent to the DMZ to defend Quang Tri in the far north. Thieu ordered them to hold onto every inch of territory. While they were trying to hold on to inches in An Loc, the Delta could only be held with "regional and popular forces" and some sub-standard main force units of the Saigon Army.

As the battles now pass beyond An Loc to Lai Khe (25 miles north of Saigon) and as the liberation of the Delta (to the south of the capital) proceeds swiftly, Saigon itself is rapidly becoming another Phnom Penh--an immense city with millions of people driven there by U.S. bombing, cut off from the countryside, dependent on the U.S. for material survival.

As people swarm into the larger cities to escape the war, the Liberation Forces have refrained from all acts of war against the cities. Since the experience of the Tet offensive in 1968, it is common knowledge that anytime "NVA" or "VC" are reported anywhere, including the cities, U.S. advisers and Saigon commanders will immediately call in air strikes to dislodge them.

When Secretary of State William Rogers, predicted a bloodbath in the cities if "the Communists took over," he knew exactly what he was talking about. If the Liberation Forces set foot in the cities, Washington has made it clear by the example of Dong Ha and An Loc that it is ready to "defend the cities" in the same way that it has defended ARVN firebases threatened by the Liberation Forces. Just as in the town of Ben Tre, which was totally flattened by U.S. bombs during the 1968 Tet offensive, Washington is quite prepared to "destroy the city in order to save it."

In the central highlands, the Liberation Forces are attacking on several fronts. Already, 5000 ARVN troops are retreating, abandoning a string of fire bases which had earlier been termed "vital" to the defense of the city of Kontum. Other ARVN troops are trapped in the area to the northwest of Kontum. The entire 22nd ARVN Division has been put out of action. After the towns of Tancanh and Dakto fell on April 24, reports stated the Liberation Forces "appeared to be on their way to cutting South Vietnam in two."

The Liberation Army is fighting and winning now in South Vietnam. (LNS)

Couple Arrested For "Lewd Act"

MADISON, WISC. (LNS)-Acting in accordance with Wisconsin's new "No Knock" law and with a valid search warrant, the Madison Metro Squad busted down the door of Beth and John Freugel's apartment at 9 a.m. one morning in Jan. supposedly looking for heroin.

The narcs surprised the Freugals (married for six years) making love in bed. Their five year old daughter, Donna, was playing near the door to the bedroom, which was open at the time the cops barged in.

The Metro Squad, unable to find the heroin described in the search warrant as hidden in the "cookie jar above the kitchen cabinet", decided to bust the Freugals for "lewd and lascivious conduct".

Wisconsin's lewd and lascivious statute says that whoever commits an indecent act of sexual gratification with another with knowledge that they are in the presence of others may be fined not more than $500 or imprisoned not more than one year or both.

Beth and John Freugal have been charged with "lewd and lascivious conduct" and he has also been charged with another violation of the same statute because when the cops busted in, "Mr. Freugal withdrew from Mrs. Freugal, exposing his sex organ to the vision of Donna Freugal, a minor."

Pending the outcome of the trial of the Freugals, their daughter Donna will remain in the Juvenile Shelter so that her parents cannot have an opportunity to influence her testimony.

Nixon Is A Baddie

LONDON (LNS) — Nobody much loves Tricky Dick Nixon it seems--at least not on the other side of the Atlantic. Visitors to Mme. Tussaud's Waxworks in London have voted him the third most hated or feared personality, putting him somewhere between Hitler and Jack the Ripper. Dracula came in a little further down the list.

In Amsterdam, Nixon came in top of the baddies.

Jumpy police and military patrols had just riddled this house in Santo Domingo with bullets. They claimed they had been fired at by snipers and then dragged off by a couple of youths.

Jackson State Police Acquitted

BILOXI, Miss. (LNS)--There were rebel yells and plenty of back slapping among the Mississippi Highway patrolmen in this Gulfcoast town recently. An all white jury returned with an acquittal verdict in a $13.8 million suit brought against the patrolmen by nine wounded students and the families of two slain students-victims of the Mississippi Highway Patrol at Jackson State College on May 14, 1970.

The suit was brought against more than 50 Mississippi State patrolmen and Jackson city police along with city and state officials who were responsible for the mass attack.

The 200 round barrage of shotgun and automatic weapons fire came at the end of two days of demonstrations following Nixon's Cambodian invasion in the spring of 1970. Lawmen, white newsmen, and black students conflicted over the question of whether sniper fire from Alexander Hall (a woman's dorm) or rock and bottle throwing from students in front of the dorm touched off the twenty-eight second barrage.

However, there are several points of fact which cannot be disputed. Every lawman except one who fired weapons testified that he shot into the air or at a window on the third floor of Alexander Hall's west wing. But an FBI examination and photographs of the location showed clearly that there were bullet marks on the entire front of the building on all floors and also in the opposite direction from the alleged sniper. Further, both of the students who were killed and most of those wounded were standing on the ground in front of the dorm when they were hit.

Because the victims were all black, the Jackson State killings have not received the national attention that the fatal shooting of 4 white Kent State students has. Nor has it received the same treatment in the judicial system.

A county grand jury and a federal grand jury reviewed the evidence on Jackson State, but neither returned any indictments. The President's Commission on Campus Unrest found the attack by the patrolmen "Completely unwarranted and unjustified," but the Nixon administration took no action on the matter.

On the contrary, the Justice Department recessed a federal investigation of the incident and refused to turn over files pertaining to the incident to the plaintiffs in the damage suit until ordered to do so by the federal judge presiding over the case in Biloxi.

Revolution And Repression In The Dominican Republic

NEW YORK (LNS) — Repression is a well known word in the Dominican Republic. It has been part of Domincan history during the Spanish conquest, during the series of dictatorships which ruled the island after independence from Spain in 1863, during the revolutionary uprising in 1965, put down by direct U.S. intervention, and it continues today.

In 1970, one Dominican was assassinated on an average of every 34 hours by the police and/or a right wing terrorist group known as "La Banda."

The current wave of repression reached a new high in January of this year with the assassination of four young revolutionaries: Amaury German Aristy, 24; Virgilio Eugenio Perdomo Perez, 28; Bienvenido Leal Prandy, 32; and Ulises Arquimedes Ceron Polanco, 33.

All four had a long history of struggle, first in the university and then in the revolutionary armed movements which began in the mountains in 1959, two years before the dictator Rafael Trujillo was toppled. All four were commanders of armed units during the 1965 revolution and leaders in the post-1965 rural and urban guerrilla movements. They were killed in an eighteen hour battle against 2,000 Dominican troops, armed with helicopters, tanks, cannons, U.S. advisors and a North American airplane. Even against those incredible odds, however, they managed to kill eight and wound seven of the government forces.

The death rate caused by government repression in the Dominican Republic is the highest in Latin America. Recent statistics published by the World Council of Churches show the Dominican death rate, either by systematic assassinations or "disappearance" (i.e. kidnappings of people presumably killed afterwards) climbed to one person every twenty-four hours in 1971. Deaths or disappearances have averaged one every two days for the past six years.

Unemployment in Santo Domingo, the capital, is over 35 per cent. Just 455 landowners control over 30 per cent of the country's cultivatable land.

These same large landowners employ less than three per cent of the agricultural workers and pay them about $1.00 for 8 to 10 hours of hard work. Only 11 per cent of the people drink milk; 4 per cent eat meat and 2 per cent eat eggs. Just 1 per cent can eat fish, although fish are plentiful around this island.

Most Dominicans see only four ways to escape this misery--winning a lottery ticket (poverty stricken Dominicans buy more than $1.2 million worth of lottery tickets each month); prostitution; presidential patronage for a job or house; or a travel visa to the United States. The immigration rate to the United States is the highest of any Latin American country except Puerto Rico.

At the beginning of the current regime under President Joaquin A. Balaguer in 1966, these assassinations were usually performed by the police. In a strategy to confuse public opinion, Balaguer kept switching police chiefs, which directed public indignation against individual police and not toward the government of Balaguer himself.

But the killings and public reaction reached such a point that the U.S. and Dominican governments decided to create "secret" paramilitary forces or terrorist groups. Organized and directed by the police, they recruited their members from arrested ex-leftists as well as police veterans.

The first of these terrorists groups was called "Los Incontrolables," or "The Uncontrollables." The government attributed the assassinations carried out by this group to conflicts between "extremist groups" of the left and continued its planned extermination of all those actively opposing the regime.

Later an even more brutal organization "La Juventud Reformista Cristiana Anti-Comunista," popularly known as "La Banda," was born, and it is this group that remains active to this day.

The abuses perpetrated by "La Banda" are such that even the Dominicans, so well acquainted with incredible cases of repression, are shocked. Schools at all levels, suspected of harboring left wing activists or even sympathizers, have been raided, equipment has been smashed, and teachers as well as students have been assaulted and stabbed. Numerous owners of small shops have been threatened and compelled to make "gifts" to "La Banda's" members.

On several occasions police officers were spotted working with or witnessing their acts. In fact, the personal bodyguard of a former national police chief was accused of leading "La Banda." When one of their members was successfully executed by revolutionary forces, a "La Banda" leader declared on television that his group would assassinate five members of the left. Their bodies were found shortly afterward spread out over Santo Domingo, an open threat to the populace.

There is no doubt that the strategy behind these terrorists groups comes straight from Washington, D.C. With the help of U.S. police and military stationed there, very similar groups employing the same tactics have "spontaneously" arisen in several Latin American countries, including Brazil and Guatemala. Their goal is to exterminate revolutionary leaders as well as their sympathizers, including some liberals, and to impede the effective mobilization of the people.

New Politics? Hope So

After the failure of riots, occupations and demonstrations to produce any permanent change radicals and the like, all those who wanted to effect some change turned to the system, i.e. politics.

On one level that was fine. We were never going to win the revolution. The troops weren't willing to take the casualties, if indeed they ever should have taken any at all.

The problem though is that politics is corrupting as all hell. On the campus you have "student leaders" who are our (the students) first line of defense between the trustees, administration and the "outside world". They look after our interest to the best of their abilities, fighting rent hikes, tuition increases and policies that they or the "students" don't like.

It's good that they are there, undoubtedly without them this place would be worse than it is (It can get worse).

The problem though is that to work within the system, politics, you have to be a politician, and as was said before, politics is corrupting as all hell. With our student leaders it's not in a material sense. No one is handing out grease under the table. Rather, it's a corruption of morality. Students who before they entered the leader stage were more or less what we are all supposed to try and be, good freaks, gentle, not out to screw anybody, up front in their dealings and the other philosophies espoused by Kesey, Leary, Ginsburg etc., are changed.

They are still out to protect student interests, but do it in a way that if someone was doing it to you, (The administration, trustees, etc.) you'd be screaming to high heaven and go running looking for someone to defend you. Well that happened, and you got the people, but the only way they could defend you successfully was to sell out their morals. From the freak to the radical politician. Which, while making it more tolerable to live here day to day does nothing to change the basic rot in the system, which has caused all the problems in the first place.

The theory given above also holds true for third party politics. If you read the paper you should be aware by now of the new political party in Amherst–the Tea Party.

Eric Walgren, alias the Rat, was the fuse and match for the deal, while Ken Kesey in his visit of two months ago provided the powder. Kesey when at Amherst College (starting a third party there?) said he was going around the country to provide some impetus to oppressed people, (which includes all of us) to use the system as the straight politicians use it. He pointed out that the system as set up has to respond to the people, if the people work to make it respond. What keeps Nixons, Johnsons, Mitchells, maybe even Kennedys, in power is not their great attraction to the masses. No, it's just that the masses have been too lazy to get off their asses and throw them out. Kesey's message was one that needed to be given. It's not the system but the people, and the people is you.

So Eric and the Tea Party are fine. They say the things that we are all supposed to like; and they are right if we have any sense we'll get on the truck and do something.

But again, the problem of corruption arises. They won't be bought out, rather to get the things they want they'll become politicians. They'll get power, and unless the candidates the Tea Party runs for an office are hopefully, elected, are virtual philosopher kings, they aren't going to give up the power they get. It may not happen too soon, but one of these days they'll start thinking of the election coming up in a year, look around and realize that they can't really do anything else, and the power is nice and the pay, prestige, press...and soon they won't be doing what's right, but what will get them re-elected.

So nothing would be changed. For the moment the people we have ruling us will be benevolent. But what if someone doesn't like drugs, or wants to own a gun, or do something that the "new" politicians don't like. Does he get shot down, just as we are getting shot down now? Will it be just, can we be so sure we are right? The Tea Party deserves our support, but we have to change things without consecrating politicians and bureaucrats of our own, or nothing will be changed at all.

The Right To Choose...

By ANN EGAN

"For years women have been under constant pressure to have children. Our culture teaches us that we are not complete women unless we have children. Our husbands and boyfriends encourage us to bear children as proof of their masculinity. Contraception is always our responsibility. Contraceptives that are known to be safe are not always effective; contraceptives that are known to be effective are not always safe. Abortion is illegal, and women who get abortions often risk their lives.

"Other pressures compel some of us not to have children. If we are unmarried, we become social outcasts by bearing children. Those of us who are poor and live on welfare know that opponents of welfare want to limit the size of our families. We are pressured to use contraceptives or be sterilized; each time we have another child the meager allowance per child gets even smaller. Population control advocates tell us that overpopulation is the reason our environment is polluted ....

"We want control over our own bodies. We are tired of being pressured to have or not to have children. It's our decision."

Thus begins a pamphlet put out by Women Vs. Connecticut, a group of over 1,000 women who have filed a suit challenging the constitutionality of the Connectcut abortion law. This quote from the introduction to their pamphlet expresses the goals of their struggle, and it is a good summary of the feelings of thousands of women across the country who are fighting for legal abortion as a step toward gaining control over our bodies and our lives.

This simple, just demand of women has created a furor of debate and opposition from all quarters-more than any other single women's liberation demand. The male priests, politicians and doctors who are shouting the loudest against women having the right to control their bodies have no idea what the fear of pregnancy and of forced motherhood means to a woman. They have no concern for the torment and constant worry that accompanies any sexual activity, because they must face the possible consequences. They have no despair that untold numbers of women have suffered from having their whole lives determined by the responsibility to care for one child after another.

The feminist movement is saying that women have the right to be free of this crushing burden, to be sexual beings without that fear, and to be able to devote our lives to, and fulfill ourselves in, any area we may choose. This right to control our own bodies is a necessary step in the struggle of women to win their complete liberation.

This campaign can show that the feminist movement is serious and that it is fighting for basic changes that women need and want. By putting the government on the spot, launching a fight that can realisitically win victories, the abortion campaign can give an impetus to the feminist movement as a whole and begin to cut across the myth that women cannot organize as an effective political power.

The fact that the opponents of women's liberation have chosen this issue as the focal point of their counterattack on the women's movement emphasizes the importance of the abortion issue. Anti-abortion forces have been mobilizing in increasing numbers, aiming at replacing the New York abortion law, the most liberal in the country. Last Sunday over 10,000 people attended a demonstration called by the Knights of Columbus and other reactionary forces, calling for the repeal of the New York law. The rally was followed by such scenes as happened in the New York legislature on April 18, when a dozen women ran screaming into the assembly, demanding an end to what they called "fetus- cide".

Faced with this pressure, the New York legislature has so far pulled several bills out of committee. The New York law, which has served as a stop-gap for women all over the country, is in serious danger of being heavilly watered-down.

The women's liberation movement is obliged to meet this attack head-on and escalate our fight for the repeal of all abortion laws. May 1-6 has been designated as Abortion Action Week. During the week, there will be local activities throughout the country culminating on Saturday, May 6, with rallies which will be held in cities all over America and all over the world to demand an end to all contraception and abortion laws, and an end to forced sterilization. In Boston, Suffragist Florence Luscomb, playwright Myrna Lamb and WONAAC National Project Director Barbara Roberts, among others, will speak at the rally at 1:00 on the Boston Common opposite the State House. There will be a march leaving at 12:00 from Copley Square for the rally site.

In the face of these attacks, it is especially important that we increase the strength and pressure of the pro-abortion movement, that we insist on a woman's right to choose. We must insist on an end to all laws that keep a woman from deciding what she is to do with her body. RALLY MAY 6!

'PLEASE THANK MR. NIXON FOR HIS SUPPORT, BUT TELL HIM HE IS JUST TOO KIND!'

Letters To The Editor

Where, Oh Where?

To the Editor:

Where, on our campus, amid cancerous apathy is there deep, reverent commitment? Where, among dour pessimism is there joyous hope; amidst disillusionment, faith? Where, despite masses of nameless faces and punch card ID's is there fellowship? Many students are listening for someone to say assuredly, "this is the way". The Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship is whispering that very message.

For those who wonder whatever happened to the Bible-waving freaks, some of them are here. They are not an "underground" group any more, as they were forced to be near the turn of the century. College authorities then were antagonistic towards "religious fanaticism." Yet the scattered groups persevered, and propagated. Many of these early Christian assemblies were the beginnings of our fraternities. Today, the groups are banded together in IV, and form an integral part of the University. It exists among heavily diversified religious attitudes - agnostic, atheist, Christian (devout and otherwise), and an assortment of other faiths. In this respect, the University is naturally considered a home-front mission field.

IV member's underlying purpose is evangelical - not to focus attention on themselves, but to prepare themselves to spread the gospel to fellow students through Bible study, discussion groups, and prayer. IV president Dave Barszewski says the group's purpose is "to become stronger in spirit so that we may share the Good News with those who don't know Christ yet." It is this belief, says Dave, "that Christ is risen, alive, and our personal Lord and Saviour", that speaks of unity and commitment. Obligations to the group are secondary to the commitment to Jesus Christ - to invite Him into our lives and operate according His plan.

IV, like other Christian groups, is experiencing a period of recognition that follows the trail of the Jesus Revolution. So they have suddenly been renamed "Bible nuts" and "Jesus Freaks". Such tags are appropriate in that they suggest an uncommon zeal for a most worthy cause.

IV has plans for the coming weeks and for fall. The group sponsors a book table in the C.C. Concourse on Tuesdays, will invite speakers oriented to both Christian and non-Christian audiences, is working on social events, an off-campus Christian community, and a membership drive to attract drifting campus Christians.

"In the Bible, Hebrews 10:25 says, 'forsake not the assemblying of yourselves' ", quotes Dave, "so we want to increase our fellowship to become closer to the Lord and each other." And indeed, they are close, but not closed. IV is open to anyone who realizes that Christ came "so that ye might have life, and have it more abundantly." In these closing weeks, IV invites Christians into their fellowship in the joyful spirit with which they invited Christ into their lives. Meetings are Mondays, 7:30 P.M., 811 C.C.

Where's Fagaf Now?

To the Editor:

As a former student of Mike Best's I was tempted to write a testimonial on his skills as a teacher and on his friendship which I value. Others have done this better than I could have, so I'll simply reaffirm their evaluation of Mike's worth and my malaise with the Economic's Department narrow-minded decision.

I would raise one further question. Why haven't any Faculty members, especially those conservatives who chant the phrase "academic freedom" hypnotically, come forward and demand an investigation of what is going on in the Economics Department? A group of Faculty from outside the department should be charged to look into these widely circulated allegations, for certainly "academic freedom" is jeopardized when arbitrary firings take place and Graduate students are afraid to sign their name to Coliegian articles? A Faculty concerned with unionization, should be willing to take care of their own house cleaning.

Impressive

To the Editor:

An Open Letter to the Department of Economics Personnel Committee, U. Mass.

As faculty members in the Valley who know Professor Michael Best we were puzzled and dismayed to learn of your recommendation to terminate his contract after next year. Many of us have participated with Mike in faculty seminars on political economy organized by social scientists in the Five College area; several have taught courses with him, read papers he has written, attended workshops and symposia in which he participated actively. In these varied settings, we have been impressed by Professor Best's expansive intellect and his ability to illuminate difficult issues. Some of us have observed directly, and all of us have heard students testify to, his remarkable energy and skill as a teacher.

While we do not always agree with his interpretation, each of us finds Mike's critiques of dominant economic theories to be thoughtful and insightful. Especially valuable is his ability to communicate effectively across established disciplinary boundaries.

Indeed, one would naturally assume that his excellence in teaching and breadth of scholarly interests would be welcomed by the Economics Department which has been advised by an outside committee of eminent economists to "broaden the base of the teaching staff" and to include more scholars who "have the ability to communicate their enthusiasm as well as their analytical expertise to undergraduates."

What could account, then, for the discrepancy in this case between your judgment and that of numerous students and faculty who know Professor Best? Perhaps a lack of diversity on your committee, which surely does not represent the broad spectrum of opinion in the economics profession, has weakened your ability to assess sympathetically the promise of a young scholar whose approach to economics diverges from your own. It is with this possibility in mind that we write to inform you of our favorable assessment and that we urge you to reconsider your negative recommendation. However, since this is the second year in a row that your committee has voted against Professor Best despite persuasively supportive testimony from graduate students in economics, undergraduates, and faculty, we are not at all confident that you will be moved to launch a serious reappraisal now. We have chosen, therefore, to present our assessment to the wider university community in the hope that our judgment can serve as a corrective to yours.

Some people seem to forget that liberation is not a right given just to certain traditional groups. Quoting Fredrick Douglass, "How can a man be free, while his brother is in slavery?" Roll Up The Sleeve

To the Editor:

Through this Thursday the Red Cross is going to be at UMass Campus Center to get blood. This is a message to all who claim to care about people. Now you have a chance to show it. You do not have to spend two years in the Peace Corps. All you have to do is give the one gift that money cannot replace. Last year in this country ten thousand people died from hepatitis, because the blood needed to save their lives had to be bought from skid row derelict types. There were just not enough voluntary donors. Last semester when the Red Cross came here to get blood, all they got from a community of about twenty-five thousand people in all was around seven hundred pints. That was a disgrace! If you are in good health, you have a moral responsibility to roll up your sleeve. The pain involved is slight, far less than that one suffers in dying from hepatitis because no one cared to let him live. Your heart may bleed gallons for others, but it will all be a lie if you will not let your arm bleed one pint. There is no need to stretch this out any further. You all know what you have to do. Consider this a referendum on how many hypocrites there are on campus.

I'm A Little Teapot

To the Editor:

The Tea Party's Birthday Convention, held last Saturday at UMass, to organize a local third party, was a flop.

As the party stood for vital student issues like rent-control, cooperative dorms, Student-Faculty Legislature, stopping University and Town growth, and community control of the police, fewer than 150 people wandered in and out. Publicity was substantial and, although circumstances may have been untimely, poor timing does not explain the low turnout.

I conclude that local college people, as a body, are not ripe for self-government. But I keep the Faith. The Old Stage was protest; the New Stage is self-government. It requires a whole new vision. If it is happening in Berkeley now, it will happen here in five years. The Tea Party is laying the foundation.

The original committee of 10 found 10 new people making a party of 20. A new political baby is born.

A Planning Workshop of the Tea Party will be held at the Center for Social Change in the basement of Munson Hall this Thursday at 8 p.m. We will take stock of ourselves and map out a summer approach to high school students and other townspeople.

Membership is open, participants and observers are welcome.

Fascist Isolation

To the Editor:

When I graduated from high school, I chose to go to the United States Air Force Academy; being the son of a career officer in the Air Force I was going to follow in my father's footsteps. Two years later I resigned, desirous of seeing more of the "outside world" and by then uncertain as to whether or not I wanted a lifetime of military service. Nearly a year was to pass before I became opposed to our activities in Southeast Asia by that time I had gained a fuller understanding of what the Academy had been trying to do to me.

Those who oppose the presence of ROTC on the UMass campus are forgetting that if all such programs were abolished the responsibility of producing officers for the armed services would fall solely on the shoulders of the militarists who run the academies and the officer training schools, both of which are virtually isolated from public opinion (cadets at the Air Force Academy affectionately call it the "blue womb"). At least in a university ROTC program, future officers are exposed every day to opinions contrary to those of the military establishment. Just possibly, such exposure will aid them in becoming something more than mindless, commie-hating cogs in the military machine. As long as the armed services exist (and their demise does not appear imminent), it is important that the chance for such possibilities be left open. To let the fascist fighters train their own leaders in isolation is to further endanger the little freedom and few chances for peace that we have left in the United States today.

Peace

Career News

Overseas Careers Depend On You

Is an International Career still a feasible prospect for a student approaching graduation?

According to the Journal of College Placement, the answer to this question depends primarily upon the individual. Various factors such as an apparent de-emphasis on cross-cultural understanding by the government, universities, and businesses in general, as well as a currently prevalent anti-American sentiment in many European countries have provided a somewhat more negative atmosphere than in previous years. But success or failure is still basically up to the individual-his ability to achieve company objectives in spite of all the political, social, or economic discrepancies that one finds when crossing cultural lines.

The International Career aspirant faces obvious psychological hardships. Aside from the initial language barrier, he may run into opposing attitudes, values, and beliefs. Moreover, physical factors: climate, allergies, the sanitary conditions of the area to which he is sent can exert a major influence. The first reaction of the assignee is to go home. And many do. Research indicates that from 20 to as high as 50% of the Americans sent to work overseas return before their assignments are completed. (These figures are somewhat lower in those companies that have cross-cultural training programs.) The Peace Corps holds the best record with only 5-7% failing to complete tours.

Therefore, when examining applicants for International Careers, the employer will be primarily concerned with the applicant's adaptive and coping abilities. The ability to communicate and work effectively with others will probably be studied more closely than the applicant's previous record of achievement. A high achiever in college may suffer more from lack of achievement in the first adaptive period of his mission overseas than the person who can pass the adapting stage more easily and rapidly. This is, of course, a subjective consideration and will vary according to the employer and type of company. The applicant should, however, have a college degree, preferably in an internationally-oriented field (business, economics, finance, politics, etc.).

If all this sounds formidable, it is supposed to. An International Career requires a resourceful and determined character. But, as with all challenging or high-risk endeavors, for the successful, the reward is correspondingly high.

Explo '72 To Take Place In Dallas

By STEPHEN FISHER

"People have tried everything else...now, by elimination, they're coming back to God. The hope for our nation and the world rests in a great spiritual awakening!" said Dr. Bill Bright, president and founder of Campus Crusade for Christ International.

Explo '72, a Campus Crusade for Christ International-sponsored training conference, will take place in Dallas June 12-17, 1972. Coordinators of the conference anticipate 100,000 delegates.

The conference, officially called the "International Student Congress on Evangelism", "will launch a strategy to train 500,000 people during 1972 for a spiritual explosion across America and around the world," stated Bright recently.

UMass will be represented, according to local Campus Crusade director John Fitz. Fitz will be leading a UMass contingent of about 30 students who have been active within the evangelical group.

Billy Graham has been named Honorary Chairman of Explo '72 and will speak to the assembly of delegates. Dallas convention coordinators estimate that the total gathering, with an anticipated attendance of 100,000, will be the largest training conference ever held in America.

Highlighting Explo '72 will be nightly mass meetings for the entire 100,000 in the Cotton Bowl. All of the seats and the playing field will be needed to accommodate the delegates each evening. Climaxing the conference will be a huge "Jesus Festival" for an anticipated 250,000 on a hillside near Dallas. National television coverage is planned for the major meetings.

"Operation Penetration", to follow Explo '72, will build a "might army of faith" throughout the U.S. More than 100 additional training conferences will be held across the country as a part of this follow-up.

The Explo '72 delegates will reach vast numbers of students and laymen. "Potentially 1/2 million people could be trained during the summer of 1972" said Campus Crusade president Bill Bright. "We are seeking to saturate the entire nation with the claims of Jesus Christ by 1976."

Interdenominational Campus Crusade, headquartered at Arrowhead Springs, near San Bernadino, Cal., has about 3,000 full-time staff members working in 45 countries.

Anyone interested in obtaining more information about Explo '72 should contact Larry Showalter, 24 Brittany Manor, Amherst, 253-5506.

Godfrey Closes Radio Career

The voice of Arthur Godfrey, a fixture on network radio for 27 years, went off the air Sunday a few seconds before 2 P.M. as the entertainer closed out a broadcasting career that spanned the major part of the history of commercial broadcasting.

Mr. Godfrey, who at his peak made $1,500 for every minute of air time he put in, was one of the last of the old-line network radio entertainers.

Klee To Lecture "Shapes Of Future"

Professor Victor Klee of the University of Washington and IBM will discuss "Shape of the Future" in 134 Hasbrouck Hall at 4:00 on Friday, May 5.

Professor Klee plans to talk about some unsolved mathematical problems which arise in the study of various branches of science. He intends to present geometric material relating to such topics as the Fermi surface of a metal, the distribution of spherical pollen grains of the places at which a pollen tube can emerge, and the development of an efficient codification procedure for the structures of organic chemistry.

The mathematical notions involved are of an elementary nature and should be well within the grasp of interested scientists.

Junior Year in New York

Washington Square College of Arts and Science of New York University sponsors a Junior Year in New York.

The College, located in the heart of the city, is an integral part of the exciting metropolitan community of New York City—the business, cultural, artistic, and financial center of the nation. The city's extraordinary resources greatly enrich both the academic program and the experience of living at New York University with the most cosmopolitan student body in the world.

This program is open to students recommended by the deans of the colleges to which they will return for their degrees.

There are strong and varied offerings in many areas, such as fine arts, urban studies, languages including non-European, mathematics in the College and at the Courant Institute, psychology, and others.

A qualified student may register for courses in all other schools of the University, including the specializations in Commerce and Education.

The University sponsors programs in Spain and France.

Students Awarded Trip To Tunis

Professor David Biddle has announced that five students from his course in Elementary Arabic have been awarded full scholarships for the study of Arabic this summer. Mr. Bernard Barbour a senior at Amherst College will be at the University of Tunis, Tunisia for eight weeks. Mr. Barbour will begin graduate studies in the Department of Near Eastern Studies at Princeton this fall on a grant from the Ford Foundation. Mr. Howard Pearlman a junior at the University of Massachusetts will also be studying Arabic and Tunisian Folklore this summer, at the University of Tunis. Mr. Salvador Starling, a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts, will be studying Arabic at the Univerity of Tunis this summer. Ms. Linda Cooper, a junior at Mt. Holyoke College, will also be studying Arabic at the University of Tunis. Mr. Richard Eccleston will undertake an intensive course in Arabic at Portland State University in Oregon.

The Tunisian Scholarships are awarded by the University of Utah under a grant from the department of Health, Education and Welfare. The scholarship to Portland State is awarded under the NDEA program of summer language study for undergraduates.

During the academic year 1972-1973, there will be a large variety of course offerings in Arabic. Dr. Robert Eisenman will be offering Elementary Arabic on Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 4:40. The Intermediate and Advanced Arabic courses will be taught by David Biddle. Students interested in further information on the Arabic courses available next year are invited to an evening of Middle Eastern Food and Slides on Wednesday, May 3, from 7-10 p.m. in 301 Herter Hall, or contact David Biddle in 707 Herter Hall, 545-0672.

BUGLE AMERICAN Milwaukee, Wis.

Dear Bugle:

"Something strange has happened. An unusual recording by a relatively unknown artist has made it big on Top 40 radio. I am referring to "American Pie" by Don McLean.

Now that's not really the strange part. What is strange is that many supposedly aware people have condemned the record as being top 40 shit! I object!

I would ask these dilletantes, some of whom have indignantly and pedantically complained to a WZMF morning jockey about his playing the record, to listen with awareness and sensitivity to the whole recording.

Let McLean speak of the day "Music" died. The "Music" of another age. An age when it was so very good and easy not to have to think too deeply. Yesterday, when your troubles seemed far away. Allow McLean to outline for you as no history teacher ever has, the events that brought us where we are today...the demise of Elvis, the incredible influence of the Beatles, the assasination of President Kennedy, the Democratic convention of 1968, the passing of Janis Joplin and all that meant, the inauguration of President Nixon, and the moon flights...to mention just a few.

After that first big step, listen to McLean's "American Pie" album! McLean shows himself to be not only a wonderful musician but an intensely beautiful poet

One cut, "Vincent," says all there is to know about the genius that was Vincent Van Gogh. Mind you, Don McLean does not write song lyrics but poetry. McLean's 'story' of Van Gogh's struggle with himself and with an 'audience' which was not yet ready to even tolerate him fills the listener with rage and pity.

I find very, very little of any real value in the wide world of art. Don McLean is an exception. In the midst of a thousand heroic attempts, McLean has made it. Not since Dylan have I been so excited about a poet-musician. Please listen to him!"

Six Steps For Keeping Cool

By DRS. McCASHIN AND KLEIN

With the vacation almost upon us we thought it appropriate to focus this last column of the semester on coping with summer. Many students have indicated to us that the economic situation this year is forcing them to spend the summer at home even though they have been able to get jobs away from home in previous years. Here are six easy steps to keeping your mental health this summer.

1. Keep your composure when parents remind you that you are living in their house. This is especially difficult if your folks are having their problems in accepting the fact that you are not 15 years old any more. Parents often have uncanny skill in encouraging regression in their children so they can then smugly point out how child-like and irrational the "smart guy college kid" still is. Remember, the environment is loaded in their favor. You are sleeping in your old bed, in your old room and sitting in your old chair at the dinner table. You've spent many years as a child there; you know that and they know that. Keep in mind at all times that it will be harder for them to relate to you as a child, if you relate to them in an adult-like manner.

2. Don't personalize rejections of your job applications. Things are tough all over and offers are not likely to roll in. The financial pressures of not working are difficult enough without worrying about "what's wrong with me." Once that feeling sets in, it makes things worse on several levels, not the least of which is subtlely communicating a negative self-image to prospective employers. Don't give up hope. Something may yet come along.

3. Avoid the summer doldrums. Boredom, aimlessness, and loneliness are problems at anytime, but the summer's heat, t.v. reruns, and absent friends can make the situation particularly oppressive. Overcome your inertia and find a project that can capture your interest. Volunteer for some service or political work in your community.

4. Be patient in adjusting to your old town. Remember that you've been out of touch with what's happening at your old hang-outs. Your favorite corner, drug store or parking lot may just not have the old appeal. Old flames and friends have probably found other significant relationships and may see you as an outsider and relate to you with suspicion.

5. Don't despair the loss of your mate for the summer. While he or she returns to the corn fields, keep in mind that a good relationship should endure a summer's separation. If it's any consolation your mate will probably feel as miserable as you. This may be the least easy of the six easy steps.

6. Living without the University can be surprisingly difficult, especially if you're already having problems in one or more of the areas noted above. Try to focus on some of the less than ideal aspects of the college experience. Think about eight o'clock classes; having three papers due tomorrow, and you've only put in one hour of work on one of them.

WFCR To Air Anti-War Poetry

Anti-war poetry will be read on radio station WFCR—FM Thursday evening between 8:30 and 10 p.m. as part of the national Moratorium Day observance.

Five area poets will read their own works and poems by others centering around the war in Southeast Asia.

In addition a tape of Robert Bly reading his "Teeth Mother Naked At Last," widely considered the masterpiece of the anti-war movement, will be played. Bly, who lives in Minnesota, was commencement speaker at Amherst College last year.

The readers will include Robert Bagg, Donald Junkins, Joseph Langland and J.D. Reed, all poets on the University of Massachusetts English faculty, and Juliana Mutti, a University of Massachusetts graduate student.

The poetry reading is one of several campus activities marking Moratorium Day, the second anniversary of the murder of anti-war and black students on the campuses of Kent State and Jackson State Universities.

MG MIDGET

It's a lot of sports car for a little price.

These days you don't have to look very far to find a small, economical car.

But to find one that's economical and a pure-bred, SCCA-winning sports car—well, that leaves you a choice of about one.

MG Midget.

Just the right size for you, your friend and enough gear to see you through a weekend.

You'll discover that the real meaning of "sports motoring" has nothing to do with ¼-mile strips at abandoned airports.

It has to do with roads that take to the hills where the scenery and fresh air are. Roads that turn and twist and meander down the other side, faithful to the contours of nature.

That's where terms like rack-and-pinion steering, front disc brakes, race-seasoned suspension and a close-ratio 4-speed gearbox, start making sense to the uninitiated.

And you'll wonder how you ever drove without full sports car instrumentation: an electric tachometer, separate gauges for oil pressure, water temperature and fuel level. There's even a trip odometer.

MG Midget sports other standards like a 1275 c.c. overhead valve engine, mag-style wheels, radial-ply tires, leather steering wheel cover, reclining bucket seats, full carpeting and three-blade windshield wipers.

What do you pay for this small economical sports car? Of all the proven winners now in national SCCA sports car racing, it's the one with the lowest price tag.

A little for a lot of sports car.

For the name of your nearest Austin MG dealer and for information about overseas delivery, dial (800) 631-1972. In New Jersey dial (800) 962-2803. Calls are toll-free.

MG. The sports car America loved first.

The Vermont Nuclear Power Station is located 25 miles north of Amherst on the Connecticut River. Only 5% of its 540 megawatt output will be purchased by municipalities in Massachusetts. Efforts to begin operations have come to a complete standstill several times as environmentalist groups claim the plant will cause a health problem to residents of Vermont, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts. The health hazard comes in the form of a criticality explosion in the event of a malfunction in the emergency cooling system, and direct emission of radiation into the atmosphere. "The Summer Of 72" Ready For Summer

Such diverse things as computers, papier-mache, sex stereotypes, and human interaction--and what they have to do with the state of American education today and in the future--are among topics to be explored this summer in a series of workshops at UMass.

Forty workshops, from one to six weeks in length, and about 100 special events make up "Summer 72," to be presented by the School of Education through the UMass Division of Continuing Education, Monday, July 10, through Friday, August 18.

School administrators, teachers, students, and the public may register for one or more of the workshops, including a six-week session on a new comprehensive early educational model called ANISA ("Tree of Life"); and a four-week outward bound educators' course at Hurricane Island, Maine, offering a series of challenges based upon confrontations with unknown situations.

Other workshops will be on topics such as: the use of photography in the classroom, an introduction to the integrated day, survival strategies for urban educators, and comprehensive achievement monitoring.

Supplementing the workshop, which will be from 8:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. daily, will be special events in the late afternoons and evenings, including seminars, lectures, films, presentations, displays, and other events focusing on new developments in education.

Registration for most workshops will be $75 a week for the first person from a school district, with group rates available for two or more persons from the same district. One optional University credit per week will be offered for most of the workshops, at the tuition rate of $10 per credit ($15 for out-of-staters).

Further information on "Summer 72" is available from Mr. Tom Paquin, School of Education, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002. Applications for enrollment must be made by May 15.

Scientific use is being made of the Connecticut River north of here, as the Northfield Mountain Project plans a unique way to utilize the river water. During months of excess power production water will be pumped into a mountaintop lake from the river which will serve not only as a reservoir but a conservation and recreation area. Dictated by seasonal power demands, the water will be drained past turbines either into Quabbin Reservoir or back into the river. Due to a damaged or sabotaged valve, the opening date has been pushed back into the fall from early summer. This photo shows the Tailrace Canal, where water is pumped from or released back into the river. (MDC photo by Carl Nash)

Workshop To Focus On Survival

EDUCATION FOR GLOBAL SURVIVAL will be the subject of a one-day workshop at the Campus Center on Friday, May 5th from nine in the morning to four in the afternoon in rooms 174 and 176.

Organized by the Center for International Education, the workshop will focus on secondary education needs for an interdisciplinary, issue-oriented curriculum for the Seventies. Specifically, the role of the science, humanities and social studies teachers will be explored in terms of the strategies and methods necessary for developing a means for coping with crises common to men everywhere on this globe.

Included in this design for a new global literacy will be the areas of war and peace, population and pollution, cross-cultural communications and conflict, and resource distribution and depletion.

Students and faculty of the University are invited to attend any and all of the workshop activities and to participate in the feedback andevaluation session at the end of the day.

For further information, call Walter Johnson at 5-0465.

Hear The Men Sing

"Men in Song," a combined concert of the Amherst College, Cornell University, and Union College Glee Clubs will be performed at 8:15 p.m. Saturday, May 6 in Buckley Recital Hall at Amherst College.

The concert is the final event of the 1972 conference of the Intercollegiate Musical Council, which is being hosted by the Amherst College Glee Club this year. There will be a small admission charge. Tickets may be purchased through the Amherst College Glee Club office in the Music Building or at the door from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. weekdays and on the evening of the concert.

"Crab" Colloquium

A Physics and Astronomy Colloquium on "The Crab Nebula, Ten Years of Study," will be Thursday, May 4, at 4:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 134. The speaker will be Dr. Graeme Duthie of the University of Rochester. Tea will be served at 4 p.m. in Hasbrouck 22. All interested persons are invited.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Taurus and Virgo are drawn to each other. Taurus is physically attracted to Virgo, while Virgo often makes long-range plans in conjunction with Taurus. The two signs harmonize. Children often are involved; travel, too, is in the picture when Taurus and Virgo get together. At present, Taurus lends stabilizing influence to natives of Virgo. The money picture for Virgo is erratic, but exciting. Fortune could be just around the corner. Virgo could strike it rich and Taurus could see employment area radically changed.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Wonderful opportunity exists for advancement. Take initiative. Aim high. Be confident. Message from a distance reinforces basic beliefs. You can go places and impress professional superiors. Outline goal.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Now is time for travel, writing, establishing bridge of goodwill. Teach and learn. Follow through on hunch. Give full rein to intuitive intellect. Accent is on education, added knowledge. Aquarian may be involved.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Good news upcoming in connection with work, associates and your health. You will have something to celebrate. Key is to aim toward center of goal. Welcome social contacts. Keep medical, dental appointments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Check diet resolutions. You may be throwing caution to winds for no good reason. Mate, partner has right to express ideas, opinions. Be receptive. Protect legal interests. Avoid extremes, push away from table.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Element of change overcomes tendency to remain fixed. Gemini and Virgo individuals figure prominently. People who serve you make special requests. Be flexible, but adhere to basic principles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Bring forth creative resources. Refuse to be intimidated or limited. Spread influence by expressing views in positive manner. Adjustment occurs where domestic situation is concerned. Buy gift for loved one.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Living quarters may seem crowded. Do some rearranging. Steer clear of one who sings blue note. Avoid any tendency to brood. Relatives may offer constructive suggestions. Listen, but don't make definite commitment.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Gain shown through journey, communication with relative. Develop ideas. Invest in your own abilities. Accept assignment, added responsibility. Heed advice of Capricorn. Respect voice of experience.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Past efforts now pay dividends. You gain recognition. You get backing, cash and moral encouragement. Financial picture is brighter. Round out plans. Stand tall for principles. You are appreciated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make new starts in new directions. Build toward future. Stop concerning yourself with past. Cycle is high and your judgment is on target. Exuda confidenca. You will be happier, wiser and richer.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are provided with privileged information. Keep confidences. Don't tell all you know. Another Aquarian figure in key role. You may have to tear down in order to rebuild. Be sura structure is solid.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Some fond wishes are on brink of tulfillment. Know it and be optimistic. Overcome tendency toward self-doubt. Friend opens door of opportunity. You can and should enter. Refuse to be bogged down with details.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have great sense of humor. You have needed it in recent times. Many seem to consider you a perfect targat for sob stories. By August, you will be mora self-reliant; mora contented and in a better position to bargain from strength.

Blue Ends Long Holdout

BOSTON (AP)-Vida Blue, the Oakland A's young southpaw pitching sensation, got a whopping pay increase Tuesday as he ended a long holdout and signed a 1972 contract.

Blue, who received $14,750 last year as he won the American League's most valuable player and Cy Young awards in his first full season with the A's, signed an agreement for $63,000.

However, the 22-year-old left-hander fell short of his original goal of $115,000.

Blue, who flew to Boston late Monday night, kept Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, American League President Joe Cronin and A's owner Charlie Finley waiting for nearly 1-1/2 hours.

He signed during a 15-minute meeting at league headquarters and then appeared at a news conference before joining the A's for a scheduled night game here.

"I'm signed, I'm happy, I'm ready to play," Blue said. "I think the team has a uniform for me, but I don't know."

"We have one," Finley assured him.

Blue, who has a 24-8 record and was a big gate attraction around the league in 1971, said he had been doing "a lot of running," but probably will need "three or four weeks" before he'll be ready to pitch.

"Vida will remain with the club during the conditioning program," Finley said. "Manager Dick Williams will map the program."

Told of Williams' prediction that Blue will win 20 games this year despite the late start, Vida said:

"I'll be lucky if I win 10. I'll take what I can get" Finley said he and the A's were looking forward to Blue returning to the mound "and start winning."

"However," Finley added, "the number of wins isn't really the most important thing. The big point is just having him back with us. We hope he wins, but we're not going to rush him into anything."

Kuhn announced that Blue's agreement provides $50,000 salary, a $5,000 bonus for his 1971 performance and $8,000 "for any possible liability under a contigent four-year college scholarship" which was part of Blue's original bonus arrangement when he signed in 1967.

Ordinarily, a major league player's salary does not start until he's ready to play. However, Finley said Blue's salary would be prorated starting April 27.

Kuhn said he was "very happy" that an agreement has been reached and "I congratulate Vida and Charlie both for concessions they have made."

The negotiations appeared to fall through last Friday when Blue refused to sign an announcement of the contract's details. Kuhn stepped in the next day and, using what he called his general powers to act "in the best interests of baseball," ordered Finley to keep the offer open.

Finley threatened to withdraw the offer, charging the commissioner had "arbitrarily ... forced himself" into the salary dispute.

Blue's attorney, Robert J. Gerst of Los Angeles, did not accompany the pitcher to Boston. However, he said Monday night "we're not happy, but we're satisfied."

Gerst added: "We'll be back next year."

Blue's Holdout Hardly Compares With Roush's

BOSTON (AP)-Vida Blue's holdout in a salary dispute with the Oakland Athletics hardly compares with some of the longest pay fights in major league baseball history.

Outfielder Edd Roush, a member of the Hall of Fame can be classed as the all-time champion holdout.

While with the Cincinnati Reds, he sat out the entire 1922 season. Then, with the New York Giants, he held out in 1930, ending his playing career.

Jim McCormick probably was the first long-term holdout. In 1887, he rejected a $4,000 offer from Chicago of the National League and sat out the season. McCormick had won 16 games in a row the previous year.

Turkey Mike Donlin of the New York Giants held out in 1907, going into vaudeville with his wife when the club refused to meet his demands. One New York group offered to make up the difference, but the Giants refused to go along.

Dickie Kerr of the Chicago White Sox was another holdout who missed a year rather than sign for what the club had to offer. That was in 1922, the same year that Roush spent the summer on his farm.

Derby Trials Underway

LOUISEVILLE, Ky. (AP)-Key to the Mint, recently recovered from a racing injury, handed No Le Hace his first defeat of the season Tuesday in the Derby Trial at Churchill Downs.

With Braulio Baeza in the saddle, Key to the Mint went to the front midway in the turn for home and held off the late charging No Le Hace, who swerved badly inside the 16th pole.

Dr. Neale, owned by C.F. Nicholas finished third and Big Brown Bear, the pride of the A.F. Reinhole stable was fourth, both apparently earning a start in Saturday's $125,000-added Kentucky Derby.

Meanwhile, trainer R.J. Fischer announced that New Prospect and Divorce Trial were definitely out of the Derby because of injuries. New Prospect injured an ankle in his stall just before he was scheduled to run in the trial.

Dr. Hassi Shina's Lester's Jester set the early pace in the one-mile trial that was run in 1:36 1-5 with Billy Rogell just along side and Key to the Mint running close behind the leaders.

At the three-eights pole, Baeza sent Key to the Mint past the other horses as Phil Rubbicco called for speed from No Le Hace.

However, the winner of the Arkansas and Louisiana Derbys fell short by 2-1/2 lengths in his chase of Key to the Mint. Key to the Mint, owned by Paul Mellon's Rokeby Stable, was the prime prospect from his barn for Derby honors until he suffered an injury March 15 in an allowance race at Hialeah in Florida.

Trainer Elliott Burch took him to New York, however, and said the cooler weather was bringing his horse back to top form quicker than expected.

"He was running like a snake through the lane," No Le Hace's rider said.

"He ducked in after we cleared those horses in the stretch. Then when I hit him left handed, he ducked out. I don't know what the reason was. He's never done it before," Rubbicca added.

TOM SEAVER flashes the form that has resulted in an unblemished 4-0 record so far this season.

Gorillas Edge UConn In See-Saw Battle

By HOWIE BLOOM

Heart specialists all across the state of Connecticut are sending their thanks today to the University of Massachusetts and University of Connecticut lacrosse teams for giving their business the biggest shot in the arm since jogging became a craze, as UMass defeated the Huskies, 11-10, in the seesawiest of games ever.

The first period started off slowly as the two teams had trouble maneuvering on the rain-slicked field. UConn was the first to score, as Doug Dale tallied the first of his four goals, unassisted. UMass tied the game halfway through the period when Dana Stone found himself on the receiving end of a Charlie Hardy feed. The Huskies jumped into the lead a short time later on another unassisted score from Dale, who surprisingly, is not UConn's leading scorer this season. With less than a minute to go in the first stanza, Hirsch Seidman tied it up again on a beautiful assist from attackman Fred Michels.

The first period action was very even-UMass controlled the ball and had more shots, but they had trouble containing the Huskies' big attackmen, and the score bore that out.

The score was still tied, this time 6-6, at the half. Here's what happened in the second period.

Tri-captain Hardy continued his assault on Tom Malone's one-season scoring record (84 points) as he tallied the first score of the period, unassisted. UConn tied it up a short time later as Bill Morris, the Huskie's most prolific point-getter this season, garnered his only goal of the game. Dwight Blomquist stopped the clock at exactly the three minute mark of the stanza with a score, assisted by Hardy. UMass led, 4-3.

UConn was a very stubborn team out there yesterday, and so they tied the game once again with an unassisted goal from Doug Randall. Big John Nagle got into the act for the first time in the game on an extra man score, the first in a while for the Redmen, with the assist credited to Hardy.

UMass threw away the script for a short time at this point, and instead of letting the Huskies tie the game for the fifth time in as many tries, Stone took a pass from Stone out in front of the UConn net and rifled a shot by the Huskies' goalie.

As I said before, the period ended in a tie, so, of course, UConn had to have scored the next two goals. I didn't lie. THEY DID. Dale scored his third of the game at 12:03 to make it 6-5, UMass, and then Tom Seigal took a pass from Joe DeNuzio a minute and a half later to end the period.

Up to this point the game was being played very aggressively. When the Redmen were ahead 6-4, they had a couple of shots that looked good as gold, but they were thwarted, and UConn came back to tie it.

The Huskies jumped back into the lead for the first time in a long time at the start of the third period on the strength of Seigal's second straight goal, assisted this time by Tom Turluha. The Gorillas tied it again 25 seconds later as Dwight Blomquist scored, unassisted, on a power sweep.

Ten minutes elapsed until the next score, and this time the familiar name of Hardy was written into the score book again, with the assist credited to Seidman. As if I really have to say this, UConn tied the score again with ten seconds left in the third period on a goal by Art Antonozzi, a defenseman, who lugged the ball the length of the field and put it away unassisted.

So, as the piles of half-eaten fingernails grew on the sidelines, the fourth period began. For the first time in the afternoon, Paul Ritch, who seems to be coming up with more than his share of clutch goals this season, took a pass from his attackman Hardy and made it 9-8, UMass. That guy who's getting an awful lot of print in this article, Dale, took advantage of an extra man situation (two Gorillas were off the field at the time) and tied the score again. I'm still sweating.

Nagle scored his second goal of the game on the nicest play of the day just a short time later as Blomquist dodged his man out in front of the net, circled behind the goal and fired to Nagle at the crease who put it away.

The Huskies scored their final goal of the game halfway through the period, as a second midfielder, Ken Kittret, came through in a crucial spot. But UMass was not going to allow their dogged efforts go for nought, and at 8:38, Hardy fed Seidman, who dodged his man out in front of the crease and layed it in. The final score--UMass 11, UConn 10.

UConn was 7-2 going into the game, the first leg of the Redmen's quest for the unofficial Yankee Conference lacrosse title. The Huskie's goalie was outstanding, robbing Ritch, Nagle and Hardy twice apiece. UMass played three midfields most of the game, but relied on the starting trio of Stone, Seidman and Blomquist for the bulk of the final period.

UMass' lacrosse program looks very promising for the future-yesterday the JV's won, 13-3, their second victory in a row after an opening game loss.

Tennis Team Hosts Springfield Today

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Round about this time of year, the UMass tennis team finds out just how short their season is, because one that began just three and one-half weeks ago, ends today, at least as far as matches go. Springfield, they're the Chiefs, will provide the opposition for the Redmen this afternoon, as they meet the Redmen at 3 p.m. on the Boyden tennis courts.

Today's problem has got to be one of looking ahead. The main topic of conversation among the team members deals with the Conferences upcoming this weekend, and practically everyone has forgotten about Springfield. Everyone except Coach Kosakowski that is.

Kosakowski isn't too hepped up on the idea of looking past today's contest. Since Springfield has, what he calls, "The best team they've had in years," his worries will be of paramount concern. Considering that they played Amherst to a 4-5 loss, they're likely to present some stiff competition. So hopefully most of the tennis team will have gotten the word from the coach, or will have read this article. The prospect of losing to Springfield two days before the Conferences doesn't sound particularly pleasing to anyone's ear--anyone' except for the Chiefs.

Yesterday was a rain day, and due to the fact that they now are charging money (yes, ridiculous prices in the order of 6, 8 and $10 for assorted times throughout the day) at the Sunderland indoor courts, the netman don't get a chance to practice while it rains. Should it continue (and the long-range Kosakowski forecast predicts playable weather on Friday, with rainy days on Saturday and Sunday) the Conference at UMass will have been rained out for THREE consecutive times in the past 12 or so years.

Enthusiasm is riding pretty high for this time of the year, as most of the players consider the Conferences THE weekend of the season. Phe New Englands do follow, but somewhere in the shuffle, they lost their arousing significance. Most likely because of the tremendous build-up given to the Conferences.

The New Englands themselves can be very misleading. Take the examples of this afternoon's foes. Springfield, badly beaten last year by UMass by a 6-3 score, finished three spots, ahead of the Redmen. Then again, URI, also beaten by UMass, in the Conferences last year, finished about 6 places ahead of UMass in the New Englands, as they grabbed the 8th spot. The differences ride in the fact of the draw, that seemingly innocuous random selection which can make so much difference where a team finishes. Of course, the draw makes little difference for the good teams--if they're going to win they're going to win, but for the 8th, 9th and 10th teams--ah, for them it makes a difference.

It's Not Supposed To Happen That Way

By EARLE BARROLL

Ah yes, the Penn Relays...Where veterans show why they are just that and freshmen and sophomores fall to the wayside in a heap of blatant inexperience.

It's supposed to happen this way at Old Franklin Field, where the Philadelphia Eagles perform every Sunday during the football season, where Marty Liquori and Jim Ryun staged their "Dream Mile", and where 37,000 track fans jam every year at this time to watch some of the best performances in the world.

They come to watch Villanova and Penn fight it out for the City of Brotherly Love track title. And once in a while they get a treat and find a team like North Carolina State steal the show from the biggies with record performances in the 440 and mile relays.

But, never...in no way is a young track man from UMass supposed to perform like a veteran in old Franklin Field.

It happened, though, contrary to the script, when the veterans and the inexperienced tracksters exchanged roles on Saturday.

It came as a complete surprise to coach Ken O'Brien. "It was definitely a reverse of what I expected to happen. But I guess the more naive they were, the less the 37,000 bothered them."

Naive or not, you wouldn't ordinarily hear bellowing from the P.A. system, "The time at the quarter mile in the four mile relay is 61 seconds and the leader is Randy Thomas (freshman) from UMass."

O'Brien found it hard to comprehend. "I couldn't believe it. There's Randy leading a pack of milers who have done anywhere's from 3:59 to 4:02 at the quarter and then at the three-quarter mile mark he's still up there."

His time of 4:13 put UMass in third place. Doug O'Connell (soph) and Mike McCusker (jr) followed with 4:17's but a poor anchor leg by Rick Barry, who's been suffering of late with the flu, pushed the Redmen back.

If this wasn't enough, in the two-mile relay Devin Craft, another freshman ran a 1:54 lead off leg, John Maloney, a sophomore, ran 1:55 and between these two UMass was in the top five. However, poor legs by veterans Arnie Morse and Al Mangan dropped them back again.

Something totally unexpected happened when the 440 and 880 yard relay teams failed to qualify for a return to the finals (they qualified last year). Poor hand-offs caused a disqualification in the 440 and just a plain under-par performance in the 880.

Varsity M

VARSITY M-The UMass Redmen Sport Luncheon will be at the Newman Center on Wednesday, May 3 at 12:15 P.M. getting out promptly at 1:15. Football staff will present the program, also door prize, guests, excellent food.

NBA Play-offs Resume

DeBuschere Won't Start

NEW YORK (AP)-Dave DeBusschere, the New York Knicks' ailing forward, was significantly improved Tuesday but remained a question mark for the third game against the Los Angeles Lakers Wednesday night in the National Basketball Association's championship series.

"Phil Jackson will start," said the Knicks' coach, Red Holzman. "Whether DeBusschere plays-or how much he plays-will have to remain a game-to-game proposition."

The uncertain status of the 6-foot-6 220-pound all-around forward, who suffered a strained muscle in his right side in the second period of the game last Sunday, has made the Lakers a favorite in the best-of-seven game series.

With the series tied at one game each, the two divisional champions renew their rivalry at 8:40 p.m. EDT Wednesday at Madison Square Garden. The game will be televised nationally by ABC-TV.

With a phenomenal shooting exhibition, the Knicks won the opening game at Los Angeles last Friday 114-92 but, with DeBusschere hurt, the New Yorkers became easy victims of the Lakers Sunday 106-92.

DeBusschere, who was injured when Los Angeles' Jim McMillian rammed him on a rebound, worked out with the Knicks Tuesday morning, went to the doctor for an examination and then embarked on extensive ultra-sound and heat treatments for the ailing side.

"I felt much better," he said. "I'd like to take a shot at playing if there's no danger of more damage."

Bruins Nip Rangers

BOSTON (AP)-Ken Hodge rammed home a goal with just over eight minutes to play Tuesday night, giving the Boston Bruins a 2-1 victory over the New York Rangers-their second straight in the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup Championship playoff.

Hodge, who had three goals in Boston's 6-5 opening game victory, converted a two-man Bruin advantage at 11:53 of the final period in this tense and slickly-played hockey game.

New York's Bruce MacGregor had gone off for tripping John McKenzie at 9:56 of the period and the Rangers had killed all but 10 seconds of the penalty when Walt Tkaczuk was caught tripping Phil Esposito and sent to the penalty box to join MacGregor.

With the Rangers two men short, it didn't take long for the potent Boston power play to capitalize on the situation.

Esposito won a face off in the Ranger end and got the puck to Mike Walton. Hodge cut for the net and jammed the puck in the corner just past New York goalie Giles Villemure.

Veteran Johnny Bucyk, just 10 days short of his 37th birthday, got the Bruins on the scoreboard first with a power play goal in the opening period. Bobby Orr collected his 17th assist of the playoffs on the play, setting a single season Stanley Cup record.

The series moves on to New York for games three and four Thursday night and Sunday afternoon.

Gage Justifies Wood Recruitment Policy

By KEVIN KEVIT

Responding to student inquiries concerning UMass President Robert Wood's recent decision to temporarily terminate all on-campus recruiting, whether military or otherwise, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert Gage last night expressed the opinion that Wood "took the steps necessary for maintaining an open university in a time of crisis."

Gage's statement was addressed to a small group of students meeting in SBA 101 to express their concern over Wood's action, primarily with regard to the future of industrial recruitment at UMass. Throughout the meeting, Gage stressed that industrial recruitment at the Amherst campus has not been completely terminated, but simply moved to an off-campus location.

When asked if a decision would be made before the end of the current semester as to the possible reinstatement of non-military recruitment on campus, Gage replied in the negative, stating that the information required for making a responsible judgment on this issue is not now available, and probably will not be available by then.

This information, he continued, is tied to a number of legal and administrative problems, among them being:

—whether non-military recruiting can legally be reinstated on campus without also reinstating military recruitment.

—whether the Amherst, Boston, and Worcester campuses of UMass can be legally considered as separate schools, or are merely components of one structure.

—whether a halt of military recruitment would entail the loss of non-military governmentally-funded research, an important source of revenue to many university programs.

The importance of Gage's second point, not immediately obvious, was made apparent through his delineation of the seeming paradox that while the Boston campus has been most vocal in demanding an end to on-campus university recruitment, it has no ROTC, cannot lose any funds through termination of research grants, (since it conducts no governmentally-sponsored research) and can afford to move industrial recruitment off-campus, since many of the industries in question maintain offices in the Boston area. Since the interests of the two campuses obviously collide on these subjects, Gage feels that the present dilemma could be eased by allowing UMass-Boston to become a separate school and pursue its own future.

With regard to his third point, Gage stated that "a significant amount of non-allocated funds" accrue to the university through non-military research grants "which are important to many undergraduate, graduate, and faculty programs" among them being the scholarship and teaching assistantship programs. Gage stressed the importance of the flexibile nature of these funds, explaining that the university budget is usually pre-allocated and that research money indirectly "provides the funds to follow through on new ideas."

In reply to student questioning, Gage stated his feeling that movement of recruiting to an off-campus location is not an abridgement of the right of free speech at the university. In Gage's opinion, free speech entails the unrestricted interplay of ideas, while industries come to the campus not primarily to exchange ideas but for the performance of a service.

Asked what the university administration does intend to do towards bringing about a solution of this dilemma in the near future, Gage replied that "a committee or study group including representation by undergraduate students, graduate students, and faculty could probably be formed to study the issue over the summer." He hopes that "by the time school reopens next semester adequate information will be provided for the making of a well-informed decision."

On the question of whether the recruitment dilemma will be opened to the discretion of the university community next fall in the form of a referendum, Gage replied that "a referendum may or may not be necessary." Postulating that the major support for Wood's decision is among those attending the Boston campus, Gage offered his guess that "a significant majority of students at the Amherst campus are in favor of restoring on-campus recruiting."

Gage stressed throughout the discussion that sufficient information is not currently available for the conducting of an informed and valid university referendum before the end of the semester, but stated that "there is time for student petitioning or polling in order to determine the general sentiments of the university community."

The next two trustee meetings, according to Gage, will be held on next Wednesday and on the day before commencement.

"It is not intellectually honest to say that the recruitment dilemma is a matter of free speech," Vice Chancellor Gage told a small group of students gathered in SBA last night to question President Wood's recently-stated recruitment policy.

Senator Brooke will speak here tomorrow in a program titled: "Senator Brooke Listens and Responds: Issues '72."

Brooke Here Tomorrow

Senator Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts will be speaking Friday, May 5, in the Campus Center Auditorium at 11:00 A.M. The program will be "Senator Brooke Listens and Responds: Issues '72." A question period will follow the speech.

Brooke was elected Attorney General of the Commonwealth in 1962 and returned to that office in 1964. In 1966 he was elected to the United States Senate where he serves on the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, Select Committee on Equal Educational Opportunity, Aging.

The Senator is a Fellow of the American Bar Association and a Fellow of the academy of American Arts and Sciences. He is a trustee of Boston University and Northeastern University, serves as Chairman of the Board of the Opera Company of Boston and has received honorary degrees from twenty-one colleges and universities across the nation.

Senator Brooke graduated from Howard University in 1941 receiving a Bachelor of Science, and he earned a Bachelor of Laws and Master of Laws from Boston University Law School.

The G.O.P. Senator's speech is sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council and is open to the public without charge.

Humphrey Wins In Ohio

By the Associated Press

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey narrowly defeated Sen. George S. McGovern early Thursday in the trouble-plagued Ohio primary election for the state's 38 at-large Democratic National Convention delegate votes.

Troubles in the problem-plagued primary continued through Wednesday night as an error in tabulation put McGovern within 1,397 votes of Humphrey with 74 per cent of the state's 12,648 polling places reporting.

The corrected figures, instead, gave Humphrey a 16,208-voted spread as the contest moved into the final hours of counting.

A spokesman for the secretary of state's office said, "I suppose the error came from incorrect addition or transposed figures. I haven't had time to investigate just what exactly occurred."

The difficulties in reaching a decision on delegates' selection in Ohio were complicated Wednesday by two federal court suits, one asking that all ballots in Cuyahoga County Cleveland be impounded for counting by federal marshals. The other asked that the county's primary election be declared void.

The votes have come in a slow trickle, but the spokesman in the secretary of state's office said he expected the tempo to increase as the remaining ballots were counted and forwarded to Columbus.

In neighboring Indiana, Humphrey defeated Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace in Tuesday's other spotlight primary.

The results confirmed the position of Humphrey and McGovern as the front-runners in the Democratic presidential race as they headed for confrontations next week in Nebraska, May 16 in Michigan, May 23 in Oregon and June 6 in California.

Humphrey talked of bypassing some of the intervening tests and going straight to California, which will award 271 delegates-18 per cent of the 1,509 needed for nomination-to the winner of its primary.

Humphrey had clung to a 12,00-14,000-vote margin in Ohio before the erroneous figures put McGovern to within 1,397 votes.

Only 420 of Cleveland and Cuyahoga County's 1,788 polling places were reported in the 9 p.m. tabulation and only 500 from Hamilton County Cincinnati and its 1,156 polling places.

The vote was moving slowly, too, in Akron and Dayton, both industrial cities. McGovern has claimed big inroads among Ohio blue collar workers.

The tabulation with 9,336 of the state's 12,648 polling places reported left Humphrey holding the 38 at-large Ohio delegates to the Democratic Nation Convention. The candidate who captures the at-large group appeared certain to win the majority of the state's 153 delegates to the national convention.

Besides leading for the at-large posts, Humphrey was ahead in nine of the 23 Ohio congresssional districts, with 42 delegates, for a total of 80.

McGovern, leading in 11 districts, headed for 55 delegates, a strong minority of the state's delegation even if he failed to win the at-large posts.

Two districts seemed destined to go to local favorite son candidates.

In the at-large votes, with returns counted by the secretary of state's office from 9,336 to 12,648 polling places in the state, the Humphrey slate had 336,545 to 320,337 for McGovern.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson, of Washington, dropped out of the active primary contest but, like Maine Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, said he still is in the race for the Democratic presidential nomination.

One court suit, seeking to throw out all ballots in Cuyahoga County and force a new primary after Tuesday's unprecedented confusion, was filed in Cleveland by Thomas Shaughnessy. He is a candidate for the Democratic congressional nomination in the 21st District.

Shaughnessy's suit claimed that because of the delay many people in the district were unable to vote for him.

Later in the day, a suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Cleveland by Sheldon D. Schecter on behalf of McGovern asking that all ballots cast in Cuyahoga County be impounded for counting by federal marshals. The court set a hearing on the Schecter suit Thursday at 10:30 a.m.

On Tuesday, McGovern had asked the Ohio Supreme Court to impound all the Cuyahoga County ballots in the primary, but the high court turned him down.

It may still be raining if you are reading this before sunset today. Actually it will clear up eventually. Tonight it is even supposed to be fair, low the 40's. This is to follow a cloudy rainy day, with a high (temperature-wise) around 60. Friday, it is supposed to be a very nice day, so if you can last through today, you'll have it made. Only fourteen more days until May 18.

New Analysis

Air Power Effectiveness Questionned

WASHINGTON (AP)-North Vietnam's invasion gains in the face of total allied air superiority are raising new doubts here about the effectiveness of air power.

It has long been an article of faith among air power boosters that the adversary who controls the air over the battlefield will pretty well determine the course of the ground battle.

But it hasn't worked that way in the current North Vietnamese offensive, particularly in the area below Vietnam's demilitarized zone where the enemy has penetrated more than 30 miles into South Vietnam.

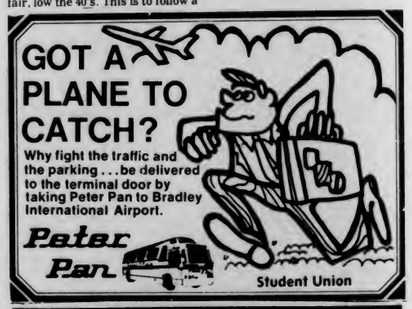
Both military officers and civilian defense officials are expressing concern privately and there are reports that key members of the Armed Services Committees of Congress are beginning to ask critical questions.

Some Air Force officers, while agreeing there is reason to question, argue that the issue still is in doubt and that over the long haul air power will do its job against the North Vietnamese by attribution of the enemy's heavy weapons and supplies, as well as killing his troops.

For quite some time, critics have questioned whether U.S. bombing of the Ho Chi Minh trail was really knocking out a big part of the enemy's supplies being trucked through southern Laos.

The ability of the North Vietnamese in this offensive to mount heavy bombardment of objectives like An Loc near Saigon and to bring 40-ton tanks that far south tends to support the critics' skepticism.

But perhaps the biggest source of dismay to advocates of air power has been the apparent inability of U.S. Air Force, Navy, Marine and South Vietnamese fighter-bombers and bombers to stem North Vietnam's invasion across the DMZ-a conventional attack through relatively open country with tanks, self-propelled and towed artillery, supply trucks and other heavy equipment.



U.S. and South Vietnamese strike planes have flown hundreds of sorties a day against North Vietnam ground troops which are totally without air cover, though the enemy has brought substantial antiaircraft artillery into play.

"I can't understand it," said one Air Force general with a long record of air combat in three wars. "Tanks are not supposed to survive against the kind of attack we use, with rockets and forward air controllers to spot targets and direct the strikes."

Senate Passes Civilian Police Control

Eric "The Rat" Walgren, of the Tea Party, urged the Senate to establish a civilian review board of Campus Security. The Senate took Eric's advice and passed the slightly amended bill by a 42-3 margin.

By MARY SMITH

In its final meeting of the semester, the Student Senate voted last night to establish an independent, civilian Advisory and Review Commission for the purpose of maintaining good relations between the Campus Security Department and the University community. The new commission will have the power to investigate complaints filed against the Security Department, provide a means of conciliation, hold hearings and compel the appearance of witnesses.

In an effort to consider the remaining bills on its agenda before final adjournment, the Senate also passed bills dealing with the establishment of a Department of Peace Studies and possible policy changes in room rent and compulsory dorm occupancy.

As an amendment to the Peace Studies act, the Senate endorsed the recently established Center for Social Change, acclaiming the Center as the first step towards establishing such a department.

Also ratified by the Senate was a resolution condemning University continuation of the "Redmen" symbol on the grounds that the use of Indian references on this campus gives a distorted and racist view of Indian heritage. The bill further proposes that the Senate support the establishment of a new school design.

The Civilian Advisory and Review Commission will be composed of one faculty member, two undergraduates, appointed by the Senate, at least one to be a member of a minority group, one grad student, a representative of the Administration, one representative from each area government, a non-professional staff member chosen by Union Local 1776 and two non-voting members of the Security Department.

The Commission is specifically charged to:

—Advise and assist the Security Director on matters of policy for the Security Department.

—Perform an emergency advisory function for the Security Director and the Chancellor during a disturbance or whenever unusual circumstances warrant to advise on keeping the peace.

—Review any complaint alleging official misconduct by a member of the Security Department.

The Committee will also retain an attorney as legal counsel for the commission, guarantee "due process of law" to all persons appearing before the Commission, make all conclusions public in written form, and have the power to recommend changes in policy or disciplinary action concerning the Security Department to the Chancellor and the Security Director.

The bill was sponsored by former Senate President Lee Sandwen. Eric Walgren, of the newly established Tea Party, urged the Senate to pass the bill.

Reiterating his "Tea Party Platform", Walgren told the Senate that community control of police was vital to the struggle to "gain control of our own lives."

After acceptance of an amendment presented by Elliot Sherman which provides for the present composition of Committee membership, the Senate approved the complete bill by a 42-3 vote.

The motion concerning compulsory dorm occupancy demands that the Board of Trustees and Administration immediately abandon its policy of mandatory dorm occupancy, claiming that such a policy is contrary to constitutional principles of freedom and choice. Sponsored by Senators Mira Marshall and John Stevens, the bill charges Richard Howland, legal counsel for the students, with initiating legal proceedings against the Commonwealth for violation of students' civil rights, if action is not taken by the Trustees within one month.

The bill concerning room rent policy alters the current University policy regarding rent refunding when a student withdraws from the University.

According to present policy, a student who withdraws from the University, unless for extreme circumstances, forfeits his total room rent for the entire semester but is refunded his security deposit.

If the proposed policy is accepted by the Trustees, a student will forfeit his room deposit, except in the case of involuntary military service or health reasons, but will receive a rent refund on a pro-rated basis.

The Senate bill instructs Student Trustee Larry Ladd to present such a bill to the Board of Trustees, for their consideration.

In a more humorous vein, the Senate presented the traditional gifts to the graduating Senators. For the remainder of the year, and throughout the summer, matters usually considered by the Senate will be carried out by the Executive Committee.

Today's Anti-War Action

Today, there will be anti-war actions taken in local areas throughout the country as part of the continuing protest of the escalated U.S. bombing and devastation in Indochina.

Today's activities are also part of a commemoration of the two-year anniversary of Kent State.

Westover Air Force Base, third largest in the country, is the focus of demonstrations in this area, with a civil disobedience action scheduled today at 2:00 p.m. and a large scale legal and peaceful protest rally to be held between 4 and 6 p.m. this afternoon.

To aid people in getting to Westover, there will be a FREE bus, sponsored by the Student Mobilization Committee, leaving from the circle near the Campus Center garage at 3:30 today.

The Faculty and Staff Committee to Stop the War will be participating in the 2 o'clock demonstration at Westover. The demonstration will be part of Committee sponsored activities for the day today.

At noon a silent vigil will begin on the steps of the Student Union. The vigil is expected to conclude at approximately 1 p.m. after a procession across campus to the front of Whitmore. After a brief explanation of the scheduled activities at Westover, the demonstrators will proceed to the base by car. Those in need of transportation to Westover can wait for rides at Haigis Mall.

Critical Peace Talk Session Set Today

PARIS (AP) — A critical session of the Vietnam peace talks was set for Thursday amid unconfirmed reports that secret contacts were already under way between the United States and North Vietnam.

A Paris newspaper said the United States had proposed in a secret exchange with North Vietnam that a seven-day truce be put into effect, apparently to be followed by a geneal cease-fire.

U.S. officials here and in Washington wrote off the truce and cease-fire report as "completely without foundation." The U.S. peace talks delegation spokesman, Stephen Ledogar, would not, however, comment on reports that secret talks had begun. North Vietnamese officials noted inquiries about the report but had no comment.

The Newspaper France-Soir said it had obtained its information from a "good source" which was not further identified. It reported the North Vietnamese were in apparent agreement but problems had cropped up on terms of a cease-fire that presumably would follow a truce.

The United States proposed an all-Indochina cease-fire as far back as October 1970. It was rejected by the Communists, who instead proposed last July a cease-fire between U.S. and Communist command forces after the United States has fixed a troop withdrawal date. A cease-fire with Saigon forces would go into effect when a coalition government was formed.

The possibility loomed that the United States would break off the talks Thursday or shift tactics. A new move by Hanoi or the Viet Cong could not be excluded.

The U.S. delegation chief, William J. Porter, demanded last week that North Vietnam end its invasion of South Vietnam. The North Vietnamese delegation leader, Xuan Thuy, replied that the U.S. charge of an invasion "is utterly absurd."

Porter gave the Hanoi delegate a week to come up with what would be considered a satisfactory reply, and added:

"It will not be practical to hold meetings if you continue to refuse to deal with the substance of both the present invasion and general problems of peace..."

Robert J. Baker, of Harvard Medical School, will speak on Nuclear Medicine today at 4:30 in Hasbrouck 126.

Explosion Is Not The Word

Correction: The caption appearing with the picture of the Vermont Nuclear Power Station in yesterday's Collegian was inaccurate through the inclusion of the word explosion in reference to potential dangers of the plant. The New England Coalition on Nuclear Pollution gives this more accurate explanation:

"Explosion is the wrong word to use when talking about nuclear power plants. None of the 'environmental groups' would describe the health problem in this way.

"The kind of accident that is possible is a meltdown as a result of the failure of the cooling systems. (Emergency Core Cooling System.) In the event of such an accident, a sizeable portion of the radioactive inventory of the core could be released to the environment, as discussed by Dan Ford of the Union of Concerned Scientists in his CEQ sponsored speech Monday.

"As Dr. Ford indicated, there is a growing number of scientists within the Atomic Energy Commission who are testifying to the effect that the Emergency Core Cooling System probably would not work. Therefore, they feel that this kind of accident is a possibility which we will have to contend with before the rash proliferation of nuclear plants planned by the Atomic Energy Commission and the Utilities."

South Viet Military Command Shaken Up

Remnants of the defenders of Quang Tri ride on armored vehicles as they reach friendly lines north of Hue Tuesday after all-night escape from the abandoned city.

SAIGON (AP)-The Saigon government, shaken by the debacle at Quang Tri, changed commands in the far north Wednesday, putting the defenses there in the hands of a general highly regarded by the Americans.

Lt. Gen. Ngo Quang Truong, who has been commander of the southernmost military region 4 including the Mekong Delta, was placed in command of the northern region in the hope he could reverse the fortunes of battle.

Lt. Gen. Hoang Xuam Lam, who commanded in northern military region 1, was called to Saigon and presumably got the news of his dismissal from President Nguyen Van Thieu. The South Vietnamese command said the changes were made on direct orders from Thieu.

Brig. Gen. Vu Van Giai was relieved as commander of the 3rd Infantry Division that was badly battered at Quang Tri. An announcement said he was put under investigation.

The 3rd Division, formed only last year, received the full shock when the North Vietnamese swept across the demilitarized zone March 30 to launch the spring offensive. It quickly abandoned frontier bases and fell back to Quang Tri, where it was shattered in the battle for that northernmost provincial capital.

The loss of Quang Tri opened the way for a North Vietnamese advance on Hue, the old imperial capital 32 miles to the south.

Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird ordered a team of experts to Vietnam to find out what the South Vietnamese need to blunt the enemy offensive and to determine if U.S. troops need more supplies to protect themselves.

Disorganized government troops were still finding their way into Hue. Commanders tried, often futilely, to pull them into units to join in the defense of the former seat of Vietnamese kings.

There were reports of clashes six miles southwest of Hue, but no major thrust was reported by enemy troops coming down from Quang Tri.

Associated Press correspondent Richard Blystone reported from the northern front that it had been relatively quiet and that government positions appeared fairly well stabilized along the My Chanh River defense line 20-25 miles north of Hue.

There has been speculation that the North Vietnamese drive might slow after the fight for Quang Tri while the enemy regrouped and resupplied.

In an effort to stop the North Vietnamese drive, U.S. planes for the second consecutive day carried out more than 600 strikes in the four military regions of South Vietnam. About two-thirds of the attacks centered in northernmost Quang Tri Province and Thua Thien just to the south. Hue is the capital of Thua Thien Province.

Three more American planes were lost, U.S. headquarters said, a light spotter aircraft and two A1 fighter-bombers. They were downed south of Quang Tri, but the three crewmen were rescued, spokesmen said.

Defense Advisory Team To Nam

WASHINGTON (AP)-With the military situation worsening, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird ordered a top-level team of logistics specialists to Vietnam Wednesday to determine whether Saigon requires more American military aid.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim said the group, headed by one of Laird's top civilian assistants and accompanied by five generals, will consider both Saigon's military needs and what additional measures may be needed to protect the remaining U.S. troops.

They will determine, Friedheim said, what weapons of Saigon's hard-hit troos will be replaced as well as what new arms may be needed to counter "new and sophisticated Soviet weapons."

Friedheim said it is possible the South Vietnamese can get along with what they have. But he added that if new weapons are needed it may be necessary to dispatch more American advisers to train the South Vietnamese in their use.

Meanwhile, Republican congressional leaders at the White House quoted Adm. Thomas Moorer Jr., chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff as saying "only time will tell" the outcome of the enemy offensive in Vietnam.

House Republican Leader Gerald Ford of Michigan said he emerged from the session with a sense of cautious optimism, adding "it is my impression that time is on our side."

Friedheim would not speculate on what new weapons the U.S. could send over in time to counter Hanoi's invasion. But these are likely to include more modern antitank guns and long-range artillery which could be airlifted across the Pacific in a matter of days.

Until now, he said, Laird has been satisfied that the Vietnamization program had provided Saigon with adequate military supplies and equipment.

"But in the secretary's view the massive Communist invasion across the demilitarized zone and the introduction of new and sophisticated Soviet weapons into the enemy's operational inventory make it only prudent that we review the logistics situation," Friedheim said.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The nation's officials gathered in the Capitol yesterday to pay tribute to J. Edgar Hoover, head of the FBI for nearly 48 years, as his body went on public view.

Mine Searched In Aftermath Of Disaster

KELLOGG, Idaho (AP)-As pumps sent tons of air underground, rescue workers began probing the hot, smoky shafts of the Sunshine silver mine Wednesday in search of more than 50 miners missing in a fire that killed at least 24 other men.

Mine officials said 58 men were unaccounted for; 108 others escaped to safety soon after the fire broke out in the nation's richest silver mine shortly after noon Tuesday.

Payoff For Yablonski Death Claimed From Union

WASHINGTON Pa. (AP)-Silous Huddleston, accused middleman in the assassination of United Mine Workers insurgent Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski, said today the payoff money for Yablonski's death came from the union.

The assertion was made in a statement in Washington County Court, where Huddleston pleaded guilty to three counts of murder and one count of conspiracy. The 21 1/2-page statement was read by an FBI agent.

FBI DIRECTOR DIES—J. Edgar Hoover, director of the FBI, died Monday night at age 77 at his home in Washington. (AP Wirephoto)

Hoover Replaced By Gray

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon sidestepped a possible election-year battle over replacing J. Edgar Hoover by naming an old friend and aide to be acting FBI director Wednesday.

The White House said Asst. Atty. Gen. L. Patrick Gray III will serve at least until after the Nov. 7 balloting. Nixon was described as anxious to keep the directorship of the Federal Bureau of Investigation out of partisan politics.

As an acting appointee, Gray will not be subject to Senate confirmation which would be required for a regular appointment.

Hoover, FBI chief for 48 years, died Tuesday.

In choosing Gray, the President bypassed a number of Hoover aides to select a Navy-educated lawyer with no law-enforcement experience.

A retired Navy captain, Gray served eight years as special assistant to the then Vice President Nixon during the Eisenhower administration.

White House press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon chose him because he is a man in whom the President places "implicit personal confidence."

Ziegler said Gray might yet be nominated to be the regular FBI director if Nixon wins re-election. Should the President be defeated, Ziegler said, the choice would be left to his successor.

Gray will continue to serve as assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's Civil DIvision. But his pending nomination to be deputy attorney general, the number two post in the department, will be withdrawn.

Although the post of FBI director pays $42,500 a year, Ziegler said the 55-year-old Gray will draw but $38,000 a year-his regular pay as assistant attorney general.

Although Gray technically was appointed by acting Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst, who released first word of the selection at a White House news briefing, Ziegler said Nixon actually decided on the matter.

Gray gained attention last weekend when he addressed the Orange County Calif. Bar Association and roundly lambasted press coverage of the Nixon administration.

He said much of the nation's press was guilty of "often inaccurate, biased and grossly unfair reporting."

A native of St. Louis, he was graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1940 and served in the Navy for 20 years, retiring as a captain.

Shortly after leaving military service, Gray joined the personal staff of Nixon, who was then vice president, as a special assistant, and remained in the post until 1961. He subsequently practiced law in New London, Conn.

Ziegler said Nixon knows Gray will perform his new duties "in the way the President wants them performed."

Asked why Nixon had passed over a number of career FBI men who were close associates of Hoover, Ziegler said the chief executive was not well acquainted with any of them.

Republicans Welcome In Miami

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The City Council today invited Republicans to hold their 1972 National Convention in Miami Beach, but urged the federal government to provide an elite 1,000-member "peace corps."

Before the 4-3 vote, the council rejected a motion to condition the invitation on the federal government providing the peace-keeping force composed of members of the armed forces on special duty.

The bid, which could be crucial to the possibility that Republicans will switch their meetings from San Diego, Calif., commits the city to provide rent-free use of its convention center for Aug. 21-24.

Richard Herman, in charge of convention arrangements for the GOP, said he would recommend to the nationall committee's arrangements committee that the convention be switched to Miami Beach.

The national committee was to decide this week whether to approve the shift.

Construction and financial problems have beset plans to hold the convention in San Diego.

Vice Mayor Robert S. Goodman, a co-sponsor of the peace corps proposal, said his request gained the full backing of Jerris Leonard, head of the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, only minutes before the council meeting began.

The convention peace corps would be drawn from "qualified men and women rigidly selected" from the armed forces, said Goodman.

Vaccine For Hepatitis?

WASHINGTON (AP)-The government reported Wednesday a possible new lead toward developing a vaccine against "serum hepatitis," a liver-inflaming malady transmissible by blood transfusions and contaminated medical syringes and needles.

Serum hepatitis is one of the two forms of hepatitis-both presumed caused by viruses-which together strike up to 70,000 Americans a year.

The Nation Institutes of Health reported that a team of its scientists had, for the first time, successfully transmitted an agent associated with human serum hepatitis to a laboratory animal. And the NIH said the agent is presumed to be a virus of some kind. The experimental animal was the rhesus monkey.

When Phase II of the Graduate Research Center is completed, the Center will look like this architect's model. The two towers shown in full will be constructed during Phase II. The third tower, whose top is visible behind the others, is already in use. At extreme left in photo are Arnold and Knowlton Houses, then North Pleasant Street, then the low position of the Graduate Research Center. The building shown in the lower right corner is Engineering East.

Grad Research Center To Enter Phase II

Bids will be opened Thursday, May 11 for the $11.5 million Phase II of the Graduate Research Center.

Phase II will be two towers of 161,000 gross square feet each, for office and classroom spaces, primarily for math and physics. Some of that space will also be for physics laboratories.

Architect for Phase II is Campbell, Aldrich and Nulty of Boston, architects of Phase I of the Graduate Research Center and of the School of Business. The firm is also involved in design of the UMass Medical School in Worcester.

The below-ground floors for each of the two new towers are already built, and are occupied by the chemistry department.

Trustees approved working drawings for Phase II in February.

FBI's Acting Director: L. Patrick Gray III

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — Asst. Atty. Gen. L. Patrick Gray III, the new acting director of the FBI, is a "firm believer in law and order" who "loves his country more than life itself," a former law partner said Wednesday.

"He won't coddle the enemies of America. That's for sure," said Max M. Shapiro, shortly after hearing that President Nixon had named Gray to double-at least until after November-as a replacement for J. Edgar Hoover. Hoover died Tuesday.

Gray, 55, is remembered in this Navy-dominated town as a career Navy officer who retired in 1960 and immediately joined then-Vice President Nixon's staff as an adviser during that year's presidential campaign. His law training started while in the Navy, and he took up a law practive in New London-primarily civil cases-in 1961.

Shapiro says Gray has two sons who were wounded while with the Marines in Vietnam in 1971-one of them, Patrick, Jr., who left Princeton University in his senior year to join the Marines.

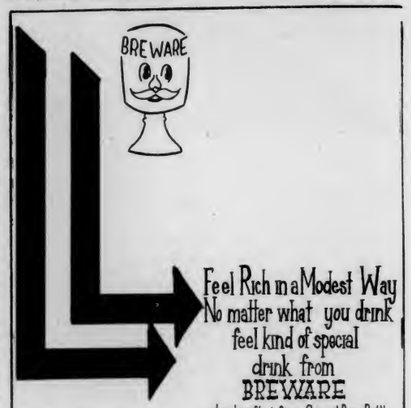
"This is the type of background that you're dealing in," Shapiro said. "His whole background is such that he's always served his country."

Shapiro said Gray spent his time with the New London law firm working in civil law, not criminal-"in the corporate and taxation and estate planning" aspects of law. He declined to say what kinds of clients the firm serves.

Shapiro added, however, that Gray has experience working with criminal law from his days in the Navy, where he got his introduction to law. When he retired in 1960, Gray was an assistant to the joint chiefs of staff and the Secretary of Defense.

A native of St. Louis, Gray joined the Navy in 1940 after getting an engineering degree from Rice University in Texas four years before. He spent 18 months aboard the battleship Idaho and then transferred to submarines.

Gray took part in five patrols against the Japanese during World War II.



Then, after the war, he was one of 18 officers selected from hundreds of applicants to attend a three-year postgraduate course at George Washington University Law School in Washington. He graduated in 1949.

Eventually he rose to the rank of captain and served first on the staff of the Atlantic Fleet Submarine Force commander in New London. Then he was assigned to the Pentagon.

In a 1964 interview with the Norwich Bulletin, Gray said he had been a close adviser to Nixon in his 1960 political campaign and had advised him not to run for governor of California in 1962-an election Nixon lost.

Gray is quoted in the interview as saying Nixon, between 1946 and 1960, had been "the focal point of many attacks by all sorts of groups within the United States because of his dedicated anti-Communism and his attempts to show the extent of the Communist menace within the United States."

At the time, he had on his law-office wall a picture of the President with the inscription: "To Pat Gray-with grateful appreciation for his toughminded and superbly efficient work as a key member of my campaign staff."

30% Students Down About USA

NEW YORK (LNS) -- Did you ever feel like you'd rather be anywhere else than here in the good ole USA? Well, if you did (or do) you have plenty of company. A recent study of college students on 50 campuses, conducted for the John D. Rockefeller III Fund in 1971, revealed that 30% of college students interviewed would rather live somewhere outside the U.S. Canada, Australia, and Western Europe led the choices of alternatives.

The study revealed that many students are more uneasy and worried than in 1970. Only a handful believe our national policies will lead to peace or economic well being.

While the majority of those interviewed classified themselves as having "mainstream" political beliefs, their answers to specific questions seem to contradict this. These students cited Vietnam, pollution, poverty, and prejudice as "the main indication that things are not working well in the country." Most believe that big business "really runs the country" and that such major institutions as penal system, and business need "drastic" reform.

Only 1 in 10 interviewed believe that the Vietnam war will be over by the 1972 election and nearly 90% expect to vote in that election. "In 1971 there was only one objective which even 50% of the students saw as justifying going to war--counteracting aggression. This represents a considerable decline from a 64 per cent reading in 1968.

The report found the "greatest single erosion of relations to authority" was in the worker-boss relationship. In 1968 56% of the students "did not mind the prospect of being bossed around on the job"; in 1971 the figure was 36%.

In 1968, 69% of the students believed that "hard work will always pay off"; in 1971 only 39% felt it would.

For Only $50, You Can Rent A Girl

NEW YORK (LNS) -- "We're filling a need -- like stocking shoes in a shoe store," explained offhandedly, one of the owners of Rent-A-Bird -- which runs a service which rents out women (and men too -- but mostly women) for people who want a companion for a night on the town. It seems these services are popping up all over -- in San Diego, Dallas, Miami, New York and Los Angeles. Or as the New York Times puts it, "In an era in which the women's liberation movement is reminding the public that a woman is a person and not just an entertaining diversion, female escort services are blossoming."

Rent-A-Bird in Miami, for example is endorsed by the Chamber of Commerce and the Better Business Bureau. Its 150 women escort "thousands of people each year," says one owner, Allen Budd. Its clients include tired businessmen, rowdy conventioneers and rich widows. Rented women get $50, rented men get $55. "They have to pull out chairs and open doors," comments Budd.

To "rent-a-bird", a traveler phones the company from his hotel, which dispatches a representative who checks the customers' identification, asks him to sign a contract that stipulated that the "customer is responsible for all expenses incurred and agrees he will not use alcoholic beverages in excess or engage in conduct that would embarrass or offend the escort."

He then shells out the money for the evening -- he can even pay with his American Express Card or Master Charge.

"Rent-a-girl" services are often used by businessmen to "fill out" their parties if they're missing the prescribed number of women. Or as the New York Times commented, "Many businessmen feel that attractive girls -- like good food and wine -- help provide the congenial atmosphere that is conducive to closing a deal."

Women Don't Want Princess

PORTLAND, Ore. (LNS) -- Portland high School women are demanding an end to the High School Princess Selection, which is part of the city's annual Rose Festival. Every year senior women parade across the stage in special high school assemblies. Later, one of the candidates from the high schools, chosen by city businessmen, is crowned Rose Festival Queen.

This year, women from several high schools formed Women Against the Rose Festival Princess Selection (WARFPS). WARFPS has proposed to the Portland School Board that students hold a binding referendum in each school to vote on whether they wish to participate in the princess selection. Last year two schools held such referendums and both voted to end the selections.

The Portland School board, however, wants to keep the princess selection and has refused to allow binding referendums in other schools. WARFPS has organized a petition campaign, and has won support from many teachers and the presidents of the Portland Federation of Teachers and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom. One high school teacher who's all in favor of ending the beauty contest is Miss Oregon of 1958.

Calley Isn't Packin 'Em In

COLUMBUS, Georgia (LNS) -- Although its sponsors had hoped to attract as many as 75,000 people to a rally to urge President Nixon to free Lieut. William L. Calley Jr. by Executive Order, only about 250 heeded the call.

"All of us are somewhat disappointed at the limited turnout," said Vincent McCauley, a rally organizer in Columbus where Lieutenant Calley is being held following his conviction a year ago for the murder of Vietnamese civilians in Mylai.

Blacks Threatened At New York School

COBLESKILL, N.Y. (LNS) — Black students at a small New York agricultural college were awakened early in the morning when windows of their dorm were smashed by bricks. In the insuing attack at Cobleskill Agricultural and Technical College, white students hurled a molotov cocktail which fell short of a dorm window and left a burning cross on the lawn. A sign, posted on the wall of a corridor, read, "You're fucking with more than fraternities now nigger."

The harrassment was related to a fight the day before between a black student and white fraternity member over money belonging to the black student. Before it was over, several other fraternity members and black students had joined in.

William Washington, director of the Equal Opportunity Program (EOP) which most of the third world students at Cobleskill are enrolled in, said that the school administration has openly displayed a negative attitude towards the students. Washington said that the Director of Admissions deliberately does not recruit third world students and that the Dean of Instruction immediately expels EOP students with academic problems whereas the regular student population is given a one-month probation period.

Black students presented a proposal to the administration some months ago demanding that the college hire more third world faculty and administrative personnel, institute a black studies program and set aside a cultural center, but the administration never responded.

UMass Engineers Build Unique Auto

The machine is the UMass entry in the national Urban Vehicle Design Competition. Begun last fall, it got a boost this spring from the National Science Foundation, which awarded the project a $13,490 grant under the Student Originated Studies (SOS) program. SOS supports some 134 student projects all over the U.S. aimed at environmental problem solving.

"The most novel thing about our design is its power plant," said Paul E. Tartaglia, the UMass group's faculty advisor. "It's going to have a 20 horsepower Wankel engine driving a hydraulic pump which in turn will drive a hydraulic motor."

In a Wankel engine, gasoline is burned inside a chamber shaped like a fat-waisted figure eight. The burning gases force a triangular rotor to revolve, directly rotating a power shaft. Advantages of the Wankel are fewer parts and compactness.

The variable displacement hydraulic engine will have an accumulator to handle acceleration loads and other extra power demands; it will drive the wheels directly without a transmission. The Wankel may run on propane gas. The group is testing propane carburation equipment through cooperation of the Propane Equipment Co., a New Jersey firm.

Dr. Tartaglia, an assistant professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, is working with about 30 graduate and undergraduate students. They represent only his own department, but civil, industrial and electrical engineering, the School of Business, and the economics department.

The Urban Vehicled Design Competition is being run by a group of students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the same group that sponsored the 1970 Clean Air Race from Cambridge, Mass. to Pasadena, Cal. Final competition for the urban vehicle entries will be at the end of the coming summer at the General Motor Proving Grounds in Milford, Mich.

In addition to the $13,490 NSF grant, support for the project comes from a number of areas. A $1,000 grant comes from the New England Consortium on Air Pollution; another $1,000 from the UMass Provost's office; and two $500 grants have come from the UMass mechanical and aerospace engineering department and the Urban Vehicle Design Committee

Other support has come through donations and loans of equipment. American Bosch of Springfield has lent an accumulator, the Saab company has provided crash-resistant bumpers, Sears has donated batteries and the Propane Equipment Co. has donated propane carburation equipment. The main elements of the power train were acquired at rock-bottom prices, Tartaglia said, the Wankel from Arctic Cat Enterprises and the hydraulic elements from the Sunstrand Corp.

Whether the UMass vehicle wins or loses in the national competition, it is providing a tremendous educational experience for all concerned, Tartaglia said. The School of Engineering is granting five hours of academic credit to most of the participating students.

Barre Decides To Pollute

BARRE, Vt. (AP) — Officials of the city of Barre, unable to find a suitable dumping ground for sludge accumulated from the city's sewage treatment facility, are considering a novel solution.

They're thinking of dumping the sludge, as well as raw sewage, directly into the river the plant is intended to help keep clean.

They say it is cheaper to pay a $50-a-day pollution fine than it is to operate the city's sewage treatment plant.

According to Barre City Manager Thomas Duff, the fines would cost the city a little more than $18,000 a year-and it costs the city $38,000 a year to treat its sewage.

Barre Mayor Wilfred Fisher suggested-apparently as a joke-that the city should pump the accumulated sludge from the treatment plant into the river right away while the water level in the river is high.

The mayor said that way, no one would ever know the difference.

Officials are considering dumping the sludge and raw sewage into the river, they say, because they can't find a dumping ground for the sludge that the Vermont Health Department will give its approval to.

The Stevens Branch flows into the White River, ultimately joining the Connecticut River between the Vermont and New Hampshire borders and flowing into Massachusetts.

Sticking It Through

The Undergraduate Student Senate ended another year at the close of their meeting last night. The year of Lee Sandwen was marked by a growing urgency in the need for students to be represented in many more decision making policies than in the past.

The Senate's work, which should not be judged solely on the basis of their Wednesday night parliamentary game comedy shows, actually did go a long way in increasing the student voice in the running of their own affairs.

Some of the results include a commitment by the trustees to work on a "critical" rent problem on the Amherst campus, a substantial reduction in what was originally a $130 rent increase for next year, the shake-up of the structure of the Athletic Council so that there will be greater representation of students, increased funding of student groups without increased student taxes, and holding the line on mealticket costs for next year.

The restructuring of the Student Government Association by the Senate will also aid in greater cooperation between area governments, the Student Senate and the Student Union Governing Board.

We hope the trend will continue next year. This year's Senate took what started out as an apathetic year and turned it into something quite productive. Throughout all that bullshit, something actually got done.

The Unscheduled Withdrawals

Here's To You, Brother

By WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY
Washington Evening Star
April 29, 1972

There is indication that the evangelist Mark (sometimes referred to as John Mark) was the young fellow who lightfooted it away from the scene of Jesus' arrest with a lot less than his skivies on. Embarrassing indeed.

But a piece of parchment about the size of a person's thumbnail may very well have caught a worldful of biblical critics with their scholarship down.

Over in the Vatican City there's a pretty strong hunch among scholars that that scrap of papyrus could be part of a book that very man wrote some years later - a book commonly called the Gospel according to Mark.

Naturally, this has the religious world all agog. And it should. If this does turn out to be part of the Gospel of Mark then you can chalk up one for the good guys. Tests indicate the papyrus scrap contains letters that were written not later than 50 A.D. and possibly as early as 35 A.D. If it had been written much earlier than the latter date then Mark would have had to wait around to see if the resurrection was really going to take place after all so he could finish his book.

What it all amounts to is that this scrap of paper gets the record right back to within a handful of years of the actual events described. It would mean that unless Mark was a rather careless writer many of the events he described be either actually saw with his own eyes or else heard from numerous people who had witnessed them with theirs.

Biblical scholars, particularly the German ones, have been strapped with documents that date back only as far as 135 A.D. - a whole century removed from the actual events. As they quaffed their ale they came to the conclusion that some of the things Mark described just couldn't be. Too Fantastic. In other words, someone was exaggerating that bit about Jesus walking on the water.

And since the scholars figured that Mark was the first gospel written, those other guys - Matthew, Luke, and John - cribbed a little and copies what Mark had put down and then dressed it up a little themselves so they could sell their publishers on a novel new slant. Adding a few sensational tidbits about turning the water into wine and raising the dead surely wouldn't hurt book sales a bit.

But if the book were written within a short time after the events described, then it would have been pretty hard for Mark to get away with an exaggerated version of anything that he described. It would have been disputed far and wide by people who were being mocked and persecuted for holding those very zany views about Jesus themselves.

Apparently the resurrection of Jesus wasn't such a far-fetched idea to Mark. He used 40% of his space in the gospel describing events that led up to it. When he got to the point of his book he stuck with it.

There is nothing absolutely certain about that scrap of paper actually being the original Gospel of Mark. But one can pretty well tell that its discoverer, Spanish Jesuit Jose O'Callaghan, feels he has hit on something of consequence.

Mark, who is symbolically depicted as a lion, was an action man and generally showed the blood and guts aspect of Jesus. It is generally felt that he was slanting his book toward the Romans and they couldn't care less about whether Jesus was the Messiah or the Word Incarnate or the bread of life or the light of the world. But they could dig a Jesus of action. Let Matthew, Luke and John take care of the other details.

Compared to some Greek manuscripts, Mark's writing is quite clear. But if he hadn't written it before 50 A.D. his writing would have been considered old-fashioned. The Zierstil Greek lettering that the fragment is written in went out of style about a decade or so after Christ's death. It is probably the type writing Jesus used, assuming He had to know Greek to get by very well in that part of the world.

Tuesday was Mark's feast day in the Catholic church. Tradition holds that he went to Rome and then up north to Aquileia with the Apostle Peter. When Venice was founded in the 6th century refugees from Aquileia made him their patron saint. St. Mark's Cathedral still is the outstanding landmark of the city. Merchants from the new city, in what must have been a most sanctimonious theft, are said to have stolen his remains from Alexandria where he is also highly revered.

When the discovery was announced the other week in Rome, one biblical researcher commented right away: "This means that seven tons of German scholarship may now be consigned to the flames."

Having studied much of their findings and never quite buying them, I'd be prone to raise a hefty stein to that one.

Hoffbrau, please.

Here's to you, Brother Mark.

The 'Muskie' Is Recalled

WASHINGTON–Presidential Motors announced last week that it was recalling the "Muskie," once considered the hottest model on the road.

In a terse statement announcing the recall, Presidential Motors said, "Engineering difficulties and lack of consumer acceptance have forced us to recall the "Muskie.' "

The story behind the rise and fall of the "Muskie" is one of the great stories of automobile history. It was originally developed by such great presidential designers as Averill Harriman, Clark Clifford, Sol Linowitz, Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania and John Gilligan of Ohio. They wanted a quiet model that would hold the middle of the road, had the confidence of the people and was safe at any speed.

From a design point of view, it had to appeal to the little man, but at the same time it had to look like a Lincoln.

After working at their drawing boards for two years, they came up with the "Muskie," a name they were sure would have consumer appeal.

Before investing money in the model, the manufacturer took surveys all over the country. They discovered that, compared to other models that would be offered in 1972, the "Muskie" was leading 2 to 1. At one point, it was rated more popular than the "Nixon," and Presidential Motors was sure it had a winner on its hands.

As a result of the surveys, millions of dollars were allotted for a high-powered advertising campaign. The "Muskie" was described as a front-runner, unbeatable in the cities and in the countryside. It was designed for comfort and had something for everybody–the poor, the farmers, the blue-collar workers, the businessmen. It came in all colors and all sizes. It was, according to the ads, the best buy for 1972.

With an overconfidence not seen in automobile circles since Detroit put out the "Romney," the manufacturers took the "Muskie" up to New Hampshire for road testing.

Everything was going along fine when suddenly, in front of a national TV audience, the "Muskie" broke down in Manchester, N.H.

Presidential Motors was appalled. All the time and effort and money invested in the model was wiped out by one small radiator leak.

To make matters worse, the press reported that the "Muskie" had a very short fuse and every once in a while went out of control.

The engineers and designers took another look at it and tried to repair the damage before trial runs in Florida. But the "Muskie" came in a bad fourth in the race, and some people at Presidential Motors decided they had another "Romney" on their hands.

The advertising money was cut back, and the people working on the "Muskie" campaign were taken off salary.

Investors started backing off. The consumer began taking interest in another smaller model called a "McGovern," which had been built in the back room of a garage in South Dakota.

The next disaster took place in Wisconsin when, after a slow start, the "Muskie" ran out of gas.

The final trials came in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Presidential Motors decided that if it couldn't sell the "Muskie" there, they couldn't sell it anywhere.

Once the sales figures came in from those two states, Presidential Motors had no choice but to recall the model. The manufacturers have announced that while the "Muskie" will not be sold in Ohio, Michigan, New York or California this year, it will be on display in the showroom at the Miami Convention Center, in case anyone still wants to buy it.

More About ROTC

To the Editor:

1. To get into the accredited ROTC courses, the prerequisites of either ROTC candidacy or permission of the instructor are necessary (with the exception of Air Science 111). Consult your schedule book.

2. The federal government would be foolish to pull out federal aid to the University if ROTC were removed, because at this point they have too much to gain by being here.

3. "A ROTC-officer's education is a joint and mutual responsibility of the participating academic institution's and the respective military departments" to the extent of agreeing to renew the ROTC contract each year–not in any agreement about course content or coordination of academic courses or majors with the ROTC program.

4. The faculty senate has not had any control over course content; however, they were allowed to change the name of Military Science to Military Art (?), and a civilian professor of Hotel Law was allowed to teach Military Law. (These are unmistakably tokenistic changes, that only affect the surface of the ROTC curriculum.) Furthermore, when the Faculty Senate was asked to approve credit for ROTC courses, they decided not to approve. (It becomes hard to assume that they would disapprove of giving credit to a program they were supposedly involved in.)

5. Also, although credit has been refused for corps training for a long time, it has become a required part of ROTC courses for ROTC candidates. So, in that sense, it is still accredited.

6. To point out that military instructors have "advanced degrees from civilian institutions", only says that they were able to co-opt other institutions into accreditation and cooperation. Furthermore, the idea of comparing the academic status (or background) of these instructors to those in other departments is only laughable.

It might be helpful to point out that historically all "liberalizing" in the army has come up through the bottom, via draftees and public support for GI's who are against the war (like some of those who called for support at Westover) and are at the brunt of the military's racist, sexist, and overall neo-colonialist attitudes. Keeping the Reserve Officer Training Corps here does nothing more than help them refine their insanity.

The day before yesterday, an article appeared in the Collegian entitled "All About ROTC" (by Arthur L. Lupien). This is in response to that.

Total Amazement

To the Editor:

Total amazement! This is the only way I can describe the lecture by Adelle Davis on Monday, May 1, at the Student Union Ballroom.

Ms. Davis borrows some questionable scientific fact to enforce concepts and ideas which could lead to much misuse and abuse of nutritional methods. Indeed some of her recommendations could be harmful. For instance, to imply that diabetes is caused by a diet deficiency, shows ignorance of the scientific facts.

It is interesting to note that the only published scientific data she referred to was done in 1920. In this case she described the "beautiful people" among the Eskimos who eat "natural" food. Unfortunately she did not state the fact that most Eskimo women have nothing but stubs for teeth at the age of 35 due to the fact that they chew hides in order to produce leather for clothing–Is this the good life? All her other references were to "a friend of mine" or to unpublished data. This in itself makes one wonder.

Another area which was not mentioned is a comparison of the good old days to today. Just before World War I, rickets, beriberi, pellagra and goiter were common diseases in the United States. Today these are no longer even tabulated as a cause of death. The fact is that in 1900, the infant death rate was over 162 per 1000 children. Today it is less than 25 per 1000. A better nutrition indicator, however, is the mortality rate between one and four years. Since 1900 this rate has been reduced 95%! Moreover children reach their mature height five years sooner than they did in 1900 and grow three to six inches taller.

Ms. Davis in her books claims that food fortification does not work, yet in her talks she lists one of the advantages of drinking whole milk to be the presence of Vitamin D. Vitamin D occurs naturally only in fish oils to any extent and it is added to milk. How does one resolve this dichotomy?

Again in another area she points out the dangers of processed food then recommends the use of soya flour. Soya flour is obtained only by means of sophisticated food processing.

We heard of the lack of Vitamin E. The need for this vitamin has never been established but beyond this Vitamin E, or tocopherol as it is known chemically, is a food additive to aid in preventing fat rancidity. Does this mean that Ms. Davis is promoting the use of food additives?

Ms. Davis recommended that milk be not pasteurized in this country. From a public health point of view, this is a very dangerous practice, yet pasteurization does not reduce the nutritional value of milk. Why should we adopt this recommendation?

Finally it is interesting to note that faculty were not allowed to ask questions–the reasons for this you may be able to decipher for yourself.

I find it deploring that such nutritional fallacies have such a wide following. Some vitamins are toxic when used in excess yet we heard of the advantages of the use of ridiculously large amounts of vitamins. It is my sincere hope that the ideas promulgated at her talk will not be used without some degree of rational thought. We are what we eat–but we are not 50,000 milligrams of Vitamin C per day.

What's Best

To the Editor:

The Economics Department has been unfair and academically unscrupulous to Prof. Michael Best and the students as well. Prof. Best has been at UMass for three years and has been rejected for reappointment. It would seem to many (fellow economists, students, faculty) that Prof. Best is totally incompetent since he is getting bounced after three short years. It seems ths way because colleges and universities usually allow a professor six years to prove his ability as an educator and researcher before a tenure decision is made, and only the most incompetent professors are released from this six year period. I can assure you from personal experience, that such a rejection is not a question of Prof. Best's competency as a teacher. If one reads the Student Evaluation he will see that I am not alone in judging Prof. Best as the finest professor in The Economics Dept. and one of the very finest at the University. Don't believe that it is a question of a lack of published material, because it isn't.

The case of Prof. Best's reappointment has political, ideological and ethical implications not unlike those of Herbert Marcuse at the University of California, San Diego and Angela Davis at U.C.L.A. The Economics Dept. is dominated by a group of individuals whose approach to economics not only differs but is in conflict with that of Prof. Best. this is the core of the controversy.

Prof. Best must be humiliated and both he and his family must suffer because a group of individuals wish to impose their professional biases and kill academic freedom. If Prof. Best is bounced, the University will suffer because it will be stuck with an Economics Factory. The student is denied the freedom of real choice and he will egress from the Economic Factory without the benefit of the important radical perspective offered by Prof. Best.

Misrepresentation

To the Editor:

In the article, "ROTC Debated on WMUA", I was indirectly quoted as having said that I am "against R.O.T.C. since R.O.T.C. courses are not only taught by military men but the courses are inaccessible to the student body". This is a journalistic mistake (perhaps due to the pressures of having little time to prepare the story and make the printing deadline) which substantially differs from what I actually said in quoting from an American Civil Liberties Union statement concerning the R.O.T.C. program, "R.O.T.C. courses are either unavailable to non-R.O.T.C. students or only available to a small number of non-R.O.T.C. students by special permission of the instructors. Also, although Corp training is decidedly non-accredited, it is a requirement for other courses with accreditation."

In looking through the pre-registration course-listing booklet, it is readily seen that this assertion is quite true on our campus, and that the statements made in the Collegian were therefore unintentionally misrepresented.

Anyone desiring further information regarding R.O.T.C. and the petitions circulating about campus can find it by going to the concourse level of the Campus Center from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. where two tables (pro and con) are manned for that purpose. Petitions are also available for those so moved...

No More War

To the Editor:

Everyone I know who speaks of the Vietnam 'war'-speaks with a profound sense of futility. The war is wrong, but "what can I do?". Most of us feel powerless to do anything. We protest in Washington, New York, Springfield, and Westover, trying to show visibly to our government our hatred of this ridiculous, seemingly pointless war that endures no matter what we say or do.

I say that as peacemakers we are being led down the wrong path. We are, by our one-sided demonstrations against only our government, subtly congratulating the North Vietnamese in their killing ability. As one famous entertainer put it, "I like their style, they're daring".

Killing North Vietnamese 'style' has the same end as killing by U.S. bombs, of South Vietnamese guns–Death. I, for one, feel that the "Pen is mightier than the sword", that there is something that we can do. If you want, as I do, an end to this grievious insult to human life, I urge you to write. I urge everyone on this campus to write today to Le Duc Tho, North Vietnamese Politburo member and to Xuan Thuy, North Vietnamese delegate to the Paris peace talks, urging them to withdraw from Laos, from Cambodia, from South Vietnam and write to President Nixon and our ambassador to the Paris peace talks, write the heads of the Soviet government and the Soviet embassy. Write to all your friends and relatives and urge them to put letters in the mail. It's up to us, but we have to act fast.

If you are for peace and for an end to this madness, let it be known today. As saying nothing is the same as saying 'yes', let's say-No more war! Let's, each of us, take responsibility for ourselves and say what you and I believe, that if each of us stands up for peace, We will be heard; that a flood of letters, telegrams, and telephone calls, would show world leaders that we want them to stop attacking, Now. Peacemaking is a personal responsibility-not just for campaigns, and presidents, partisans and interest groups of all sorts–it's for you and me. I urge you again to write today. Enough public opinion can halt this killing. I am writing my letters now, today. Please join me in this effort. I urge you to write.

Call Him Irresponsible

To the Editor:

To all undergrads of the School of Education:

In view of recent events at the school, I feel the need to express my position as a nominee to the School Council. The School Council at present is the powerless body representing all factions of the school community. Under Constitution it should be the major decision-making body of all school internal matters. Here are my feelings: I feel as if I don't need any of you for votes or advise. No one, understandably, wants the position of being on a useless body so I have no opposition or competition. I am alienated enough from the school being an undergrad, and everyone knows what being an undergrad at the school is like.

I feel irresponsible enough. I was put on the Council last semester only because I happened to go to a meeting as an observer. I was a successful undergrad representative by missing most meetings and being silent to those I attended because I don't talk the Ed School language. Against the pleas of anyone from the school that I represent, I did not vote to keep open the Marathon so they could get their Mod Credits. In fact I came with such preconceptions and contempt to that meeting that I was drunk and disorderly and finally walked off the Council, without exercising my vote to all.

In a school that is 3/4 women and committed to combatting racism, I am a White Anglo-Saxon Protestant Male. How about that!

If elected, I feel I can continue to represent undergrad apathy because I really don't feel like going to any meetings. I can also be of the opinion that most of the school's members are just women anyhow and enact any racist, sexist or absurd position open to my species. I decided to let my name stay on the ballot because it would look good on my record. Thank you kindly students(?)

Nominations are still open in the School Council office at the Education building and you can get any information from the TPPC office as you enter the building...or you may keep me.

Orchestra To Perform Variety Of Musical Styles

Music for UMass-Amherst Symphony Orchestra concert Wednesday, May 10, is reviewed by Conductor Ronald Steele, left, and two musicians--Dougias Purcell, center, and Robert Amato. The concert will be at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium on the UMass campus.

A variety of performing mediums and musical styles will mark the concet program of the UMass Symphony Orchestra Wednesday, May 10, at 8:15 p.m., in Bowker Auditorium.

Appearing with the Symphony Orchestra will be vocalists Dorothy Ornest, soprano; Jon Humphrey, tenor; and John d'Armand, bass. All are members of the UMass music department faculty. The University Chorus, directed by Alan Harler, will also appear.

Miss Ornest has sung with several orchestras, including the New York and Rochester Philharmonics, and the Springfield and Pioneer Valley Symphonies. She has performed numerous opera roles and given several area recitals. Mr. Humphrey has performed with such groups as the Robert Shaw Chorale, the New York Pro Musica, the Cleveland and Philadelphia Orchestras and UMass recital groups. Mr. d'Armand studied at Tanglewood under Boris Goldovsky and is a founder of the Paul Ulanovsky Foundation for Chamber Musicians. Mr. Harler, besides directing the University Chorus, directs the University's Women's Choir, Madrigal Singers, and Collegium Musicum.

The program will be: Francesco Manfredini's "Concerto for Two Trumpets, Strings, Clavicembalo, and Organ," featuring student soloists Robert Amato and Douglas Purcell; Benjamin Britten's "Simple Symphony for String Orchestra;" Igor Stravinsky's "Symphonies of Wind Instruments;" and J. S. Bach's "Cantata No. 130--Herr Gott, Dich Loben Alle Wir," featuring the chorus and solo vocalists.

Conducting the orchestra will be Ronald Steele, associate professor of music. Conductor Steele is a graduate of the University of Michigan and a former violinist for the U.S. Air Force Symphony Orchestra. He founded the UMass orchestra in 1963 as a 27-piece string ensemble, which has tripled in size, with members from UMass, and Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and area communities.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Demonstration Ends At Hamp

AMHERST, Mass. (AP)- About 40 black and other racial minority students Tuesday ended their two-day occupation of the science-administration building at Hampshire College.

The group, which call itself the Third World Organization, took over the building early Monday, demanding the administration "work exclusively" on a list of proposals for more minority students, faculty and administrators and increased financial aid.

The students met twice with college president Charles R. Longsworth before halting their demonstration.

Longsworth and the group were to release formal statements later today.

Hampshire is an experimental liberal arts college opened two years ago with the support of the University of Massachusetts, and Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke colleges. It has 620 students, 55 of them black, Spanish-speaking or Orienal.

Empty promises.
That's what you get when other beauty products talk about lemon.

Only Lemon Up has the natural juice of one whole lemon... controls oily skin and hair naturally.

Most lemon beauty products just give you lemon perfume. Or a dab of lemon extract.

Only Lemon Up gives you the natural juice of one whole lemon in every bottle. And lemon juice is nature's own grease-cutter.

So Lemon Up Shampoo cleans cleaner and rinses fresher, for brighter, longer-lasting shine.

Lemon Up Facial Cleanser whisks away dirt and oil and leaves your skin naturally fresh and glowing.

It cleans pores and kills bacteria on skin with its anti-bacterial formula. Lemon Up, the only lemon beauty products in the world with the natural juice of one whole lemon. And that's a promise we keep.

Being a teacher may be tough, but teaching deaf students is even tougher.
The School of Ed offers a Media Specialists Program to prepare students for such a task--the only program of its kind in the U.S.

Media Specialists Trained For Deaf Schools At UMass

Enjoy listening to a professor talk on...and on...? Probably you are bored to death. If the professor includes a few slides or transparencies, chances are you will be more interested. Now imagine being deaf and trying to lipread a teacher talking on and on. It's rough! Slides, transparencies, movies and video tapes all help make lessons more interesting and more understandable for deaf students.

The School of Education offers the only undergraduate-graduate program in the United States to prepare media specialists to work in schools for the deaf. This unique Media Specialists Program for the Deaf begins at the Junior year level. After completing the three-year program students receive Master's Degrees in Education.

Schools for deaf children have a special need for media. Because the children cannot use their hearing effectively, visual presentations are vitally important. Media Specialists in these schools produce or obtain movies, video tapes, slides, transparencies and filmstrips to teach a specific lesson. Although media specialists do not teach, they work closely with students, teachers and administrative staff.

The second semester of the graduate year is spent entirely at a school of the deaf. Under the direction of a competent media specialist, the student would assume all the duties of a media specialist, including producing materials, budgeting, ordering and cataloging. He would also student-teach for a period of three weeks.

In addition to formal coursework, students are exposed to a wide variety of experiences with the deaf. Tutoring deaf children, learning and teaching sign language and attending both local and national conventions are all included.

The Media Specialists Program for the Deaf is federally funded through the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped, U.S.O.E. in cooperation with the School of Education.

Students entering the program must be committed to improving the education of hearing-impaired students through media.

Fifteen students will be selected to join the program next fall. Any sophomores interested in learning more about the specialized program should contact Anita Largent, Room 10, Thompson Hall. Telephone: 545-2455.

Stronger Dollar Predicted

NEW YORK (AP)-International bankers expect the dollar to continue to strengthen despite this week's fall in stock prices and the failure to raise interest rates.

Higher interest and stock prices had been expected to attract dollars from Europe and Japan back to the United States. It was an outflow of dollars which had touched off the dollar devaluation earlier this year.

But the Dow Jones stock average lost almost 20 points in two days this week and some banks, which had raised their prime rates of interest, have reduced it.

"I don't think the interest rate development will hurt the dollar movement," said Harold Cleveland, First National City Bank vice president for international economics. "This had more to do with Eurodollar rates and they are still above the rates for the European currencies."

This opinion was shared by Franklin R. Saul, former assistant secretary of the Treasury, now with F.S. Smithers and Co. Saul said the interest and stock price downturn was apparently "just a small wiggle in an upward line".

"The dollar flow turned this way with the over-all direction of the economy," Saul said.

"The war in Vietnam is not going well but that doesn't mean it will make U.S. industry unprofitable. The big thing is that a higher level of activity here will attract more European investment."

Student Insurance Goes Out To Bid

The two year contract for the supplemental student insurance, which provides low-cost health insurance on a group basis to those students participating, expires at the end of August this year.

A student sub-committee of the Student Health Advisory Board had been meeting regularly during the past two months to consider what changes in coverage should be incorporated in the specifications on which insurance companies will bid this Spring.

Since medical costs have increased during the period the contract has been in effect, it is anticipated that bids this year will be appreciably higher than they were two years ago. Being aware of this situation, the committee has made some minor changes in the basic policy to help keep the expected increase to a minimum. Chief among these changes are the addition of a general co-ordination of benefits clause which applies to the entire policy, and a co-insurance clause which applies specifically to the extraction of impacted or unerupted wisdom teeth.

At the same time, a certain liberalization of benefits was approved which, although providing more complete coverage to students, is not expected to cause any increase in the premium. Changes in this area include modification of the accidental injury provision, which will allow payment to a physician for services in his office as a result of an accident, and a change in the consultation benefits which will allow three visits a year to the same or different specialists, rather than to three different specialists only.

In addition to these changes in the basic policy, the committee has also considered some additional options. The insurance companies have been asked to bid separately on these options so that their impact on the premium can be known, and a more informed decision made. The major change being considered is the transformation of the present maternity coverage, which applies to married students only, and is available only through the dependent plan, into a comprehensive maternity benefit, including voluntary termination of pregnancy, which would be available to all students.

Also being considered are proposals to pay surgical benefits on a usual and customary fee basis, rather than according to a set schedule, or to increase the present schedule of surgical fees by 25%. A final option under consideration would extend the number of inpatient days allowed for mental and nervous disorders from 10 to 30 days per year per student.

The bids on all of these proposals will be opened by the University on Wednesday, May 10. The student committee will meet Thursday May 11 to review these bids and will at that time make a recommendation to the Director of the Health Services as to what coverage should be included for the next two years.

A half-hour panel show over radio WMUA is planned for Tuesday May 9. During the show an opportunity will be given for listeners to call in any questions they might have concerning the student insurance. Members of the panel available to answer questions will include the Director of Health Services, members of the insurance committee, and members of the Student Health Service Advisory Board.

School Of Ed Experiments In Community Education

For anyone interested in a wholistic and operational project in radical educational innovation, a Community- Based Education Committee has been formed of doctoral and Masters candidates at the School of Education. Its intention is to design and implement an educational model in a small New England town which will attempt to break down the following assumptions which the present educational system functions on:

--that work and play are and should be separate processes.
--that school is for learning and after-school is for working and playing.
--that working and playing are and should be separate from learning.
--that learning is "for kids" and that graduation should attest to the fact that a person has "finished" learning.
--that education is apolitical.
--that education means information transfer from a "teacher" to a "student".
--that a "curriculum" is necessary and can prepare one for "life".
--that all lists should or can be exhaustive.
--that competition is man's normal tendency and schools should press for competitiveness.

They are presently involved in the following activities:

--writing proposals for funding.
--forming relationships and contacts with the people in the target community.
--studying the political, economic and social structure of the target community.
--identifying the most valuable personal and physical resources in the community which can be enlisted for the project.
--determining the felt needs of the people in the community so that the project can be designed to their needs and with their direction.
--researching into ongoing allied projects to determine their successes and/or failures and reasons for such.

The project is still in its early stages and the Committee is in need of any and all skills or information you may wish to offer.

Welfare Payments Decrease

BOSTON (AP)-The state Welfare Department reported today that payments in the aid to families with dependent children category decreased 27.5 per cent betweeen December, 1971, and January, 1972.

In statistics released today, the department said medical assistance payments decreased by some 11.6 per cent during the period; general relief payments decreased 5.2 per cent; old age assistance payments decreased 6 per cent, and disability assistance payments decreased 3.7 per cent.

Expenditures in the AFDC category went from $27.2 million during December to $19.7 million in January, the report said. Medical assistance payments dropped from $30.7 million to $27.1 million during the period, the department said.

Despite the decrease in total payments during the period, the department reported slight increases in the caseload in each category except medical assistance.

UMass Doctor Develops VD Detection Technique

A venerreal disease detection technique, developed by a UMass physician, will be distributed worldwide by a newly-formed non-profit institute.

Dr. Eugene Madsen, staff physician at UMass Health Services, initiator of the institute, stressed today, "We will be interested in much more than the technique."

He noted that the "multi-purpose and multi-facet" institute will be primarily involved in the immediate "application of our preset knowledge to detect the huge reservoir of unknown female VD carriers."

The VD detection technique was developed by Madsen while he was working with UMass research grant. Extensive successful testing and use of the detection technique was conducted by Madsen until he decided to make it available on a larger than regional scale.

The method involves use of a tampon. The user sends the sample in a bottle to the testing laboratory. Forty-eight hours later, she telephones the lab for a report. Numbers, not names, are used in the program.

Instead of transforming his technique into a profitable commercial enterprise, Madsen has turned over all rights to the institute for non-commercial and use.

Madsen said that a March story on the detection technique in The Daily News and subsequent articles in professional communications have drawn national and international attention. This includes commercial development interest, he said.

"The intent of the institute and my philosophy is that this program is to go to the people to avoid any commercial exploitation," Madsen explained.

In addition to make the technique available, the institute will also work on research and development of new techniques; consultation services to other agencies on all private and governmental levels and educational manpower training.

Madsen explained, "One of our principles will be to be in the role of a consumer advocate. We fully intend to inform the public on a national and international level of the availability of this test at zero or minimal cost.

"We also will inform the public that they can demand the test and demand that it be made available. The institute intends to make known the reasonable cost for treatment and follow-up treatment," Madsen added.

"We will not be in the business of price-setting, but we feel the public should know the technique is available at no or low cost."

Among the participants in the creation of the institute are Dr. Stephen Swirek, chairman pro tem of the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology, UMass Medical School, and chief of staff at Wesson Women's Hospital, Springfield; Dr. Thomas McBride, medical director of UMass Health Services; Leo Hall, director of laboratory services for UMass Health Services and Atty. Janet Rowe Dugan of Amherst.

Institute associates will include Swirek, Peter Cunningham of Rochester, N.Y., director of Council on Population and Environment (COPE) and former president of Cunningham Corp.; Mrs. Harriet Saltonstall Gratwick of Linwood, N.Y. and the president of Aeotek Corp. from New York.

Final Exhibit Week For African Gallery

The week of May 8-12th will be the final exhibition in the gallery at New Africa House at the UMass for this semester.

Displayed will be those pieces which reflect the creativity of the Black students who are enrolled in the Welded Sheetmetal Sculptoring class offered by the Department of Afro-American Studies.

The many creations reflect the spirit of Africa and protest as well as more traditional themes. These students have had no prior art training but the finished products reflect the gold mine of latent artistic talent which lies in Black communities.

Professor Ray Miles who is an accomplished sculptor in numerous mediums will also display a few products of his own imagination. Professor Miles is well known to this area having put on exhibits on-campus, in Springfield and at the Jones Library in Amherst Center.

The exhibit will be open daily from 11-5 p.m. and most of the works will be available for sale.

Isabel, from Ogden, Utah, informs us, "I am a Virgo from Utah. I read in your column that Peggy, from Oakland, Calif., has learned the se rat of life--'to flatter Leo and Libra and criticize Virgo.' But I think she is only halfway up the ladder. She has not yet learned the common denominator of the signs, which is to love and praise. She might get a Virgo to do her dirty work by criticizing--but reluctantly. If she would try love and praise on Virgo, she would have a true, loyal friend for life. I think Peggy is an Aries!"--Isabel from Ogden.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Publicity accompanies your activities. What you do will receive attention. Know this and don't attempt to hide or obscure. One in authority is much concerned. Be receptive, but stick to principles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Light touch prevails. Many around you are careless now about details. Nail down promises by getting them in writing. Sagittarian figures prominently. Hold off on journey, if practical. Check plans involving vacation, recreation.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Some delays, roadblocks are for your ultimate benefit. Know this and respond accordingly. Estates, policies, finances affecting younger person--these are spotlighted. Be ready for surprise.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Legal maneuver may affect property, basic security. Ask questions and obtain answers. Investigate. Give full play to intellectual curiosity. Find reasons "why." Reject the superficial. Dig deep for information.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Confusion could be order of day. Organize efforts. Strive to put bits, pieces together. Family member could aid. Seek harmony in domestic area. Taurus and Libra persons are involved. Extend hand of friendship, are involved. Extend hand of friendship.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Choose the unorthodox. Applies especially where money transactions are concerned. Guard against one who is expert at smooth talking. Get facts. Eschew wishful thinking. Abandon wasteful techniques, methods.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You coma face-to-face with reality of current situation. Be ready for change of view, opinion. Creative thinking is emphasized. Capricorn is in picture. Legal counsel may be required. Don't procrastinate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are finished with one phase of activity. Begin seeking alternatives. Crystallize ideas, plans. One who seeks your opinion actually can provide you with solutions. Know this and be receptive. Aries is involved.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Friend who seems confused actually has workable idea. Listen and learn. Stress originality. Profit is in picture if you are receptive. You add to possessions. You are handed something for nothing.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sudden opportunity occurs. Your standing is elevated. Cancer-born individual is in picture. Where there was lethargy, there now is direct action. Take initiative. Move ahead with verve, confidence.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can shake free of emotional rut. You can have choice. Key is to welcome experience, change, variety. Someone is pulling strings for your benefit. Sagittarian may play prominent role. Opportunity is knocking.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check details. Friendly persuasion may cause you to overlook essentials. Be realistic. Be wary of those who profess to possess key to get-rich-quick scheme. Your own counsel now is most constructive.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are basically practical, even though you might be the first to deny it. This has been a year of new, different encounters and you will find that July is your most significant month. The past can be finished. The future beckons--and it is bright.

Francis Still Steaming Over Lost Seconds

BOSTON (AP)-The Boston Bruins, led by old folks Eddie Johnston and Johnny Bucyk, owned a two-game lead while the New York Rangers moaned about lost seconds today in the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup championship showdown.

The Bruins made it two in a row in the best-of-seven series by edging the Rangers 2-1 Tuesday night on Johnston's brilliant goaltending and goals by Bucyk and Ken Hodge.

Ranger Coach Emile Francis had plenty to say about the officiating and the work of the timekeeper before heading for New York and games No. 3 and 4 Thursday night and Sunday afternoon.

Hodge, who had three goals in Boston's 605 first game victory, broke a 1-1 tie while the Bruins enjoyed a two-man advantage at 11:53 of the third period. New York's Bruce MacGregor was in the penalty box for tripping John McKenzie along with teammate Walt Tkaczuk, who was sent off for tripping Phil Esposito.

"Tkaczuk didn't trip Esposito," Francis said. "Esposito was so tired that he just fell down. There were a few penalties that could have been called the other way However, the officiating works both ways and you can't cry about it."

Francis was disturbed plenty about what he thought was a raw deal in the final minute of play. An offside was whistled, and Francis claimed the clock kept running.

"They stole four seconds from us," he said. "I've been around this game a long time and when the whistle blows the first thing I do is look at the clock. There were 54 seconds left and they let four seconds run off.

"When you're a goal down, every second is precious. I've seen games tied at 19:59, just one second before the final buzzer."

Boston Coach Tom Johnson said both the Bruins and the Rangers played "a real good, tight hockey game." He added that his charges have to play a good game to beat New York.

"I thought our club played very well, although we had a tough time for a while in the second period," the Boston Coach said. "Eddie J. had a super game. It was real good goal-tending."

"This was a tough game," the 35-year-old Johnstor. said. "There's no breathing room when you're in a 1-1 game. I don't think the Rangers can be any tougher than they were tonight. Their goalie, Gilles Villemure, was super. I never saw him play better."

Johnston, who alternates in the Boston goal with Gerry Cheevers, had 27 saves, while Villemure was credited with 23. Johnston's biggest larceny was against New York center Jean Ratelle in the first and third periods.

Rod Gilbert tied the count for the Rangers in the second period and then Hodge came through with Boston enjoying a 5-3 advantage in skaters in the finale.

Orr's assist on Bucyk's goal enabled him to set an NHL playoff record of 18, one more than Montreal's Jean Beliveau totalled last year.

Agee Leads Mets, 8-5

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)-Tommie Agee belted two doubles, scored twice and added a run-scoring single Wednesday to support the pitching of rookie left-hander Jon Matlack and lead the New York Mets to an 8-5 victory over the slumping San Francisco Giants.

The Giants concluded one of the worst home stands in San Francisco major league history with a 2-11 record, remaining last in the West Division.

Matlack, 3-0, was staked to a 2-0 lead in the first inning against Steve Stone, 0-2. Bud Harrelson led off with a walk and scored on Wayne Garrettt's double. Garrett pulled his left hamstring muscle on the play and was replaced by Ted Martinez, who scored on Agee's single.

Agee's first double chased Stone in the third and the Mets' center fielder scored on Cleon Jones' single. Tow-out doubles by Agee and Rusty Staub added a run in the fourth off Ron Bryant.

Matlack lost his shutout bid in the fifth as pinch-batter Bernie Williams walked and Chris Speier doubled when second baseman Martinez lost his high pop in the sun.

New York scored four runs off Jerry Johnson in the eighth.

Matlack was lifted in the eighth after Willie Mays' walk, Bonds' single and Dave Kingman's triple scored two runs.

Tolan All The Way Back

ST. LOUIS (AP)-"I'm even more pleased with my running than my hitting," said Bobby Tolan, making a comeback after two injury setbacks last year.

The statement of the 26-year-old Cincinnati Reds centerfielder was surprising because his .446 batting mark leads the majors through Tuesday's games.

"But," said Tolan after cracking three hits including a home run against the St. Louis Cardinals Tuesday night, "I always felt that I could hit. The question was the pins."

A .316 hitter in 1970, his second season with the Reds, Tolan also led the National League with 57 stolen bases before misfortune struck not once but twice in 1971.

While participating in an off-season basketball game, the fleet outfielder suffered a torn Achilles tendon and missed the start of the baseball season.

Then, while he was running in the outfield May 7 at Los Angeles, the tendon snapped again and forced an operation.

"I took extra time this time making sure I was ready," said Tolan, who sat out all of last summer and worked hard in the winter.

"I went to the ball park every day and worked with weights," he said. "Then I'd spend time running in front of my house. It was a matter of regaining the strength and the confidence.

"I didn't want to talk too much about baseball during the winter, and my wife was a help. She knew it meant so much I didn't even want to talk."

Since going hitless in the season opener, Tolan has taken off on a 10-game hitting streak and is winging with his fastest start in the majors.

His 25 hits include seven doubles, a triple and three home runs, all adding up to a teamleading 16 RBI.

Furthermore, he's scored 14 runs and has stolen eight bases in nine tries, second only to teammate Joe Morgan's nine for nine.

"I've slowed down a little but only on my start," Tolan said.

"I get up in the morning and I limp, I actually limp for two or three minutes," he added, "but once I get warmed up and the game starts it doesn't bother me."

Reds manager Sparky Anderson, recalling Tolan's role in Cincinnati's drive to the 1970 NL pennant, is among those who believe Tolan's all the way back.

"He's just taken up where he left off in '70," Anderson noted.

A Bruise, Some Clues, And A Flip

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP)-A field of 14 to 19 shaped up Tuesday for Saturday's 98th Kentucky Derby, with the difference depending on a bruise, a cruise, some clues and the flip of a coin.

Elliott Burch, trainer for Paul Mellon's Rokeby Stable, said he was awaiting some clue from rider Braulio Baeza before he decides the status of Derby Trial winner Key to the Mint.

"I'll talk with Baeza and then Mr. Mellon, but I can't make any decision until sometime Thursday. I may not know even then and might enter him and scratch later it Iwant," Burch said.

Entries for the world's most famous horse race must be made Thursday morning, about 55 hours before the call to the post for the $125,000-added, 1 1/4-mile classic.

Burch said the other half of the Rokeby entry, Head of the Riber, is a definite starter, with Mike Hole, his rider the past three races, to be in the saddle again.

Gene Cilio, trainer for Emanuel Lizio's Three Nine Stable's U Pos Ent, said his decision depended on a cruise around the Churchill Downs track slated for the son of Bosun Thursday morning.

"Right now, we're still in there, but it all will depend on how he works tomorrow morning," he said.

Frank J. Carlin, head of the syndicate that owns Bold Music, said the colt's stone bruise was healing nicely, but his female rider, Mary Bacon, already was talking like the next race could be the Preakness.

And Smiley Adams, assistant trainer for Robert E. Lehmann, said he planned to enter both Napose and Majestic Needle Thursday with only one of them to start.

"We'll put them both in both the Derby and that other race the Twin Spires Purse and start one of them in each race. It's a tossup how we'll split 'em," he said.

Head of the River, the Everglades winner who finished 13 lengths behind his stablemate, in fifth position in the Trial, "raced a lot better than it appears on paper," Burch said in confirming his status as a Derby starter.

Juan Arias, the Venezuelan trainer who saddled last year's surprise winner, Canonero II, declared Dr. Hassai Shina's Hassai's Image a sure starter, but said he'd have to give some thought to the other half of his possible entry, Lester's Jester.

Riva Ridge, the probably favorite of the more than 100,000 fans who will witness the 5:30 p.m., EDT, Derby, is scheduled for his final workout Thursday, just before entry time.

Going to the racetrack for a breeze at the same time will be the Derby's likely second choice, Mrs. Maribel Blum's Hole Your Peace. Carlos Marquez has the mount on Saturday.

Homer Pardue wasn't at all disturbed with No Le Hace's 2 1/2-length defeat in the Derby Trial.

"He hadn't run in a month and I really hadn't done a lot with him...but the race should help him a lot," Pardue said.

Billy Rogell wrenched an ankle in the Trial and trainer Larry Fontenot withdrew him from further Derby consideration. Howard Tesher did the same with Suspected, a distant 10th in the Trial.

MacPherson Unveils 89 Prospects

By EARLE BARROLL

If Dick MacPherson's forecast on next year's incoming freshmen football group is indeed a sure fire prediction, then some strange things may be taking place in UMass sports as a result...like:

—Freshman basketball coach Fan Gaudette scrapping Iowa State (a set play) for a power sweep from half court in.

—Wrestling coach Homer Barr setting up goal posts in the wrestling room.

—Baseball coach Dick Bergquist administering nutcracker drills before baseball games.

Sounds farfetched? No...Not when you consider that MacPherson is not only high on these young men as football players, but also as possessors of pure athletic ability, period.

At the Newman Center yesterday noontime Mac made public his near-completed list of some 89 high school athletes who'll be trying out for the freshman squad come next fall.

Don't get alarmed. MacPherson was quick to make note that not all are on scholarship. There are no violations. But, between scholarships, financial aid, trust funds by the parents and the CCEBS program, the number totaled 89.

His list stretched all the way from a state high school wrestling champion from Maryland to a quarterback from New York who plays a pretty good brand of basketball to a split ender from Connecticut who flies to a running back from Massachusetts who hits a baseball a mile.

With spring drills completed as of Saturday's Red-White clash (20-20) MacPherson and his staff have already begun phase one on next year's recruiting.

Under the direction of recruiting coordinator Larry Pasquale (defensive backfield coach) "junior Recruiting" will be intensifying in the Massachusetts, Connecticut, Northern New Jersey, and Schenectady, N.Y. areas in the next couple of weeks.

The process in itself is very involved.

—800 recommendations are received at the UMass football office.

—A form is then sent to the guidance department of the schools which cuts the number in half.

—From 400 the number is further cut to 50-80 top prospects through intensive research via films, coaches, interviews with other experts, etc.

—Correspondence is made during the summer with these athletes. They are then left along during the high school season. MacPherson said that coaches like it better that way...it enables them to concentrate entirely on football.

—After the season they are contacted once again to renegotiate and found out where UMass stands with them.

—From there it's up to the coaches, other schools, alumni and close acquaintances as to where these young men will end up.

MacPherson feels very strong about alumni participation. "They have to make a commitment to us. We dare them to sell UMass. This goes on all the time with alumni from Harvard, Yale and the like."

Red Sox Organization Reeks With Incompetancy

By BILL BALLOU

It is becoming more and more obvious that Eddie Kasko will not be manager of the Boston Red Sox much longer. There is a coffin in Boston's manager's graveyard with his name on it and it's just waiting to claim him. I'd give him to June 15 at the most.

If (or maybe when would be more accurate) Kasko does get the heave-ho, it'll be merely a symptom, not a cure of the sickness the Sox are infected with.

The whole Red Sox organization is rotten with incompetence from Tom Yawkey down through to Johnny Pesky, and the sins of the family are being vested upon Eddie Kasko. This isn't to say that Eddie is any less incompetent, but don't expect Pesky or P.A. announcer Sherm Feller to take the blame. Or Dick O'Connell for that matter.

Ah yes, Dick O'Connell, the biggest of the boobs ensconced on Jersey Street. O'Connell had a great season general managerial-wise in 1967 and made his reputation that year. His trading genius was incredible, in a season that was incredible. Nothing went wrong for him. He picked up Jim Landis (remember him) for one game, let Jim hit a game winning home run, and then released him. That's the way it was all that year.

But during the last four, and this present season, writing has appeared on the wall and everyone has seen it except Dick and Tom Yawkey, (if Tom can still see). Writing like Luis Aparicio, Danny Cater--one thing he won't do is strike out--, Mike Derrick, Chuck Hartenstein; must I go on?

Dick's baseball judgement isn't what it used to be. He trades now not to improve his ballclub, but to maintain the status quo. Time, and the Yankees, Tigers and soon the Brewers, are passing him by. Dick should be let go.

Hopefully Tom Yawkey will see enough to let him and a few others go. But Tom has never been concerned with excellence in the past, why should he now? Supposedly Yawkey is a good man. He's kind to dogs, contributes to the Jimmy Fund, keeps his players happy by indulging their every whim and runs a nice, clean plantation in South Carolina. An upright citizen.

Unfortunately, it seems that 01' Tom is also a boob. And as a natural effect, he hires boobs.

Yawkey has owned the Red Sox for forty years, and in those forty years he has never had a world champion. Out of those forty teams he has had just two pennant winners. His tendency has been to run things like his plantation; easy-going. But if you don't produce, and are a manager, you get fired. Mike Higgins, Billy Jurges, Mike Higgins again, Billy Herman, Kasko, Eddie Popowski for awhile and Pete Runnels, all have managed at one time.

These men were (Kasko still is) incompetent and got dumped.

But if you're a manager, and you do produce, you get dumped anyway. Dick Williams won a pennant, albeit not in the plantation style so unsuccessful before, and then had the unmitigated gall to step on some toes when things were going badly. Needless to say he was dumped.

What's the answer to the Sox' problems?

Easy, hire a nice manager who wins pennants without being nasty, or get some talent so good they don't need a manager. Unfortunately, Tom Johnson's busy for awhile.

Seriously, there must be a housecleaning in the Red Sox organization, and it must start at the top with Yawkey and O'Connell. Kasko deserves the boot, too. But it is very rare for an owner to fire himself.

Maybe in July when the Sox are mired in last place with a record of about 16-62, Tom will fire Sherm Feller. After all, you've got to start somewhere.

BILLY HERMAN..not alone in the pasture of Tom Yawkey's easy going plantation.

Women Split Two; Host Mt. Holyoke

The UMass Women's Tennis Team, despite cold and windy weather and threatening skies, opened their season with two matches in the past week. The women's first match against Smith was rained out and will be replayed on Tuesday, May 9 instead. This will be the first time that Smith has ever competed against UMass in varsity tennis competition so it should prove to be a noteworthy event.

On Tuesday, April 25, the UMass team coached by Sally Ogilvie finally began their season with a 4-3 victory at home against Keene State.

Winning players were Heather MacConnell, a sophomore who played first singles; Caren Tsapatsaris, who played second singles; Betty Londergan, who won by default at fourth singles; and Jane Lynch and Bobbie Smith, a strong second doubles team.

Carol Mottau, third singles, Karen Dexter, fifth singles, and first doubles team Judy Beecy and Mary Lou Londergan lost in hard fought matches.

The team traveled to Mt. Holyoke on Thursday to meet their opponents in the first of two matches slated between these two schools. The Mt. Holyoke girls won a very close match, 5-4.

Winning again for the second straight time was sophomore Caren Tsapatsaris, second singles, and Betty Londergan, freshman as fourth singles. Third doubles team Beth Perkins and Brenda Thomas, and fourth doubles Betty McGrath and Bonnie Prince also came away victorious.

Defeated were Heather MacConnell, Carol Mottau, Karen Dexter, and double teams of Mary Lou Londergan and Judy Beecy, and Jane Lynch and Bobbie Smith.

This afternoon the UMass tennis team will again meet Mt. Holyoke.

The remaining matches for the women's tennis team are all at home on the WOPE courts. Besides Mt. Holyoke meet Springfield College on Monday, May 8, and the re-scheduled Smith match Tuesday, May 9. Coach of the team, Miss Ogilvie is working with a young team this year, as there are no returning seniors. The two strongest players, Ms. MacConnell and Caren Tsapatsaris, are sophomores. Miss Ogilvie hopes the terrible weather conditions which have disrupted the season so far will abate and she expects to see improvement from the team in the remaining matches.

Lakers, West Stop Knicks

NEW YORK (AP)-Los Angeles' Jerry West became the first player in National Basketball Association playoff history to score 4,000 career points as the Lakers held off a fourth-quarter New York comeback and defeated the Knicks 107-96 Wednesday night, gaining a 2-1 advantage in their championship series.

West, named to play in the NBA's All-Star game in each of his 12 seasons in the league, and the Most Valuable Player in this year's midseason classic, scored 21 points against the Knicks. His last two points, on a jump shot from the right side with just over three minutes remaining, gave him 4,001 points in 133 playoff games.

Knicks' forward Dave DeBusschere who started despite a pulled muscle in his right side above the hip, suffered in Sunday's second game, played 20 minutes in the first half but generally was ineffective.

However, DeBusschere did not play in the second half, when the Lakers broke open the game with a 20-5 spurt in the first six minutes.

The Boston Bruins and New York Rangers resume their Stanley Cup showdown tonight at Madison Square Garden with game number three of the best-of-seven series. Boston holds a 2-0 advantage.

84 More Arrested At Westover

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Eighty four persons were arrested at the main gate of Westover Air Force Base yesterday afternoon in what is now the third week of protests. Six of those arrested were juveniles.

In the past two weeks over 300 people have been arrested for civil disobedience at Westover.

The demonstrators, mostly faculty and students from UMass, sat down in two circles on the road leading into the base to protest the continuance of the Vietnam war.

After giving the demonstrators a two minute warning 30 Chicopee police arrested the protestors.

They were processed later that afternoon in Chicopee District Court. The demonstrators were charged with disturbing the peace, disorderly conduct and preventing persons from going to their place of employment.

Those who pleaded guilty or nolo contendre were given ten day suspended sentences on the first two counts and a 10 dollar fine, also suspended, on the third count.

Individuals who entered pleas of not guilty, approximately half, were given a trial date of June 7.

Demonstrators started arriving at the base at 1:30 in the afternoon. By 2:15 there were over a 125 people gathered near the main gate, either to commit civil disobedience or offer their support to those who did.

After comments from several of the protestors and a moment of silence in memory of all war dead and students killed at Kent and Jackson State, the demonstrators formed two circles and sat down on the road.

After giving a two minute warning the police moved in. While a smaller number of the demonstrators went limp and had to be dragged or carried to the police bus most offered no resistance.

It was all over in five minutes.

In general the police were friendly. One officer, after trying to lift a student who probably weighed over 170 pounds, said he was going to hurt his back if the student didn't get up. The student complied.

Another officer, asked by a protestor what he thought of the demonstrations, gave a non-commital smile, laid his hand in the student's shoulder and told him to, "take it easy."

Chicopee Police Chief Kulig refused to comment on the proceedings except to say the police were there to, "preserve the peace."

Once on the police bus the protestors sang "We Shall Overcome" part of the way to the courthouse. A professor who shouted, "The NLF is going to win," was told by a student that, "we don't say that here."

In addition to the civil disobedience demonstrators were handing leaflets to cars entering the base. Few stopped to take them. One leaflitteer said only one out of five cars had stopped.

The demonstrators seemed relaxed throughout the day. A number said they had been arrested before at Westover and planned to keep returning to the base for an indefinite period of time.

William Norris, attorney for the protestors, said he got involved because he felt it was, "The least someone can do," to protest the war. Norris has been working with the demonstrators for the past two weeks without pay.

Those arrested were brought to District Court in Chicopee. After waiting in the "tank" for 20 minutes the protestors were booked and photographed and returned to cells. Men and women, according to state law, were separated. The women were reportedly returned to the tank while the men were locked inside the cell area. Once booking was complete all the protestors were brought into court and sentenced.

According to an impromptu count taken in the courtroom 28 UMass faculty and 24 UMass students were among those arrested.

The presiding judge told the protestors what their sentences would be and explained court procedure. The entering pleas and sentencing went until after five in the afternoon.

The cost of processing the demonstrators has cost Chicopee over 25,000 dollars at this point. The City had asked the federal government to help defray the cost, but that request was refused. Edward Ziemba, Mayor of Chicopee said he hoped that any fines given to arrested demonstrators could be used to help pay the costs.

More protests are planned for today. The civil disobedience was intiated during the strike according to one of the organizers, as a way to show that there is strong disagreement in the nation with President Nixon's Indochina policy.

SUG Questions Hotel

By JOHN M. DONNELLY

Last night the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board debated on whether or not the Campus Center Hotel budget should be separated from the Campus Center budget itself.

The discussion arose because some SUG Board members felt that the burden of the hotel's $274,457 deficit should not be given to the students. The students support the building through a yearly $60.00 Campus Center Fee. The hotel runs at an estimated cost of $9.75 per room per night, whether the room is vacant or full. The hotel must make this same amount on each room every night to break even.

SUG Board member Rocky Hodgeson said, "What concerns me is that the hotel is loosing about $300,000 per year and the students are getting soaked for it." Hodgeson continued by saying, "We should discuss alternatives whereby we can increase the rvenue of the building (hotel)."

One SUG Board member brought up the possibility of advertisement as a solution to the deficit problem. Terry Grinnan responded by saying. "The management is not legally allowed to advertise for the Campus Center Hotel." The trustees meant for the hotel to be used as a dining, housing, and conference center for use by university students, staff, and dependents. This excludes the general public, and therefore prohibits the use of advertising. It was also added that the Internal Revenue Service may start to tax the hotel if it is made available to the general public. This does not apply to a building which isn't making money.

SUG Board will debate this further when they will review the management's upcoming budget.

Busing For Sunday Concert

By DON BISHOP

As announced earlier in the week, this Sunday will be the date of the Spring Concert. Six months of hard work, delays and frustration for the Concert Committee of the Student Senate will come to an end at 1 p.m. in Alumni Stadium.

The three groups that are scheduled to appear are Fleetwood Mac, McKendree Spring, and Ashton Gardner Dyke and Co. The concert is open to all UMass students and their guests.

Primarily on the minds of the Concert Committee members at this point is the delicate nature of the concert. The outcome of Sunday's affair will determine the future usage of the Stadium for concerts.

Damage to the Stadium, in particular the playing field, will virtually eliminate it as a staging ground for concerts; in addition to leaving the Committee liable for damages.

Concert Committee Chairman Lee Trousdale urges all those planning to attend, to keep this fact in mind. The Committee has asked that people refrain from bringing any glass containers into the Stadium in order to aid in the clean-up and to assure that the playing field will not be damaged.

Originally the Committee planned to open the field in addition to the East stands for audience usage during the concert. The effects of this week's weather may force the closing of the field to those in attendance.

If the field dries to some extend, then the field will remain open as originally planned. In either case, some kind of a blanket or covering will be needed if you plan to sit on the grass.

Parking and transportation to and from the concert presents another potential problem for Sunday. The only lot adjacent to the stadium that will be open is F lot. For this reason, students are urged not to drive to the concert. Instead, for those of you who feel that it is too far to walk, bus transportation will be provided to the stadium from 11:30 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. and away from it between 4-6 p.m. The various stopping points of the buses are:

Bus #1
1) Sylvan; M lot in back of School of Education
2) Grad Research Building (for Quad)
3) Newman Center
4) Whitmore
5) Hampshire House
6) Pierpont

Bus #2
1) Fraternity-Sorority Park
2) Chadbourne
3) Hills North
4) Fearing and North Pleasant Streets
5) Pierpont

Trained marshalls, medics, and a group from Room to Move will be in various locations during the concert. Approximately half of the estimated 30-40 marshalls will be wearing identifiable blue arm bands. All medics will have on the usual Red Cross arm band.

The stage for the concert is a "trailer stage", courtesy of the Parks Department of Springfield. It will be set up on Sunday morning. If you are interested in helping out with any aspect of the concert, you can attend a final training session tonight at 8:00 p.m. in 805 CC.

It is hoped that all will aid in the cleanup after the concert.

Brooke Says "Get Out Now"

WASHINGTON-Sen. Edward W. Brooke yesterday took sharp issue with President Nixon's war policy in Indochina, saying "time is running out on Vietnamization...and we should get out now."

The Massachusetts Republican said he recognized the President's desire for time to "let Vietnamization work, but there has been too much time...We have given all that can be expected to give."

Brooke has previously challenged the Administration's judgment and Mr. Nixon's conduct of the Vietnam war.

His position now has been made more emphatic, he said, with the fall of Quang Tri.

"I don't see how we can say that Vietnamization is working with the apparent inability of South Vietnamese troops to withstand the attacks from North Vietnam regulars and the Viet Cong, said Brooke. "If it was a success, then it would not demand the American air and naval power to the degree we are called up to use."

Noting the "strong possibility" that the ancient capital of Hue "may fall," Brooke said: We should bring our troops out of Vietnam and get our prisoners in return."

Duck Catching 201's Field Trip

By ALAN CHAPMAN

While passing the pond yesterday morning, I was witness to half dozen full-grown men chasing around a duck. Yeah, a DUCK!

What 'cha doin'? says I.

"What 'cha doin'?" says I.

He was in his forties, character in his eyes, and a little worn...maybe a little more worn than usual.

"Tryin' to catch that ---- duck."

"Oh," I said in a whistle. "Why?"

"Ya see, there's been kerosene spillin' into here for a couple of days from the Fine Arts Center and the Library. It messes up the birds' natural oils so they can't float (did you ever see a duck sink?) They have to stay on land and the dogs chase 'em. The other day the swans got chased all the way to Hadley. That's a long way for a swan to run."

In the course of trying to capture the little creature it was learned that boats don't turn as fast as ducks; but only after it (the boat) had taken the deep six.

No matter how hard they tried, how fast they ran, or how much they cursed, that duck was not to be caught.

So, if you go by the pond today, don't be surprised if that evasive little feathered friend is still there, magestically standing watch over the island and paddling thru the oily mire that is OUR POND.

Student Insurance Options Pending

By HUGH OWEN

The Student Health Insurance, a student composed subcommittee of the Health Services Advisory Board, is at present seeking student opinion on two new options to the Student Insurance Plan.

The contract with the company which has handled the insurance coverage for the past two years will expire shortly. Bids have been sent to other insurance companies in an attempt to secure an insurance policy that will contain the new changes at the least expensive price.

The present policy has been changed to eliminate options which are presently of little benefit to the students and are raising the cost of the insurance. Two new options which the Student Health Insurance would like to add to the policy are:

— twenty day in-patient care in the Mental Health Services instead of the present ten days.

— maternity and abortion coverage.

The Student Health Insurance would like student opinion of these options. Student wishing to learn more about these options or who have any general questions are urged to call either Brenda Rau at 546-6274 or Larry Flint at 253-2639. Interested students may also attend a Student Health Service meeting on May 11 at 5:30 PM in the Infirmary Library on the third floor.

The Strike Still Needs Your Support

By DAVID MAGNANI

On Thursday morning, April 20, the first day of the Strike, a group of students were at Strike headquarters looking for a way to put their strike time to use. Their first concern was that they should begin to break down the illusion that deep anti-war sentiment existed only among students. They felt that students and community people had been consciously polarized for too long and that the war was an important common issue through which this polarization could reduced.

They decided that, as a group, they would act as support and resource people for established community groups. Since that time they have worked with the Valley Peace Center, a long established local anti-war group to; 1) collect 700 signatures from Amherst residents petitioning the Amherst Board of Selectmen to take a public stand calling for immediate total military withdrawal from Southeast Aisa, 2) sent telegrams to Brooke, Kennedy, Sargent, Conte, Laird and Nixon informing them of the Board's action, 3) collected 1400 signatures petitioning Brooke to vote for upcoming legislation to cut off appropriations for the war and 4) collected 1300 signatures petitioning Silvio O. Conte, this district's U.S. Representative, to support similar legislation.

All this was done by a small group of seriously committed students from Amherst College and UMass; students who consider themselves not rhetoriticians but workers.

Tonight, Friday, May 5, at 7:30 p.m. in the lounge of the Amherst First Congregational Church, they are organizing, along with members of the League of Women Voters, a public forum for the taxpaying residents of Amherst on the issue: "Your Money and the War". There will be the following films: You Don't Have to Buy the War, Mrs. Smith, The Automated Battlefield, and Another Family for Peace followed by small group discussion on the films.

Visitors from food cooperatives will be on hand to answer questions concerning ways in which the average citizen can reduce his contribution to the war effort. Coffee and other refreshments will be served.

If the evening is successful, future forums will be held on other issues such as prisons, racism, consumerism et al. The primary focus of these efforts is directed toward increasing the political awareness of all citizens: a first step toward a citizens' retrieval of power.

For the work to continue your energy is needed. If you wish to become involved or would simply like more information please call the Community Involvement Committee (C.I.C.) at 546-4200.

S. Viets Begin First Counter-Attack

SAIGON (AP) — South Vietnamese paratroopers launched the government's first counter-attack Thursday since the North Vietnamese opened their spring offensive, striking in the central highlands.

In a day that saw a relative lull on the fighting fronts, there were these other developments:

—The Viet Cong's clandestine radio said a "revolutionary administration" had beenset up in Quang Tri, the northernmost provincial capital that fell to the North Vietnamese Monday.

—The United States and South Vietnam began a program aimed at reversing the series of defeats, and the first reconditioned U.S. tanks were delivered to the northern front to replace losses. Washington announced more war planes are being sent to Southeast Asia, bringing to around 300 the number sent to aid the South Vietnamese since early April. This will bring the total of U.S. land-based and carrier-based strike planes in the area to more than 800.

The South Vietnamese counterattack in the central highlands was designed to end the isolation by road of Kontum, the provincial capital that is expected to be the first objective when the enemy's expected big push comes there.

Several hundred government parachute troops made a combat assault between the cities of Kontum and Pleiku in an effort to clear the Chu Pa mountain pass on Highway 14. The cutting of this road interrupted the flow of supplies and troops from Pleiku to Kontum.

From Pleiku, Associated Press correspondent David J. Paine reported that the paratroopers engaged the enemy shortly after pouring out of their helicopters eight miles south of Kontum and 19 miles north of Pleiku. The fighting still was going on at nightfall.

A team of Pentagon experts arrived to look into the problem of supplying the South Vietnamese with the weapons to meet the North Vietnamese, who have an arsenal of Soviet-made arms.

It is expected that enemy forces, probably regrouping and resupplying, will assault Hue, 32 miles to the south in the next several days.

The city of Hue itself was seeking to restore a semblance of order after being flooded by refugees and an influx of disorganized government troops beaten in the Quang Tri fighting. There were scattered incidents of looting and violence.

Military police moved to round up stragglers and deal with enemy agents infiltrated into the city.

Casualty reports released Thursday by the South Vietnamese and U.S. commands showed a drop in allied tolls and an increase in the number of enemy claimed killed in the fourth week of the offensive, which began March 30.

U.S. headquarters reported two Americans were killed in action and 24 were wounded last week. This compared with 10 killed and 78 listed wounded a week earlier. However, the command said 19 Americans were missing in action last week. Many were know to be crewmen aboard lost planes or helicopters. Six Americans died of nonhostile causes.

South Vietnamese government casualties last week were 769 killed and 2,794 wounded, Saigon headquarters said, as compared with 1,149 dead and 3,376 wounded in the previous week.

Peace Talks Called Off Indefinitely

PARIS (AP) — The United States and South Vietnam called off the Vietnam peace talks indefinitely Thursday because of what was termed "a lack of progress in every available channel."

The chief U.S. delegate, William J. Porter, used the words "in every available channel" in announcing the suspension of the conference. He apparently referred to secret talks with the Communists as well as the semipublic meetings.

U.S. and North Vietnamese officials refused to confirm the secret talks. But Paris is alive with rumors that a high American official, possibly President Nixon's national security advisor, Dr. Henry A. Kissinger, met earlier this week with North Vietnamese politburo member Le Duc Tho. Tho arrived Sunday from Hanoi. Kissinger and Tho met secretly and fruitlessly in Paris several times last year.

Thursday's 149th plenary session quickly became snarled in usual charges and counter-charges. The Unites States said the North Vietnamese did not answer the U.S. demand made last week for discussion of measures to end the North Vietnamese invastion of the south.

Porter made the demand on returning to the talks after he had suspended them for five weeks.

North Vietnamese delegate Xuan Thuy called on Porter to answer his demands for the United States "to put an end to its aggression, its Vietnamization, and its escalation of the war...and give a serious response" to the Viet Cong's peace plan.

Porter indicated last week he would suspend the talks if the North Vietnamese did not agree to put an end to their invasion.

"We got sterile propaganda and bombast" in reply, U.S. spokesman Stephen Ledogar told newsmen. He reminded them that Nixon had said the United States was not returning to the conference table after its suspension of the talks from March 23 to April 27 to bombast.

The Vietnam talks, secret and semipublic, were thus deadlocked after the North Vietnamese and the United States began them in Paris on May 13, 1968.

Le said the minimum sign that the United States would be prepared to resume serious negotiations would be that it would return to the plenary sessions of the conference.

G.O.P. Committee Says Miami

WASHINGTON (AP) — The arrangements committee of the Republican National Committee recommended unanimously Thursday that the 1972 Republican convention be switched from an Diego, Calif., to Miami Beach, Fla.

The arrangement group's resolution will go Friday to a special meeting of the GOP national committee, where the switch in convention sites is expected to be formalized.

J. Edgar Buried

WASHINGTON (AP) — J. Edgar Hoover was buried Thursday, extolled by President Nixon as a giant who stood head and shoulders above his countrymen.

"His long life brimmed over with magnificient achievement and dedicated service to this country which he loved so well," said Nixon-the eighth president Hoover served as FBI director.

Longshoremen's Raise Avoided

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Pay Board Thursday delayed a decision on a controversial East and Gulf Coast longshoremen's pay raise, apparently after intervention by President Nixon.

The board cancelled a news conference on the matter after Teamsters President Frank Fitzsimmons, the lone remaining union official on the Pay Board, met with Nixon at the White House.

U.S. Boosts Air Power Again

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is raising its air power strength in Southeast Asia another notch, a possible prelude to an intensified bombing campaign aimed at halting the North Vietnamese offensive.

Pentagon spokesman Jerry W. Friedheim told newsmen Thursday that some additional land-based U.S. war planes will be sent to the war zone. He provided no details, but other sources indicate the reinforcements will fly from the United States.

The move was announced soon after peace negotations in Paris broke down again and amid a battlefield crisis in South Vietnam.

Friedheim did not link these events to the new air buildup, but described the reinforcement as part of "an overall plan to make sure Gen. Creighton W. Abrams has available to him all the air and naval assets he needs to protect remaining troops, to assist South Vietnamese" in repelling the offensive.

Wallace Strong In Tenn.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace headed for victory in the Tennessee Democratic primary Thursday as a state referendum on school busing drew voters to the polls.

Wallace, seeking his first primary victory outside the Deep South, was the only one of 11 candidates on the ballot to campaign actively in the state. Volunteer efforts were made for Sens. George S. McGovern and Hubert H. Humphrey and Rep. Shirley Chisholm.

At stake were 49 convention delegates.

About 600,000 of the state's two million eligible voters were expected to turn out at the polls, which begin closing in some rural areas as early as 4 p.m. EDT. Statewide balloting ends at 10 p.m. EDT. Voters can chose any party.

Also on the Democratic preferential ballot were Sens. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine, Henry M. Jackson of Washington, and Vance Hartke of Indiana; former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy of Wisconsin; Rep. Wilbur D. Mills of Arkansas and Mayors John V. Lindsay of New York and Sam Yorty of Los Angeles.

On the Republican ballot, where 26 national convention votes were at stake, President Nixon had token opposition from Reps. John M. Ashbrook of Ohio and Paul N. McCloskey Jr. of California.

There was a threat to Wallace's domination of the delegate votes, however.

State law says delegates are bound to the winning primary candidate for up to two ballots. But the delegates are picked in separate caucuses and conventions which have been packed by McGovern workers, black women and youth.

In Memphis, the state's largest city, this group is expected to pick an all-liberal and at least half black delegation.

Wallace said he had the momentum with him after finishing a strong second in Indiana Tuesday, picking up 21 Democratic national convention delegates, and winning his home state for at least 15 more delegates. From Tennessee he goes to North Carolina where he is expected to score again Saturday.

Busing is a major issue in Tennesssee, which is under or facing federal court orders that could make it one of the most widely and thoroughly bused states in the nation.

The busing referendum on Thursday's ballot asked specifically whether the voters favor a constitutional amendment which would ban busing ordered solely to achieve racial balance in the public schools.

After a similar referendum in Florida fueled Wallace's campaign to a runaway victory, all the other candidates except Rep. Mrs. Chisholm left Tennessee to Wallace.

Mrs. Chisholm, the black congresswoman from New York City who sought Memphis' heavy black vote, and McGovern, whose organization concentrated on big cities and college campuses, put their effort on the selection of friendly delegates rather than the popular vote.

Kleindienst Gets Support

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee, in a report urging confirmation of Richard G. Kleindienst' nomination as attorney general, rejects accusations of a political deal in the settlement of antitrust cases against International Telephone & Telegraph Corp.

"Based on the evidence, it is the conclusion of the committee that the settlement was reached on the merits after arm's-length negotiations between representatives of ITT and the Justice Department's antitrust division," the majority report says.

"Those negotiations and the settlement of the ITT cases were not the product of political influence or promises of political favor from ITT," it adds.

The committee conducted an extensive investigation after columnist Jack Anderson published a memo purportedly written by ITT lobbyist Dita D. Beard. It linked the out-of-court settlement to a pledge by the huge conglomerate's Sheraton Hotel subsidiary to the city of San Diego to help underwrite the expenses of the 1972 Republican National Convention.

Previously the committee had unanimously approved Kleindienst's nomination, but it reopened its hearings at his request.

In a report to be filed Friday in the Senate, the committee concludes that Kleindienst, who was deputy attorney general at the time, "acted propertly in the conduct of his office in the matter of the settlement of these cases."

A copy of the report, circulated among committee members, was obtained by The Associated Press.

The committee voted 11 to 4 on April 27, after its second round of hearings, to reaffirm its original recommendation that the Senate confirm Kleindienst's nomination to succeed John N. Mitchell.

A minority report is to be filed by senators who dissented from the committee's recommendation.

The majority, besides finding no evidence to support the charge of a political deal in the settlement of the antitrust cases against ITT, also concludes:

—That Kleindienst did not mislead the committee about his contacts with White House aide Peter M. Flanigan on the ITT case.

—That there was nothing improper or irregular about the way in which a financial analysis was obtained from a Wall Street investment banker, Richard J. Ramsden, on the effects of a forced divestiture of Hartford Fire Insurance Co. by ITT.

—That Kleindienst's handling of an investigation of U.S. Atty. Harry Steward in San Diego was in line with findings of the Justice Department's Criminal Division.

Anti-War Protests Continue In U.S.

(AP) — Scattered antiwar protests continued across the nation Thursday, on the second anniversary of the Kent State University confrontation in which four students were killed by National Guardsmen.

A group of fatigue-clad demonstrators identifying themselves as Vietnam veterans led 200 persons in a silent march through Kent, Ohio, in memorial of the shooting.

A memorial service also was held in the campus chapel at Stanford University.

Elsewhere, the protests were of a more routine antiwar nature.

Twenty-nine Florida State University students and one dog hiked a mile from their campus to the federal building in downtown Tallahassee, for a brief demonstration with speeches. A call for a boycott of classes fizzled, however.

As they have frequently in recent days, demonstrators blocked traffic at the main gate of Westover Air Force Base in Chicopee, Mass. There were six arrests.

Pickets at campus entrances handed out leaflets calling for a general strike of 25,000 San Diego State College students to protest stepped-up bombing in Vietnam.

Honeywell, Inc., offices were picketed in Miami and New York, by protestors objecting to the firm's government war material contracts.

At one point a Honeywell employee in Miami opened a window and shouted:

"I'm against the war, too, but you're making so much noise I can't work."

"You are profiting on death," demonstrators shouted back.

The employee slammed the window shut.

At Honeywell's offices on 42nd Street and Second Avenue in Manhattan, scuffling broke out between police and pickets, when the latter blocked the entrance to an adjacent restuarant which has a back door connection with the Honeywell building.

There were a score of arrests, as police broke up a group of protestors who locked arms and refused to move. About three times that many picketing the Honeywell building itself demanded to be arrested but were ignored.

Many of the protestors were from Queens College. The college's president, Joseph S. Murphy, handed out money to demonstration leaders with instructions to use it for bail if any of his students were arrested.

Murphy would not disclose how much money he turned over to the demonstrators. He said it was his own and not the college's and added:

"To whatever extent my students are involved in this, I'm involved too. I'm opposed to the war and Honeywell is contributing to the war effort."

In lower Manhattan, about 500 demonstrators massed outside the U.S. courthouse in Foley Square for a protest against the Southeast Asian war, and the stepped-up U.S. BOMBING.

Schizo Cause Found

DALLAS, Tex. (AP) — A research team said Thursday it has discovered the probably biological cause of schizophrenia, the personality-splitting disorder that remains one of the most severe, difficult to treat mental illnesses known.

The finding reported to the American Psychiatric Association, may open a long closed door on the eventual development of an effective treatment and possible cure for schizophrenia, which afflicts an estimated 2 million Americans.

The disease, often striking the young and almost invariably requiring hospitalization, has baffled psychiatrists for years. It severely disturbs though processes and interaction with others and its victims often acquire peculiar beliefs, delusions and hallucinations.

Drs. Jacques S. Gottlieb, a psychiatrist, and Charles E. Forhman, a biochemist, said their group at the Lafayette Clinic and Wayne State University in Detroit has discovered that an enzyme deficiency in the brains of schizophrenic patients appears to upset the brain's metabolism. It leads to abnormal production of chemicals that are known to have a mentally disturbing effect.

On To Decisions

All the constituencies of the University will be eligible to voice their opinions on the presence of ROTC, the on-campus recruitment policy, and government sponsored research projects at Wednesday's meeting of the Board of Trustees, which will be held on the Amherst Campus.

This meeting stems from the confusion and loss of direction at the special session held April 26, right after Trustee Boyden's death. We hope that this meeting won't degenerate into another shouting match, such as the last one did.

Certain precautions have been taken to prevent unsolicited outbursts. For example, only thirty minutes have been allowed for officially-designated persons from each of the Boston and Amherst senates to state those groups' views on the issues. Each chancellor also gets to speak. For other opinions to be considered, written statements must be submitted at least 24 hours before the meeting. It is highly unlikely that the Trustees will actually decide on the issue of removing ROTC from campus. Depending upon constituency reports, they are expected, however, to adopt the recent Faculty-Senate resolution which drops academic credit for ROTC courses.

Riders on research grants from the Department of Defense and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration stipulate that military recruitment be allowed on campus. If the Trustees determine that all recruitment should be banned, the University could stand to lose up to one million dollars in such grants. Thus, items two and three on the agenda (as it appears on page two), probably will be considered together. This meeting was requested by those present at the Howard Johnson's Building in Boston on May 26. We hope the Trustees will consider the issues carefully.

Paul Lereaux Returns

While visiting the City over this past weekend, I ran into an old friend of American universities. My brother, who had just arrived from Denver, a mutual friend from Notre Dame, and I, were taking in the city. We were just tripping out of Mac's Kansas City in the Village when my brother noticed this long white haired, but balding, old man grossing out this chick on the corner. "Want to see my Yah, Yahs," he kept asking her.

With that and a slight of hand that could only belong to one man, we recognized Paul S. Lereaux of UMass Spring Day fame. Those of you who know Paul from the University of Colorado, Notre Dame, UMass or any other university in the country need no further explanation as to the activities on the Village corner which were freaking out the freaks. If you don't know him, he was once accused by a former chancellor of a Western Mass University of having fathered a well known Campus Character, and political leader.

Perhaps a brief biography of this figure Who Ranks... as a leading world educator is in order. As one of the most esteemed professors of his time, while at UMass, the World War I vet was asked to leave the University. Presently doing post doc work in human sexuality at Mt. Wachusett U., Paul recalled those turbulent years at UMass when his professional career was tinged with scandal. He was asked to leave in 1935 when three of his T.A.s became mothers, after a number of his experiments failed. Paul pleaded nolo contendere and hoped for the best, but he was asked to leave and take his experiments with him.

Learning of some new exciting experiments in Berlin he traveled to that city where he was hired to do some research for the Bundt. In 1937 he escaped to Denmark. There he accepted a position in that nation's Royal University. His friends in Berlin, still upset with his theory on how to best produce a master race - masturbation - got wind of his travels and pursued him through five other countries in Europe. He finally would up at Trinity College in Dublin. Having heard what happened to King Billy three hundred years earlier, his Berlin friends decided not to follow him.

Voting to declare war on the United States if they did not accept Paul back, the Irish Parliment ordered its Navy to drop Paul off by submarine near Staton Island. The United States allowed his entry and thus avoided war with the Emerald Isle.

Having pledged to remain politically neutral in all affairs involving American Universities, he was again admitted to the intellectual halls of this country. He has since been run out of no less than 36 U.S. and Canadian institutions.

But Paul S. Lereaux is back on campus. Best known here for his attempts to revive an old Algonquin fertility rite of spring in the Pioneer Vally, Spring Day, Paul is hiding out in the Hatch. Every year since Paul began his career he has returned to UMass to conduct this rite the first Tuesday (or Thursday if it rains) after the second full moon of Spring. Some will recall the time when he drove his hog motor cycle, down a row of bench tables then soared fifteen feet into the air and landed on the present site of the new library. At that time he declared a memorial to his great feat would be constructed there in the symbol of his most renowned extremity. Others will recall the quiet years, like the time he set the Chancellor's house on fire because it blocked his view of the animals at the school of agriculture doing their spring thing. Or when he talked the former head of the Botany department into planting grass... the real stuff... around Whitmore, "because the Navy needs hemp. Where's your patriotism man."

Yes Paul is back. And there is only one way to find out what he'll be doing this year and that's to come to Spring Day.

Countdown For Kissinger

WASHINGTON–The White House announced today that Henry Kissinger has just returned from a secret trip to the moon. Ron Ziegler said that Kissinger was the fourth crewman on Apollo 16 and spent 20 hours exploring the moon for President Nixon, who plans to go there just before Election Day.

How Kissinger managed to pull it off is one of the best news stories of our time. The White House had announced that Mr. Kissinger was going to Hollywood to attend the 1972 presentation of the Academy Awards.

When he did not show up at the awards, the Western White House at San Clemente said he had a cold and was being nursed back to health at the home of Tuesday Weld.

A check at Tuesday Weld's house revealed that Kissinger had left on Wednesday with his girl, Friday, but no one knew where he had gone.

A rumor started by the CIA indicated that Kissinger had returned to Peking to pick up his dry cleaning. But Chou En-lai's press secretary said he hadn't seen Kissinger in weeks, and if he was in Peking the Chinese didn't know about it.

The White House correspondents started pressing Ziegler as to Kissinger's whereabouts. Ziegler said with a straight face, "He went to Moscow to talk to the people in the Kremlin about President Nixon's trip."

This sounded logical, but when the Washington newspaper, magazine and TV people checked with their Moscow correspondents, they hit a stone wall.

A press secretary for Brezhnev said no one had seen Kissinger in Moscow and, as far as the Soviets knew, he hadn't been to Leningrad or Kiev, either.

Now angry, the White Hous ' its attacked Ziegler for lying to them.

Ziegler said he had made a mistake and that Kissinger was really in Paris holding secret talks with the North Vietnamese delegation.

While the American press was being led on the wild goose chase, Kissinger was down at Cape Kennedy dressed in white coveralls, disguised as one of the workers who would help the astronauts into Apollo 16. At the last minute, just before the hatch was closed, Kissinger jumped into the capsule and said, "I am on a secret mission for the President. Let's get out of here."

The astronauts, who hadn't been in on the plan, protested that there wasn't enough food for four men on the space journey.

"Don't worry," Kissinger said, holding up a bottle of orange juice. "I brought my own 'Tang.'"

While they were hurtling toward the moon, Kissinger briefed the astronauts on what they were to do. He told them to go about their business on the moon as if nothing had happened; under no condition were they to focus their TV cameras on him, and while they were picking up rocks and going through the motions of setting up scientific experiments, he would make arrangements for the President's visit to the moon.

The astronauts played their parts perfectly, and there wasn't one person watching TV who suspected that Kissinger was on the moon at the same time as the Apollo 16 mission.

The only time the secret was endangered was when Kissinger tripped over a wire on the moon and messed up a million dollar experiment. Fortunately all spacesuits look alike, and everybody thought it was astronaut John Young who goofed.

On the way back, Kissinger splashed down first by parachute into Key Biscayne and was picked up out of the water by Bebe Rebozo.

It was only after Kissinger made a full report to the President that Ziegler admitted to Henry's true whereabouts for the past 10 days. Thanks to one of the best kept secrets of the decade, Ziegler confirmed that the President would be able to go to the moon this fall as scheduled.

Democrats Faction; No Victor In Sight

By GALEN TINDER AND BOB NESTI

The withdrawal of Edmund Muskie, the confusion surrounding the close race between McGovern and Humphrey in Ohio, and the large but deceptive strength of George Wallace, shows that Democratic voters have chosen not to unify behind a moderate this election year, but to factionalize behind two more issue- oriented candidates and one party personality. The results should manifest themselves in a dramatic and volatile convention this summer in Miami which will probably leave the Democratic Party in a less-than-adequate strategic position for the fall campaign.

Part of this now apparent schism comes from a number of factors. First, the inability for observers to gauge the relative strengths of McGovern and Wallace. McGovern has thus far run the most astute, efficient and clear campaign and has shown when cool strategy is applied with firm beliefs on major issues a somewhat mild, uncharismatic candidate can be saved from oblivion. Rather than dissipating in a fight with the genuinely more appealing candidates, McGovern stands in the best position his uphill fight has yet to produce. Wallace's strength comes not from the polish and finesse of his political maneuverings, but rather from his articulation and manipulation of gut emotions. Of the three leading contenders, he is the least likely to gain since his two opponents will be less than likely to carry the convention without Wallace's pledged delegates. The chances for a "backroom convention" is a fair assumption this year and Wallace seems to be the man who will do the dealing.

The causes of Senator Muskie's political demise and virtual withdrawal from the Democratic Presidential race have been analyzed and reanalyzed ad naseum. However, the effects which his withdrawal will have on the presidential aspirations of McGovern and Humphrey is, at the present time, largely undeterminable. There are three things which must be considered in regard to these effects; to whom Muskie's previously won but now released delegates will eventually go, the possible realignments of those politicians who had endorsed the Maine Senator early in the race, and, probably most importantly, the second choice of the rank and file Democrats who were planning on voting for Muskie. In each of these categories there are undoubtedly some people who plan to remain committed to Muskie in the hope he has a slim chance of becoming a compromise candidate at what will almost certainly become a deadlocked convention in July.

The difficulty in surmising to which candidate the remaining Muskie strength will go is partially due to the fact that it was never very clear from what stable block of voters Muskie drew his strength. He did have some liberal support as evidenced by the fact that he was supported by a number of the most progressive members of the Senate. However much of his rank and file support came from main line Democrats who will in all likelihood now turn to Humphrey. A New York Times/Yankelovich survey taken after the Wisconsin primary indicated that the second choice of an overwhelming number of Muskie supporters was the former Vice-President as opposed to Senator McGovern. Hence it is this writers belief that it is Humphrey who will benefit most from Muskie's withdrawal.

This is mere conjecture however for if either of the remaining candidates demonstrate a greater comparative strength in the upcoming primaries, particularly in the crucial state of California, he might find the majority of Muskie's former supporters flocking to his banner.

Governor Wallace continues to nip at the heels of both McGovern and Humphrey with surprising regularity. His demagogic articulations of peoples' fears and prejudices and his primitive approach to the complex issues of the campaign continue to endear him to the hearts of many voters who find the style of the other candidates boringly pedanidic and their "intellectualism" incomprehensible. In Indiana he ran only six percentage points behind Humphrey who has not, in the past eight years, been noted for his raging liberalism.

Although survey after survey has shown some striking similarities between Wallace and McGovern supporters, Wallace's strength undoubtedly does more damage to Humphrey than McGovern. In spite of the grievances which many McGovern and Wallace people hold in common, their appeals are so desperate that it is very difficult to conceive of present Wallacites supporting McGovern.

At this point, it looks as though Wallace will go to the convention with between three and four hundred delegates committed to him on the first ballot. This is not nearly adequate enough to make him a serious contender for the nomination but it will give

Due to the ineptness of a copy editor, who happens to write this insipid fable, last week's episode was rendered meaningless. (Special note: not to say the story has any meaning anyway, but it should at lest appear that way.) At any rate, in order to give some comprehension before the story, and this magazine, burns itself out next week, may we reintroduce the characters and situation:

Louella Devine: tall, buxom, could be a model if so motivated. Rather prefers the nundane pleasures of Quickbucks, a bar she and her roommate Burnsie often frequent. On this Spring night she has happened to have captured the eye of a young man called Theda, whom Louella affectionately nicknamed in memory of the great silent film star Theda Bara, and whose attention she cruises hoping to ensnare. Louella happens to have an uncanny interest in the cinema and often allows herself flights of fancy to pursue her perverse whims. Tonight was one such night.

Standing quite innocuously in the corner was another person who often frequented Quickbucks in search of the more extraordinary delights the bar supposedly contained. This lad only had one distinguished characteristic: the camel-haired cap he wore. Being, at least, ordinary, the capped lad was able to witness all that happened there and vicariously enjoy all the sensual pleasure he could perceive. Still there wasn't much for him to revel in, beyond admiring the full, ever so supple figure of Louella, that evening in Quickbucks. He loved the decadent and instead witnessed the ordinary.

A case in point was happening on an adjoining wooden bench. There sat a young girl named Gloria who managed to wile her way past the blonde bouncer with a false ID and now sat with a young man waiting for her new found companion Boychild to return with a beer. Boychild was, in fact, returning, a bit crushed at Louella's obvious rejection of her, but satisfied, in a small way, at his seeming victory in his snaring of Gloria.

Suddenly from the almost hidden pinball room strode curly-haired Sean. Gloria immediately caught sight of his baby blues, which were rendered a watery green in the darkness of Quickbucks, and his Pepsodent smile, here reduced to a murky yellow. She was, nonetheless, entranced. It seems quite obvious, if a detached observer can interject a thought, that everyone there was entranced, only with the wrong person. Curly-haired Sean sauntered by, seemingly unconscious of Gloria. She, though, caught her breath and put her willowy charm to work. She gathered her strength, checked her position, smiled a girlish grin, and said "hi" in her most sultry voice. If Louella had overheard this she would have said it sounded like Shirley Jones imitating Lauren Bacall and would have sneered, instead, easily impressed, curly-haired Sean stopped short and returned the greeting. Gloria, quickly glancing at the detoured Boychild across the room, offered her latest admirer the now cool seat beside her, which curly-haired Sean gladly took.

Curly-haired Sean was coming off of a bad time, an affair he had with a petite French major who was pretty good at conjugating verbs but not too adept at anything resembling "love," as Sean would speak of it. Gloria coyly began a conversation, and he was a transfer student at a women's college across the river, coming from a small, snobbish, impeccably upper-class college in the western part of the state. Telling Gloria this was a little bit like dropping fresh meat near a paraina fish, for there was no way she was going to let this catch escape her grips for not only did curly-haired Sean come from one of the best schools in the area, he also came from Wealth.

She need not have worried for when Boychild saw a peer in his place, he retreated behind a wooden partition and began to sulk. Then, quite suddenly, as he downed the second beer intended to bloat little Gloria's tummy, he heard a rather brittle "How's It Goin'?" He turned and saw a small, cutish girl chewing a healthy wad of gum whose name, he discovered, was Millie. She had earlier been sitting with Louella and Burnsie in a corner booth because her attempts at attracting Theda's eyes failed miserably. Now she had, in her eye, an even better catch. So Gloria would rest her mind because Boychild found interests elsewhere.

Meantime the capped lad noticed Louella pass his way twice, they even passed smiles of acknowledgement and of mutual knowledge of what was at play. Louella was wandering in pursuit of Theda, who stood speaking to the blonde bouncer by the door. Both times she passed by him, he said hello and now her mind was full of just how she would finally culminate her desires.

Curly-haired Sean noticed Louella when she went by the second time, but by now Gloria was playing with his mind like a child may play with Silly Putty.

Center From The Center

The Center for Social Change became an identity last week amidst some feelings of bitterness and cynicism, and others of jubiliation and hope. Now the Center wished to present itself to the University and clear up many of the vague points which have plagued the Center and its role in the community since its conception. For a more detailed analysis of the past, present, and future of our established University conscience, see pages eleven and twelve. Will it be the change for the best?

School Of Ed. From The School Of Ed.

The School of Education has been through quite a bit the past few weeks with the closing down of Marathon Week and the accusations by the Third World Caucus that they are being used by the School in order to receive large public and private grants. The only question which comes from all of this is: who, what, when, where, why, and how? Don Glickstein, a frequent contributor to the editorial pages of the Collegian and a student in the School of Ed., attempts to understand just what led up to the most recent snafu. For the details see pages fourteen and fifteen.

Albums From Fifties To Now

This week the album pages cover music from the fifties right up to present day rock and roll. Jeff Clayton gives a preview of the progressions relating to Eddie Cochrane, guitarist extraodinaire, dating back to the days when you were only a tot; Mike Kostek looks at Jimi Hendrix's performance on the Isle of Wight; Chris Sophinos all but denounces the latest effort by the Conception Corporation and last but not least, Jeff Hanson continues his venture into the world of singles, featuring the earliest contributions of the Rolling Stones. All this and more may be found on the album pages.

And More From All The Little, Little People

Without doubt, you may bewondering, just who are all these little people? Well, they are all the hardworking contributors to this weekly magazine and you can find their prose if you peruse on through. Jump back one and up two and you'll find an analysis of just where we may be in Campaign '72. Then read of the Center for Social Change on pages eleven and twelve, and Turning Points on thirteen. The School of Ed. is at the Center and is followed logically enough by two album pages. Then music reviews: last Sunday with Todd Rundgren being trailed by Steve Feld and last Friday with David Bromberg breaking bread with Jim Lavrakas, on pages eighteen and nineteen. More than bread is broken in Macbeth and Mary Lou Gordon reviews Roman Polanski's utter failure at interpreting Shakespeare on page twenty-one. Weekend at the back, Quickbucks on our left, and Frank Johnson on page twenty as he finishes off his audio saga which began in the first issue.

Correspondences To Poor Richard's

To the Editor:

As one who for three years has been exposed to the varied fulminations of the radical left on this campus, I find Mr. Baglione's weekly column somewhat refreshing and different. In my opinion, this column is a very well written, biting and effective satire upon the pseudo-political scene at UMass, the more noticeable extravaganzas of which are usually dominated by the leftist element.

Criticism has been directed at Mr. Baglione that he has nothing constructive to offer. Satire is not meant to do that. Satire is meant to make people think, but thinking is something that certain people make a policy of refusing to do. Satire is supposed to make people look at themselves a little closer, but there are those who can do nothing else but react with their usual moralistic bombast.

Maybe Mr. Baglione and I are both missing the boat. Certainly, I know that I have never seen the Light. Perhaps satire and all other honest divergence of opinion will be out of place in the divinely-inspired New Order that our campus prophets are so busily attempting to construct. All these self-appointed saviors seem to lack is a Leader (it seems to me that it was all tried before). If Baglione's critics cannot come up with such a Leader, then perhaps they should try their hand at paper hanging.

Sincerely,
Robert J. Waters

To the Editor of Poor Richard's:

For the past year, I have consistently followed the articles of Frank Baglione in the Collegian and in Poor Richard's. I have noted that his articles, which, in my opinion, are usually perceptive and often astute, have provoked a large number of reader responses, mostly antagonistic. I was more than irritated by reading the 280 words of invective hurled so maliciously by Robert Simpson. Robert's crowning achievement was the suggestion that Baglione "not be published in any self-respecting newspaper." Again, here is evidenced the hypocracy of these "fine sensitive people" who would trample any opponent's rights in the name of their holy causes.

I have seen appear repeatedly in our university press the marxist interpretations of Tom Moriarty, the articles from the Liberation News Service, and the rattle of every special interest group claiming to speak for all the women, all the workers, all the foreign students, and all the domestic students of the university if not the nation. Obviously, these activists do not speak for all the people in the groups which they claim to represent. It is possible that they speak only for a small vocal minority in each of their respective constituencies.

If Frank Baglione only serves to prick the pretensions of our self-appointed spokesmen, then he is performing a necessary service to the university community. If his "perverted sense of ethics" induces his opponents to raise their arguments from the rhetoric into which it has degenerated to a more thoughtful presentation of their views then it more than justifies Mr. Simpson's "ruined breakfasts."

Since a university is ideally a place for inquiry and critical evaluation of the issues, a university paper should reflect the thoughtful opinions of all facets of the questions plaguing our society. Obviously, any responsible examination of any current problem will produce a diversity of opinions. Some of these will invariably give Mr. Simpson indigestion. So all I can say is take three more Alka-Seltzers, Bobby, and bon appetit.

A. Keith Fritzsche

To the Editor:

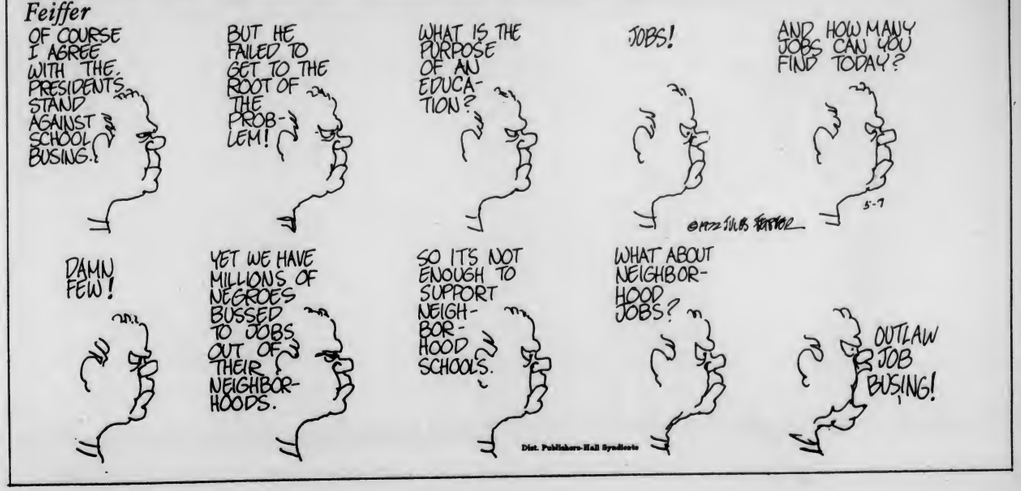
What has been the most interesting point the Left (and that term is used loosely) here on campus has taken in regard to Frank Baglione is its apparent disregard for the issues he has raised and a determination to deal with his writings on a personal basis. Last semester Baglione often made Poor Richard's worth reading with his genuinely conservative and refreshing viewpoint. He wrote one piece on the neutralization of profanity in our society due to its over-and-misuse by the Left. Then he took on one of the counter-cultures favorite martyrs; Janis Joplin, and showed what mixed-up, depressing female she really was. Having seen Joplin some months before her death, it seemed apparent that the charm, the charisma, the fascination (or whatever) had long since vanished and what sang was a hollow, loud imitation. Yet this has gone genuinely ignored in the press at large, except for the entertaining ramblings of iconoclast George Frazier in the Boston Globe, and it was good to find it in a left-oriented, bourgeoise college publication.

Then this semester Baglione took on issues closer to home, or rather hit at targets which were immediate and could feel the sting of his acerbic prose. His coverage of Women's International Day, although brittle, was years ahead of its time in understanding the rhetorical meanderings of radical women. His view of their self-satisfying celebration gave an already dismal day a harsh reality. The women reacted with venom, not directed at what Frank Baglione had to say, but at him. It really wasn't anything new anyway, if any of them had bothered to read in a previous issue of Poor Richard's, Baglione's review of The Prisoner Of Sex, they would have found an equally strong criticism of their movement. It wasn't until they were personally rebuked did the cattiness and small-mindedness appear. Apparently those on the Left find boogie-men more appealling targets than what their critics have to say. And to further say that Baglione's critic have suffered from the sin of pride is an understatement. When they are burned with his personal view of their active participation in causes and events, they respond with lame defenses of threats. It is surprising that Baglione continues to write at all, it may not be worth all the grief he received. But as with all criticism, it is only the loudest and most shrill which is heard. Most open-minded people at this University are glad to see a dissenting voice which, surprisingly enough, may be closer to the majority than the prevailing Leftist winds may indicate.

Nancy Parmentor

To the Editor:

It was gratifying to read the editorial and subsequent letter by film director Stanley Kubrick concerning the Detroit News policy change in regard to X-rated films. It was also appalling to read the number of newspapers in this country which refuse advertising for any "X" rated films. The News's action was called correctly by Kubrick "an irrational diktat" and one wonders just whom self-righteous journals such as the news and our own Boston Herald Traveler are protecting when they refuse to carry ads for X-rated films. More importantly who are they protecting when they, as the News action initiated, refuse to cover in their entertainment section any film which happens to have been rated "X" by the denizens of our moral code, the Motion Picture Association of America.



This group has often acted with blatant hypocrisy or poor judgement. They have in the past changed ratings of films simply out of studio pressure (such as Ryan's Daughter) or they have given ridiculous ratings to some pictures (The Panic In Needle Park, for example, was given a rating which effectively kept the audience this anti-heroin film aimed at out of the theater, while singularly vulgar entertainments like Willard or The Cowboys receive innocuous ratings). The ratings are picked with an unhealthy focus on sex and an almost cavalier attitude about violence. A Clockwork Orange was much less a vile film that Straw Dogs or Dirty Harry, two films the MPAA chose to give R ratings. What is ironic about Kubrick's film is that if a teenager or a child who is barred from seeing the film was interested enough in gaining an understanding of what it was about, all he need to is spend 95¢ for the paperback and let his/her imagination go rampant.

But to deny advertising and copy space from films like Orange (or other similar respectable films rated "X" over the past few years which include Midnight Cowboy, The Damned, ...If, and The Devils,) is a grave error in journalistic judgement. Newspapers are a means of conveying information, films are an important component, intellectually and socially, in our current life, and somehow when one consciously limits the other, no matter how good the reasons, it smells of censorship. Therefore, perhaps a letter to the Detroit News and our own Boston Herald Traveler would be in order. Make films worth seeing on their own merits, not out of some morbid fascination caused by the hiding of information.

Films are an expression of free thought in a democratic society, any move to inhibit their distribution is a move against the democratic process and every civil libertarian should read Kubrick's words and take his warning.

Democrats Faction;(Continued)

him some say as to the makeup of the Democratic platform. But more importantly he will use his delegates as leverage to force the two major candidates to come closer to his positions the issues, particularly that of bussing. In the end, he will probably throw his delegates to the man who is most willing to compromise himself and this man is far more likely to be Humphrey than McGovern due to the greater integrity and moral rectitude of the South Dakotan Senator.

With the primary season approximately half over Humphrey and McGovern are running neck and neck. Whoever wins the primary in Ohio (due to extensive voting machine difficulties, its final results are not yet known of this writing) his margin will not be substantial enough for him to claim a clear-cut victory. In the two most important upcoming primaries Humphrey is slightly favored over Wallace in Michigan and McGovern is strongly favored in Nebraska. McGovern is currently leading Humphrey by a nearly two to one margin in the delegate count but if Humphrey were solidly beat McGovern in either California or New York, he could narrow this gap dramatically and perhaps even pull into the lead.

Nonetheless, McGovern's organization is consistently whomping Humphrey's in non-primary states and most experts agree that McGovern will go into the convention hall with about 1,200 first ballot votes to around 900 for Humphrey (1,509 delegate votes are needed to win the nomination).

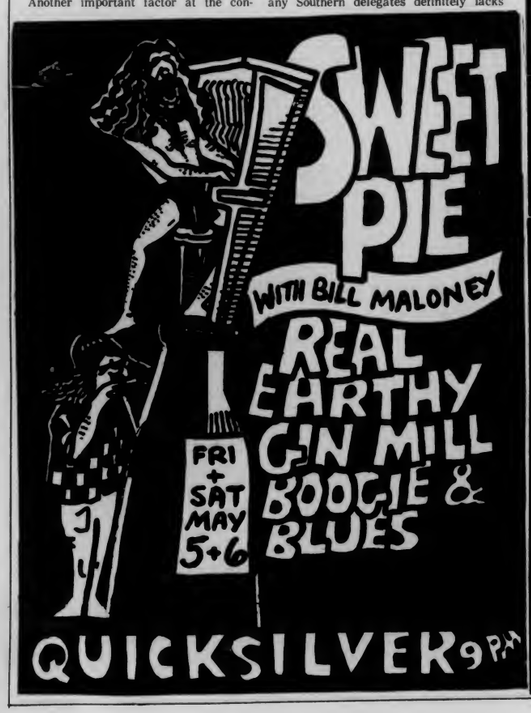
After the first ballot the wheeling and dealing begins since delegates are free to vote for any candidate on subsequent ballots. Here much will depend upon the allegience which delegates feel toward their candidate. Eventually the political bosses will try to pressure delegates one way or the other by any means they can and the candidate who has the most strong-willed delegates has the advantage in such instances. After the first ballot, it also becomes of paramount importance who influential party regulars such as Mayor Daley and Senator Kennedy decide to support. Their prestige alone can sway. delegates to candidates which they might not otherwise support. It is known that Kennedy privately favors McGovern and many people have hypothecized that apublic endorsement along these lines could immensely aid McGovern at the convention.

Another important factor at the convention is the credibility of a candidate. By credibility is meant the extent of the support which a candidate can command from each of the multifarious factions which comprise the rank and file. Political leaders always prefer the candidate with the most credibility, for any candidate who is lacking in it can expect to be weak in the final election.

Edmund Muskie. "The difficulty in surmising to which candidate the remaining Muskie strength will go is particularly due to the fact that it is never very clear from what stable block of votes Muskie drew his strength."

As of this writing both McGovern and Humphrey lack credibility in one respect or another. McGovern has still not demonstrated in any conclusive fashion his ability to consistently draw out the working man's vote, particularly in the heavily industrial states. Although he did reasonably well in the blue collar districts in Wisconsin and Massachusetts a New York Times/Yankelovich Inc. survey indicated that he only won about 13% of the blue collar vote in Pennsylvania. Furthermore, McGovern is carefully avoiding testing himself in Southern states and any candidate who goes into the convention without any Southern delegates definitely lacks credibility.

For his part Humphrey finds it impossible to attract an even respectable percentage of the youth vote and he is viewed with intense dislike by many upper-class liberals.



Hence the efforts of both candidates are directed toward broadening their bases of support. The man most successful in this respect will not only attain greater success during the remainder of the primary season but will also move into the convention with the credibility advantage. As of this writing McGovern has shown much more enthusiasm for this task than has Humphrey who appears very hesitant about attempting to make inroads into the McGovern camp.

One thing which this primary season has demonstrated is that the voting public is exceedingly discontent with what can be broadly characterized as politics as usual. This discontentedness has been most strikingly manifested in the success of McGovern and Wallace, both of whom have attracted support which, in 1968, went to Hubert Humphrey. There are several factors which contribute to this discontentedness and which add fuel to the new populist trend. One of these is the volital issue of bussing which Wallace exploited with such dexterity in Florida and which will undoubtedly serve him well in Michigan, a state in which emotions also run high over this issue. Another is the Vietnam War which is escalating at a time when many Americans feel that the United States should withdraw, as McGovern says, "lock, stock and barrel."

For President Nixon to believe that Vietnam will not be a major issue in a year that has shown substantial increase in American air power there is to show a genuine insensitivity toward the discontent the primaries have shown thus far.

But in a wider sense, many Americans feel that the key decision making centers in the goverment have become virtually inaccessible to the average citizen. They feel alienated from what appears to be a large and ever expanding bureaucracy, the policies of which remain unchanged irrespective of who is president. Exemplifying these frustrations is the fact that the country is approaching an economic crises. Prices are hight but at the same time, jobs are scarce. Perhaps for these reasons, voters are turning to candidates who carry the cross of the average man over against that of unresponsive government and big business. It is McGovern who, in spite of his "ultra liberalism" on such social issues as marijuana and abortion, who should benefit most from this new trend. Wallace's appeal is a gut rather than a reason and he possesses neither the diplomacy or the competence needed to govern a country as complex as the United States.

The Center Re-evaluated

Editor's note: Last week Poor Richard's took a generally harsh view to the new Center For Social Change. In an attempt at fair play, the following article was compiled by the Center. The article clearly reflects views only of the Center and none of this publication.

I. Background

To understand the nature of the process that is the new Center for Social Change, t is first necessary to understand some of the attitudes and premises on which the Center's existance rests before discussing how the Center can become a recognized educational process and clearing house for social action.

April 18th seems so long ago...at least for some of us. It was the beginning of an end and the birth of a movement. In answer to the escalation of the war in Indochina, the bombing of North Vietnam, the insensitivity of a government to the will of its people, a strike meeting was called and four demands developed by the participants. The demands were condensed to three, (1) an immediate end to all bombing and withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia, (2) freedom for all political prisoners, and (3) an end to the oppression and discrimination against women and minorities on this University campus: and ratified by a mass steering committee on Wednesday afternoon.

It was of great importance to show the interconnectedness, both sociologically and economically, of the three demands. Without this understanding, Vietnams would be an inevitable part of our future and our children's. To address ourselves to the war issue alone is to exclude minority peoples and women from participation, to divide us. Without addressing ourselves to the needs of all our Brothers and Sisters, to our unity, we fail to understand our own interests and the needs of our community. If we are to become a force toward change in the internal and foreign policies of our society we must move together – to move together, we must learn to understand and deal with the cancers that divide us.

On Wednesday, a strike co-ordinating committee of volunteers was formed and set about its task of organizing headquarters and marches, peaceful picketing of classes and leafletting for Thursday. Through the late hours of Wednesday and into early Thursday, the Women's Caucus and the Vietnam Veterans Against the War worked on plans for the liberation of Dickinson Hall. As the sun rose, the building was in their hands and demands were released, calling for the abolition of R.O.T.C. on campus and that Dickinson Hall be used for a day-care, community out-reach, and veterans' help center as a positive, lasting alternative to military instruction. Throughout the day, the women and vets negotiated with the administration while educational workshops were being carried on inside Dickinson and at the Campus Center.

Thursday night's mass strike meeting started off well enough, with a sound proposal for a steering committee for four hundred members to be reflective of the dorms, interest groups, undergrads, grads, faculty, staff, and administrators. An objection was raised to the proposal for its constitution of the chairpersons of the steering committee. A spokesman from the Student Mobe claimed his group to be the sole vanguard of the peace movement and that it was not being fairly represented. The paranoia and fear of co-option were beginning to show through. Couldn't he remember that Dr. Martin Luther King was leading the anti-war and civil rights movement years before the Mobe was ever conceived?

In an attempt to reply, Johnetta Cole was shouted down and verbally abused. The Mobe spokesman had the audacity to ask, "Who were all the little people crawling out of the woodwork to lead the strike?", a reference to the Third World Alliance and the Women's Caucus. It was a conscious appeal to fear and ignorance. Fears rooted in our misconceptions of Blacks and of the Women's Movement: fear of being co-opted by so-called radicals, a fear of not receiving our due recognition. A fear of each other. And it worked.

The Third World Alliances and the Women's Caucus walked out in reply. The "racism and sexism" that we had hoped to expose and fight in our community was alive in us. The meeting, although continuing for several hours, ended in frustration, despair, and confusion.

By this time, the occupants of Dickinson (renamed the Center for Social Change) had been joined by the Men's Caucus which united with the women to form the Coalition Against Oppression. By late Friday afternoon the R.O.T.C. affair was the only strike-related event left on campus. Inside the building, lives were changed. The people were beginning to relate to each other as they had never done before. Defining the needs of each group by the decision-making process, an understanding of each other began. Workshops were established, and the coming together of our resources to analyze our common internal and community problems started. The rhetoric was fading into open dialogues, the paranoia was giving way to trust, the loneliness turning to love. For the first time, we were really practicing what we had been preaching and a family was being conceived. We shared the common view that something can and must be done to restructure our university community and society into one that is responsive to the needs of all its people and not oppressive and deceiving.

"People were joining us, people who saw the need for a continuing program of self-education so that we might understand better who we were, what our society and university is, and what we can do to right their inequities."

People were joining us, people who saw the need for a continuing program of self-education so that we might understand better who we were, what our society and university is, and what we can do to right their inequities.

We had an internal government composed of mass meetings where consensus was the rule. All could speak and all could be heard. Partisan politics was dead.

We planned and participated in workshops dealing with the issues of war, racism, and sexism. We stock-piled our food in a makeshift kitchen, played with our children in our own day-care center, and communicated with the ouside world through telephone and radio interviews. We listened to each others' views and learned not to be afraid. We could be critical and still be friends. We were a community with a purpose.

Monday night we were informed that we would have to leave by Tuesday or face arrest. It was decided at a mass meeting that we wouldn't leave until alternate space was made available. On Tuesday morning, it was, and we moved into Munson Hall, next to Whitmore.

Although one of our original demands was that Dickinson be made into the Center for Social Change, we realized that getting busted would be futile, that nothing would be gained except more alienation and misunderstanding, and that by then we had transcended the need for a physical symbol.

We proved the cynics wrong. We didn't run up a "hammer and sickle" as some had expected. We didn't change the world or stop the war either, but we hadn't expected to. Most important, we didn't give up. The people participating in the Center feel that the University is more than a vehicle to accommodate the educational needs of the society by providing classrooms and resources, films and speaker, to those fortunate enough to be able to afford them. We live, love, walk, talk, feel....in this community with its problems and needs, with its deficiencies and inequalities, which we can attempt to change or ignore. We feel that the needs and direction of the University process are in fact the responsibilities of its members.

We lay no claim to perfection. We have made mistakes and doubtless will make some more in the future, but we will also continue to learn, to question, to educate and implement our programs. We are open to all viewpoints and people realizing the need for group process toward change in the academic, social, and economic community that is our own.

II. Isolation

While we do not intend to assimilate or co-opt groups into our clearing house, neither do we want to be assimilated and although our multi-issue demands indicate a pluralistic organization, we have found a living paradism that is unifying rather than partisan--a unity between issues, rather than isolating them in a pluralistic maze. Isolating the problem not only isolates the people in the problem from the outside, but also separates people from the problem. (The Johnson administration spent seven million dollars researching the poverty problem.)

The need for a Day Care Center, for example, could be explained simply as a place to leave your kids so you can do something else, or it could be explained as one of the means for establishing equality in the labor force between men and women, a means to assure poor peoples more representation on the labor market and subsequently more money– a Day Care Center as a step in destroying sexist roles, building social and economic equality and in this sense, helping to end racism. This would also free poor women (black in particular) to stop having to play welfare and stop being stereotyped in this way. (Over 54% of Black working women have children under 5 years old and are forced to either work part time, or in many cases, leave the children uncared for.)

In this way, the unification of the V.V.A.W. and the Women's Caucus over the demands stated is more than a symbolic gesture of solidarity over the war issue. It is the coalition of Vets who deal with the war subjectively, and women who deal with sexism subjectively. This subjective analysis turned the occupied space in Dickinson into a useful space. (Ongoing programs and workshops were drawn up and implemented immediately. Vets held workshops on sexism and participated in the women's workshops and the women held workshops on the war and participated in work-shops on Vets' issues.) This is what made the occupation of Dickinson dramatically different from any other building take-over on college campuses, (especially in light of the immediate transition of the Center for Social Change to Munson.)

We intend to make the familiar bizarre and the bizarre familiar. We intend to make the political more personal and the personal more political. This is our commitment.

We feel that apathy is a result of people isolating problems from themselves to maintain objectivity, and that in this way, people can only offer themselves for a body count to protest issues, rather than use their bodies and minds in subjective examination and work. We feel one way is constructive and the other is non-committed.

The university student is isolated in time and space from the community, (which may be the university itself), and the rest of his or her life. This is not only unnecessary, and totally irrational but also, counter to any real decision-making.

We do not intend to isolate ourselves by creating another "alternative". We intend to actively organize and relate University courses to community action and research, to relate newly created workshops to ongoing problems.

At the onset of the Center for Social Change at Munson, we directed our energy at R.O.T.C. and towards establishing in a horizontal (vs. hierarchical), we do not have an authoritarian structure that has defined so many of our institution as a [illegible] for special interests.) This summer the organization will actively research the University itself, and will research courses and action programs that would be catalysts for each other.

Note: Negotiations have not ended. We are currently negotiating for funds and accreditation for our programs and proposals.

III. Don't Let Me Be Misunderstood

On Tuesday, April 25, a Springfield newspaper wrote that the one hundred demonstrators who occupied Dickinson Hall finally left the building. Because of the stereo-type I had developed after years of reading and seeing on T.V. reports about demonstrators of this type, I immediately began to form an impression in my mind about the kind of people involved in the take-over. Then I realized that I was one of the one hundred demonstrators, I knew that the article, while factual didn't report the total truth of the situation. This wasn't because of bad reporting, but rather because it is close to impossible to accurately report what had gone on by just visiting Dickinson Hall one afternoon and conducting some interviews. While my perspective is obviously somewhat biased, it can present a view of what went on from the inside from someone who was inside.

The Center received a call from Italy on Saturday saying that the Italian press had reported our takeover and was impressed because it was the first reported incident on a campus, of a radical action that included constructive programs. This is stated not to pat ourselves on the back, but to stress a point. We've finally decided to take the establishment's main argument and use it against them. We are serious in our attempt to create change, to complain about wrongs but not to stop with complaining; to act on our convictions to present constructive programs to change the inequities we see around us.

For the past few years the 'Establishment' has been saying to radicals, "Your ideas are fine, but we will not listen to you because you present no constructive programs."

The problem with this stereo-type is that it had developed in regard to all the previous R.O.T.C. building takeovers (like the one at UMass two years ago). These takeovers basically revolved around the anti-war demonstrations of a few years ago. The problem is that these takeovers achieved nothing because the people involved were just reacting against (what they saw as) an evil without any constructive program as an alternative.

Many of the earlier radicals used the old cliche, that the whole order of things must be changed and the only way the Establishment allows us to do this is by working through the "system". Damn it, the system is there and we have to cope with it! The Center for Social Change is saying, 'sure we'll use the system, but we don't trust it, we will be continually on the alert for it's attempts to co-opt us, and hopefully, this heightened awareness will enable the Center to side-step the attempts to co-opt it. This awareness is manifesting itself through out actions. We are attempting to work through all possible channels to cope with the things we see as wrong around us.

We can take charge of our own destiny and solve some of these problems instead of listening to the same old, tired excuses and rationalizations that those in power hand us.

The people now working in the Center hope that the University community will not view us as a closed, elitest group of people. Because the Center will address itself to the University and the surrounding community, we are working on programs that will apply themselves to the needs of this community.

We are not simply a group of people with a building who will now and again surface at demonstrations. The Center wishes to involve as many people as possible who would view the Center for Social Change on the basis of its actions and an understanding that this is not the same old radical intellectualism that people have fallen into in recent years. I am asking people to pause and reflect a moment.

"...understand that it is a joint effort of a wide variety of people. Judge us by our actions not by the stereotype..."

Don't stereotype the Center for Social Change as just another ineffective example of radical movements, understand that it is a joint effort of a wide variety of people. Judge us by our actions, not by the stereotype.

People will be working in the Center for Social Change during the summer, setting up specific and realistic goals, structures and programs for the summer and next year. The Center for Social change can be a new beginning, a chance for social alternatives to develop and succeed where they have failed before.

IV The Future

Having been promised space for the summer, the new Center for Social Change has been developing programs and events for the summer and the school year. We intend to continue to develop relationships with interested community groups and labor people, and continue developing our educational and social action programs to meet our community's most urgent needs.

Workshops on the hiring, pay, and tenure practices of the university, decision-making in the university, migrant workers in the valley, university and academic department structure, U.S. corporate involvement in colonial and neo-colonial liberation struggles, the function of the university in our society, Vietnam, the development of a radical studies program, the function of art in capitalist societies, war tax resistance, the social character of literature, and labor relations illustrate the variety of programs underway. We hope to further broaden this list before the summer. We intend a frontal attack on the ivory towers of academic solipsism and formalism.

Films on civil rights, anti-war, and labor movements, newsreels on the corporate structure, Vietnam, and major events, will be shown throughout the summer. We hope to be able to hold musical and theatre events and to present the works of Afro-American and Radical artists.

How? Well it works something like this: we have established facilities to gather, file, and distribute information and analysis developed by the center, facilities to coordinate, post, and develope workshop information and programs. These will be located in the center's building which has been open 24 hours a day. The workshops will be held; in the community, dorms, or the center building, wherever it is most accessable to the people working in them. In the absence of an authoritarian structure the information developed will be common property and the need for a leader to hold the scheduled workshops will become negligable--this would allow people whose time is limited to participate fully in the workshops, and the work to continue even if the initial participants cannot!! The participants will have to form an understanding of each others needs and deal with the conflicts that arise as a part of the workshop process. Constructive criticism and self-criticism will shape the center and its participants.

Who? We have been accused already of being an elitist grouping! Is this so?? All people working through the Information, Communication, and Workshops Committees, people working in and with workshops and action groups, members of the women's caucus, coalition against oppression, VVAW, faculty; students and university employees, and people from the community; Hopefully we will be able to ally ourselves with the Third World Alliance as the center begins to concretize into its action groups. All people who have worked to shape the center participate equally in its meetings. As the need for delegates, negotiators, or evaluation of direction and progress develops,-representatives from the mass meetings will be elected to represent the participating groupings. This label, Elitist seems to be used only by those people who have rejected participation and find need of a defensive posture to secure their own ego.

We are a group of people who want to understand the walls that divide ourselves and our society, by participating with each other in the process of taking down those walls, brick by brick.

QUOTE OF THE WEEK—

When questioned in the most recent Rolling Stone commercial exploitation of his name, David Cassiday said:

"Listen, if they're going to buy lunch boxes, they might as well buy David Cassidy lunch boxes."

Southwest will be presenting its first festival/happening on the Mall on May 13, 1972. It will be an attempt to transform the concrete atmosphere into a festive atmosphere through the use of geodesic structures, plastic inflatables, light shows in the tunnel, poetry readings, square dancing, and any kind of music people care to bring.

Also a troup show known as the First Transcendental Exposition will be here to put on what is definitely a professionally entertaining program. Their music is a blend of ancient Indian music and contemporary jazz, folk and rock. Some of their members have played with the Grateful Dead and George Harrison has produced their Radha Krisna Album on his Apple label.

These people travel in 5 buses and have been known to provide feasts which have fed ten thousand people in one day. They come from a self-sufficient communal village called New Vrndavana which is located in the hills of West Virginia. The village is based on the conception Emerson called "plain living and high thinking."

Anyone who wants to help on this event or wants to set up tables to sell candles, leather things, etc. contact either Dave Elliott or the Bhakty Yoga Club, or Funnyfarm Dream Factory 6-8994.

The following came our way from Time:

Those wonderful folks who gave you stereo are at it again. Now they want to put four speakers and new amplifying equipment in your living room and introduce a new term into the vocabulary of the sound buff- quadraphonics, or four-channel sound.

Quadraphonics have been available on tape since 1969. But for home hi-fi sets, the mass consumer market has continued to prefer stereo disks to tape by sales ratios of more than 5 to 1. Mindful of that fact, Columbia last November came out with the first four-channel record, calling it SQ (for Stereo-Quadraphonic). The new SQs cost a dollar more than regular stero LP records. SQ is also designed to be played on conventional stereo rigs, but when that is done, SQ shows a slight but perceptible loss in sharpness of sound. Columbia has not announced any plans to replace the company's regular stero line with SQ. Even when heard under optimum conditions-at Columbia's laboratories in Stamford, Conn. - SQ is not so much a true four-channel sound as an electronic compromise. For some listerners, at least, the result is an uneasy feeling of aural vagueness.

By contrast, Columbia's record rival RCA made an early decision to hold out for a disk that was completely "discrete"-the industry's word for precise separation of all four channels. Like Columbia, RCA aimed for a compatible new disk that would be playable on existing stereo equipment without loss of fidelity. Last week RCA was busy spreading the word to the industry and press alike that it had perfected just such a disk. The company will begin issuing the new LPs in May, at the same price ($5.98) as stereo, and soon hopes to release all new records in the compatible four-channel format.

How does RCA get four electronic signals from two walls in a groove only 2 1/2 thousandths of an inch wide? Essentially by electronically scrambling the sounds picked up from four separate microphones, imprinting them precisely into four signals that are fed into four speakers. Heard at RCA's Manhattan studios, the new disk plays only 20 minutes (the company hopes to have it up to the standard 30 before long), but its output is vibrant, clear, well-defined, surprisingly flexible.

More than a dozen hardware companies (notably Sherwood, Kenwood and Sony) have already signed on to manufacture equipment for the Columbia SQ system. Panasonic has chosen RCA. Everyone else is taking a long, hard look. Or listen. As for the poor, beleaguered consumer, he may think twice before inviting two more after-dinner speakers into his home.

Members of The First Transcendental Exposition.

Dead Freaks Unite: Grateful Dead, currently touring England, have announced that their next studio effort is is almost completed, with a June release date. The record, as yet untitled, will be their first studio release in a year and a half, when American Beauty came out.

Other artists who are releasing new records in June include Alice Cooper, Black Sabbath, T. Rex, Jesse Winchester, Curved Air, Jimmy Webb, and John Cale. Jethro Tull's latest, Thick as a Brick, is set for a May 10 release date, although it has been available in England for well over a month. James Taylor revealed that his new album will be out on Sept. 25, for those of you that like to plan ahead.

George McGovern held a benefit concert for his Presidential campaign in Los Angeles. Performers included James Taylor and Carole King, who did a fantastic duet of "You've Got a Friend" that brought the house down. People paid $100 a ticket to see the likes of Warren Beatty, Jack Nicholson, Julie Christie, Gene Hackman, and Jon Voight act as ushers. Included in the audience were Gregory Peck, Carly Simon and Joni Mitchell. The place was sold out in eighteen hours, netting Big George a cool $320,000.

A WEEKLY MAGAZINE

What's New At The School Of Ed?

By DON GLICKSTEIN

(Editor's Note: Don Glickstein is a junior in the School of Education's Center for Urban Education. He has been a member of the School Council and has covered the School for the Collegian. He has cautioned us that he is sure there are many inaccuracies in the following personalized account, because "no one can be impartial about the School of Ed". We invite corrections.)

The bathroom graffiti in the School of Education's first floor men's room has always been a passion of mine. Not that History or English writers aren't as intelligent as Education writers. It's just that Education has always been less anal in its utterances and infinitely more creative and flexible. Imagine my ecstasy when I entered my favorite stall last Friday and saw etched in bold letters: "Might makes Dwight".

What's been happening at the Ed School and how it got to where it is now is thoroughly complex and muddled. The spark burst two weeks ago, but the coals had smoldered for four years.

It all began in 1968 when the then Provost, Oswald Tippo, hired Dr. Dwight Allen from Stanford University as Dean of what can only be seen now as a typically boring school of education. Dwight (everyone--faculty, grad students, and undergrads-in the School usually call each other by their first name in an effort to lessen title castes) asked Tippo to give him a carte blanche. He got it, and Tippo remained a staunch, although sometimes critical supporter of Dwight.

Dwight brought about 100 doctoral students and faculty with him to UMass to join the existing 50. He then proceeded to load them on a plane, and fly them to Colorado for the first of what would be many School retreats. There, the School of Ed community, as it was now called, scrapped all existing programs and requirements in the School and began a year of planning.

Many of the structures the Community proceeded to set up found their roots in the fertile mind of Dwight or in the imagination of his Associate Dean Earl Seidman. Others were negotiated, sometimes heatedly.

The School Council became the chief policy-making body of the School. Its main responsibilities lay in academic matters (except those in the jurisdiction of the Graduate Assembly), program development, naming of priorities, and resource allocation. What began to irk many of the faculty across campus was the composition of the Council: about half faculty and half student, each having an equal vote. (Currently, the 31-man Council has three undergraduates and also one representative of the professional staff.)

The Dean's power was greatly reduced. Although he still approved the annual budget, Dwight could now not expend program funds without the approval of the program director. Any budget requests and proposals over $200,000 had to be approved by the School Council, Dwight did maintain a discretionary fund, which could not exceed 10% of the School's general support funds. Finally, Dwight could not personally choose more than 20% of the new faculty every year, nor more than 15% of the grad students.
